MILLET et al. v. TAYLOR et al.
(Civ. 1259.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 4, 1914.)

1. EVIDENCE ⚡461 — EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE AFFECTING WRITINGS—LEASE—AMBIGUITY AS TO LESSORS' SHARE OF PROCEEDS.

Where the agreement in a lease was that the lessees should give the lessors "one equal half part of all the proceeds and crops produced on said farm," such language was so indefinite as to whether gross or net proceeds were meant that extrinsic parol evidence was admissible to explain the latent ambiguity.

2. EVIDENCE ⚡448 — EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE AFFECTING WRITINGS—LATENT AMBIGUITY.

Where the language in a written contract is ambiguous and fairly susceptible of either of two constructions contended for, the admission of extrinsic parol evidence to explain the ambiguity is proper.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by Liberty Millet and another against John Alfred Taylor and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

E. S. Bell, of Napa, for appellants. Clarence N. Riggins, of Napa, for respondents.

HART, J. This is an action in unlawful detainer. The complaint alleges that the defendants were in the possession and occupation of a certain tract of land belonging to the plaintiffs, situated in Napa county, under a lease mutually executed by the parties to this action on the 28th day of February, 1910; that said lease provided that the same should remain in force for the term of five years from said 28th day of February, 1910, with an option exercisable by the lessees upon the termination thereof to renew the same for a further period of five years; that, according to the terms of said lease, "the said lessees agreed to render to the said lessors, on the 1st day of January, 1913, a just and true accounting of all of the affairs pertaining to the conduct of the said farm, and to deliver to the said plaintiffs, or their order, one equal half part of all the proceeds and crops produced on said farm and premises; that said defendants, on said 1st day of January, 1913, failed and refused to render such accounting or deliver to the plaintiffs said one equal half part of all the said proceeds," and "do now fail, refuse, and neglect to furnish said plaintiffs with a just and true accounting of all the affairs pertaining to the conduct of said farm, and to deliver to said plaintiffs, or their order, one equal half part of all the proceeds and crops produced on said farm and premises"; that, on the 7th day of March, 1913, the plaintiffs demanded in writing from the said defendants such an accounting and the delivery to them (the plaintiffs) of an equal one-half part of the proceeds of and crops produced upon said farm from the 1st day of June, 1912, to the 1st day of January, 1913, within three days after the service of said notice upon them (the defendants), or that they surrender the said premises to the said plaintiffs; that "said defendants have neglected and refused for the space of or more than three days after said demand had been served on them, and do still continue to refuse, to render to the said plaintiffs" such accounting or to deliver to them their just proportion of the proceeds and crops produced on said farm during the period mentioned. The complaint contains the further allegation, usual in such cases, of the wrongful withholding by the defendants of the possession of the demised premises after default in the performance of the covenants of the lease and without the permission of the lessors.

The defendants answered the complaint and filed a cross-complaint, in which a reformation of the lease so that it will conform to the intention of the parties is prayed for.

The defendants were given judgment upon the issues made by the complaint and the answer thereto, and this appeal, supported by a bill of exceptions, is prosecuted by the plaintiffs from said judgment and the order denying their motion for a new trial.

The trial court permitted the defendants to explain, by parol testimony, certain language of the written lease, and the ruling so made presents the only question submitted for decision by this appeal.

Those parts of the lease in question which are pertinent to the investigation here read as follows:

"In consideration whereof the said parties of the second part hereby covenant and agree that they will properly till and cultivate the premises above mentioned during the term aforesaid in a farmerlike manner, and that they will not commit any waste or damage or suffer any to be done; that they will at their own cost and expense keep the fences and buildings on said premises in good repair, reasonable wear thereof and damages by the elements excepted; that they will semiannually, on the 1st day of January and June of each year during the term of this lease and at the expiration thereof, render to said first parties a just and true accounting of all of the affairs pertaining to the conduct of the said farm, and that they will deliver to said parties of the first part, or to their order, one equal half part of all the proceeds and crops produced on said farm and premises aforesaid."

At the trial the plaintiffs contended, as they contend here, that, under the terms of the lease, and, according to the true intent of the parties as expressed therein, they were entitled to receive from the defendants, on the 1st day of January and of June of each year during the term of the lease, one equal half part of all the gross proceeds and crops "produced on said farm and premises." That this plainly appears from the lease itself is the contention, and hence, it is argued, the admission of parol or extrinsic evidence disclosing a different agreement would have the effect of varying the terms of the writing.

On the other hand, the defendants insisted in the court below, as they urge here, that the understanding had by both parties of the meaning of the lease, at the time of its execution, and which understanding does not clearly appear from the language of the instrument, was that the defendants were to return to the plaintiffs, at the times specified in the lease, one equal half part of all the net proceeds and crops produced on the leased premises. In other words, the defendants claim that the understanding between all the parties was that the lessees should deliver to the lessors one-half of such proceeds as were realized from the farm as remained after the expense of feeding the stock and the amount of certain products used by the lessees for family or domestic purposes were deducted. Thus it was made to appear to the trial court that the instrument was in that respect characterized by a latent ambiguity, and upon that theory it allowed oral evidence explanatory of the intention of the parties with regard to that covenant of the lease.

[1, 2] There are "gross proceeds" and "net proceeds," and who can say to which of these the parties to the lease in this case intended to refer when they used the language "one equal half part of all the proceeds and crops produced on said farm"? The mere word "proceeds," unaccompanied by some qualifying word or language imparting to it definite scope or signification, cannot itself be said to refer either to gross or to net proceeds, and there is nothing in the language of the other provisions of the lease in the present case which discloses the sense in which the parties intended to use the word or which sheds any light upon the subject. A "one equal half part of all the proceeds and crops" is, indeed, a vague and indefinite phrase, and we think that the ruling of the trial court, in permitting evidence extrinsic to the instrument itself for the purpose of ascertaining what the parties intended to express by the use of that language, was not only perfectly proper, but absolutely necessary. It is true, and, indeed, elementary, that "it is no part of the office of construction to add to the contract or take from it, but it is to ascertain what the parties intended by what they have said. If there be no ambiguity in the contract, it must speak for itself." Peterson v. Chaix, 5 Cal. App. 525, 533, 90 Pac. 948. See, also, section 1858, Code Civ. Proc. But where, as is certainly true here, "the language employed be fairly susceptible of either one of the two interpretations contended for, without doing violence to its usual and ordinary import, or some established rule of construction, then an ambiguity arises, which extrinsic evidence may be resorted to for the purpose of explaining. This is not allowing parol evidence for the purpose of varying or altering the contract, or of putting a different sense and construction upon its language from that which it would naturally bear, but for the purpose of showing the circumstances under which the language was used, and applying it according to the intentions of the parties." Balfour v. Fresno C. & I. Co., 109 Cal. 225, 41 Pac. 876; Germain Fruit Co. v. Armsby Co., 153 Cal. 585, 96 Pac. 319. See, also, section 1861, Code Civ. Proc.

As before suggested, in the case at bar it was not possible for the court to determine precisely what the parties meant by the use of the language under consideration, either from the language itself or from other provisions of the lease, and, as before declared, it was obviously necessary to a correct determination of that issue to resort to parol or extrinsic evidence, not, as the cases above cited declare, to vary the terms of the writing or insert therein or add thereto anything not embraced within the intentions of the parties, but to explain what they really intended to express by the use of language susceptible of either one of two interpretations, each of which would in no manner or degree do "violence to the usual and ordinary import" of said language. See Higgins v. Cal. Petroleum Co., 120 Cal. 629, 52 Pac. 1080.

The evidence received under the ruling complained of sufficiently shows that by the use of the language referred to it was intended to express in the lease the actual agreement between the parties; viz., that the lessees were, at the times specifically designated in the writing, to render and deliver to the lessors, in writing, "a just and true accounting of all the affairs pertaining to the conduct of the said farm," and to deliver to the lessors an equal one-half share of the net proceeds and crops produced on the leased premises. The evidence so admitted further shows that, under the agreement, the lessors were authorized and entitled to feed the stock on the farm from the crops of hay, etc., raised thereon, and that the lessees themselves were likewise authorized to use, for their own purposes, such of the produce of the farm—eggs, butter, milk, etc.—as they might reasonably require for themselves or for their family use. It also appeared from the evidence that the lessees rendered a written statement of the business affairs of the farm for the term referred to in the complaint, and delivered to the lessors an equal one-half part of all the net proceeds and crops produced on said premises for the term mentioned in the complaint. The evidence thus referred to sufficiently supports the findings.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. ROY. (Cr. 365.)

CRIMINAL LAW — 1130 — APPEAL — DEFAULT.

Where a transcript was filed by accused August 12, 1914, and the case was set for hearing on October 27th following, of which due notice was given, but appellant's attorneys of record filed no memorandum of points and authorities and did not appear when the case was called for argument, and at the request of another attorney 20 days' additional time was allowed him to file a brief, but none was filed, it would be presumed that no ground for reversal existed and the conviction would be affirmed as authorized by Pen. Code, § 1253.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2956, 2965-2970, 3205; Dec. Dig. — 1130.]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

Babu B. Roy was convicted of an offense, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Arthur L. Dorn and Herbert N. Ellis, both of San Diego, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CONREY, P. J. The circumstances with respect to the prosecution of this appeal are similar to those which appeared in People v. Measor, 20 Cal. App. 339, 128 Pac. 1016. The transcript herein was filed in this court on August 12, 1914, and the case duly set down for hearing on the calendar of October 27, 1914; of which hearing due notice was given. The attorneys of record purporting to appear for defendant neglected and failed to file any memorandum of points and authorities and did not appear when the cause was called for argument. At the request of another attorney residing in the county from which this case is appealed, and who offered to appear as counsel for the appellant, we gave him 20 days' time to file a brief on behalf of defendant; but no brief has been filed. Under these circumstances, the court will assume that no ground for reversal exists, and that, as permitted by section 1253 of the Penal Code, the judgment should be affirmed. A general inspection and examination of the transcript has satisfied us that in this case no actual injustice is likely to follow from the enforcement of the rule.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

1. CRIMINAL LAW — 1023, 1134 — APPEAL — DECISIONS REVIEWABLE — ORDER DENYING MOTION IN ARREST.

An order denying motion in arrest of judgment is subject to review on appeal from the judgment, but no separate appeal lies from such order.

3. RAPE — 12 — ELEMENTS OF CRIME — "CONSENT."

Legal "consent," which will be held sufficient in a prosecution for rape, assumes a capacity in the person consenting to understand and appreciate the nature of the act committed, its immoral character, and the probable or natural consequences which may attend it.

4. RAPE — 57 — CONSENT OF PROSECUTRIX — EVIDENCE — QUESTION FOR JURY.

In a prosecution for rape, evidence as to whether prosecutrix was so weak mentally as to be incapable of consent held sufficient for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. § 87; Dec. Dig. — 57.]

5. CRIMINAL LAW — 788 — INSTRUCTIONS — FAILURE TO CALL WITNESS.

Where, in a prosecution for rape on a weak-minded girl, a request by defendant that the court charge the jury not to draw inferences against him from his failure to call her as a witness, because the information charged that she was too weak-minded to be capable of consent is properly refused; her competency to testify being subject to determination by objection of counsel to her and examination of her by the court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; M. L. Short, Judge.

F. A. Peery was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

E. T. Cosper, of Hanford, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

JAMES, J. [1] Appellant was convicted of the crime of rape and sentenced to serve a term of imprisonment in the penitentiary.

Appeals were taken from the judgment and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. Counsel for appellant states that there is an appeal also from an order denying a motion made in arrest of judgment. No separate appeal lies from such an order, although that ruling is subject to review on the appeal taken from the judgment. People v. Rogers, 163 Cal. 476, 126 Pac. 143.

[2-4] The female participant in the alleged crime was a girl of about 19 years of age, the daughter, by a former marriage, of appellant's wife. It was alleged that the girl was of unsound mind and incapable of consenting to the illicit act. At a trial previously had appellant admitted the fact as to the intercourse had with the girl, and he at the time of his arrest made the same admission, in effect, to the arresting officer. These statements were proved before the jury. The grandmother of the girl testified that she had known the latter since her birth and had seen her constantly during a great many of the years following that event, and as often as once a week during the five years immediately preceding the trial. She testified that the girl had always been weak mentally; that she could not be taught to read or spell or do sums in arithmetic, although she was sent to school and every effort made to teach her; that she could not count money and did not know the difference in value between a nickel and a 25-cent piece. The physician who attended the girl upon the occasion of the birth of her child testified that she answered his questions vaguely and contradicted herself several times. He said:

"In the dealings I have had with this girl she has appeared to me to be not violently insane or anything of that sort, but she does appear to me to be equipped with a grade of mentality that is insufficient to protect her from the common vicissitudes of life as they are likely to come to us, and on that ground I base my opinion that she is of unsound mind. * * * I don't consider she is in danger of becoming violent or a menace to herself or to her children or a menace to the people around her. She is suffering from a milder grade of not being sound. I think she isn't of the ordinary mentality."

The girl sat in the courtroom and was pointed out and identified by a witness for the benefit of the jury. There was testimony introduced on behalf of appellant in defense of the charge which contradicted that of the prosecution touching the matter of the alleged unsoundness of mind of the girl. With the question as to whether this contradictory testimony was of preponderating weight, this court has nothing to do. The jury in the case had the right, and it was their duty, to finally settle any question arising out of a conflict of the evidence. It is claimed, however, that a question of law is presented on the evidence in the record, for the reason that the proof offered by the prosecution was not sufficient to warrant a finding, as the verdict implies, that the girl was incapable of consenting to an act of sexual intercourse.

Legal consent which will be held sufficient assumes a capacity in the person consenting to understand and appreciate the nature of the act committed, its immoral character, and the probable or natural consequences which may attend it. Impaired mentality may exist, and yet the individual may be able to exercise reasonable judgment with respect to the particular matter presented to his or her mind. People v. Griffin, 117 Cal. 583, 49 Pac. 711, 59 Am. St. Rep. 216.

It will readily appear, then, that the question, as it is involved in the special case presented, becomes peculiarly a matter for the jury to pass upon. We may make answer to the single query: Was there enough of facts, assuming the truth of the testimony, presented by the prosecution from which the jury could have reasonably concluded that the girl was incapable of consenting to the act committed with her by appellant? It must be said that there was some evidence to justify this conclusion. The grandmother gave a fair history of the girl, dating from infancy. She told of the difficulty with which the child had been taught even simple things. The physician gave some facts which were relevant when he referred to the vague answers given him by the girl and the inconsistent statements made by her, and as to his opinion derived from an observation of her while she was under his care. Besides this, there was the evidence afforded by the appearance of the girl, which is not illustrated in the record. We must assume, if need be, that her appearance was such as to afford some evidence material to the issue. When these facts are considered altogether, it cannot be said that the conclusion of the jury in favor of the incapacity of the girl is without support in the evidence.

[5] The girl in question was not called as a witness either by the prosecution or the defendant. In the course of the trial, a juror asked that the girl be examined, and the court responded that that was a matter for the attorneys to decide, and counsel for appellant said:

"The law says that, where they charge incompetency to commit a wrong, she can't testify for the reason that she is incompetent; therefore she isn't a competent witness."

Then, after some further colloquy between the district attorney, court, and counsel for appellant, the latter said:

"We ask the court to instruct the jury that it isn't to be taken as evidence in the case that the defendant doesn't call the witness; that's the law."

No error was committed by the court in refusing to then instruct the jury as desired by appellant. Either party was at liberty to call the girl to the witness chair and have her sworn, and the mere fact that it was alleged in the information that she was incompetent would not debar her from testifying. Whatever the result of counsel's effort may have been in that direction on the former trial, it would not afford any justification for neglecting to take any action which he deemed essential for the protection of his client at the trial then being had before a different jury. The witness would have been competent to testify unless, upon objection and after examination before the court, it had been determined that she was incompetent. It will be noted that counsel for appellant himself insisted that the witness could not testify because the district attorney had charged that she was incompetent. In this statement he was mistaken as to the law.

Alleged misconduct of the district attorney in his argument to the jury is assigned as ground for the claim of prejudicial error. It does not appear in the record as to what the objectionable remarks of the district attorney were. There are some specifications of error pointing to the alleged misconduct, but none of the statements claimed to have been made by the prosecuting officer are disclosed therein.

In the brief it is set forth that the court erred in the making of several rulings as to the admission of testimony, but, beyond a statement in the form of a specification of error simply, no argument appears in support of the objections made. However, from an examination of the transcript, it does not appear that the rulings complained of were improperly made. They deserve no further consideration.

[6] Refusal to give several instructions offered on behalf of the defendant is next complained of as amounting to an error on the part of the trial court which resulted to the prejudice of appellant. The instructions as given were very full and complete in their statement of the law as applicable to the particular case being considered. Some of the instructions which were refused might properly have been given, but their effect could not have been more than to add emphasis to the propositions which were stated with sufficient clearness in the body of the court's instructions.

We find no error in the record justifying an order of reversal in this case. The appellant appears to have been fairly convicted and to be deserving of the punishment meted out to him.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

BRANDON et al. v. UMPQUA LUMBER & TIMBER CO. (Civ. 1303.)

1. EASEMENTS ⚡36—ACQUISITION—ADVERSE POSSESSION.

Evidence held to warrant a finding that defendant's user of an alleged easement was permissive, and never became adverse.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. §§ 77, 78, 88-93; Dec. Dig. ⚡36.]

2. EASEMENTS ⚡8—ACQUISITION—LICENSE—ADVERSE POSSESSION—OUSTER.

Where use of a right of way over plaintiffs' land originated in a license or express permission, the license would be presumed to continue, not only as against the original user, but as against his successors in interest, and the use would not be considered adverse until the license was repudiated and such repudiation brought to the knowledge of the owner of the servient tenement; the burden of proving that the use has become adverse being on the claimant of the easement.

3. EASEMENTS ⚡8—RIGHT TO USE—"ADVERSE POSSESSION."

That the enjoyment of an easement in another's land may be conclusive of the right claimed, it must have been adverse in the legal sense of the term; to wit, the right must have been asserted under a claim of title, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the owner of the land, and must have been uninterrupted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. §§ 23, 24, 27-33; Dec. Dig. ⚡8.]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Adverse Possession.]

4. EASEMENTS ⚡8—USER—LICENSE—ADVERSE POSSESSION.

Whether user of an easement is adverse or with the implied license of the owner of the servient estate is a question of fact to be determined in the light of the surrounding circumstances.

5. EASEMENTS ⚡8—ACQUISITION—ADVERSE POSSESSION—OUSTER.

An adverse claimant of an easement can sustain the claim only by proof of assertion of the right in such a manner that the owner of the servient estate shall have knowledge thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by David Brandon and another against the Umpqua Lumber & Timber Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 166 Cal. 322, 136 Pac. 62.

Mannon & Mannon, of Ukiah, for appellant. Preston & Preston, of Ukiah, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought to quiet title to a certain tract of land in Mendocino county. In the answer defendant sufficiently set forth a claim of an easement by adverse user for a right of way over the land for a railroad for logging purposes in connection with a lumber business. The judgment was for plaintiff as prayed for, based upon sufficient findings which we deem unnecessary to quote.

As stated by respondent, the judgment is predicated upon three grounds: (1) That the user was permissive and never adverse; (2) that the user, conceding it to be adverse, was not for the statutory period to ripen into an easement; (3) the evidence shows an abandonment of the easement, assuming that it ever existed.

[1] As we are satisfied the court was warranted in finding that the user was never adverse, the other grounds need not be considered at all.

It is not disputed that the road was constructed and its use initiated by one Anson Hilton under a written agreement with plaintiffs' predecessor in ownership, dated January 15, 1903, and providing, among other things, that:

"The party of the first part hereby grants to the party of the second part the exclusive right to occupy and use a strip of land 50 feet in width along the southerly bank of said Wages creek for the purposes of a rail or wagon road or both for such time as he shall continue in the lumber business on said Wages creek, not to exceed 25 years. * * * It is agreed and understood that upon the termination of the lumber business of the second party on the said Wages creek the strip of land occupied by the said party, as aforesaid, shall at once revert to the first party and that this agreement shall bind the heirs, executors, administrators, assigns, and tenants of the parties hereto."

[2] The privilege having thus originated in license or express permission, it is presumed to have so continued until the license was repudiated and the repudiation brought to the knowledge of the licensor. In 22 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 1198, the rule is stated as follows:

"The mere fact that the use of an easement was permissive in its inception does not preclude the acquirement of title by prescription if it has subsequently become adverse, and has so continued for the requisite period, but a use which begins under a license will not be considered adverse until the license is repudiated and such repudiation is brought to the knowledge of the owner of the servient tenement; and the burden of proving that the use has become adverse is upon the party claiming the easement."

The rule is clearly not affected by the fact that the privilege is claimed by the successors in interest of said Hilton. Continuing the use begun by him, the presumption would be, in the absence of anything to the contrary, that it was based upon the same right and under the same limitations as characterized his exercise of the privilege. There is not a particle of evidence that this license was ever repudiated or questioned in any manner. Hence the said presumption would justify the court's finding.

[3] Moreover, the evidence as to the use of the way is at least as consistent with the conclusion that it was by permission as under a claim of right.

"In order that the enjoyment of an easement in another's land may be conclusive of the right claimed, it must have been adverse in the legal sense of the term; that is, the right must have been asserted under a claim of title, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the owner of the land, and uninterrupted. The burden of proving this is on the party claiming the easement. If he leaves it doubtful whether the enjoyment was adverse, known to the owner, and uninterrupted, it is not conclusive in his favor." American Co. v. Bradford, 27 Cal. 368.

[4] The question whether or not the user is adverse or with the implied license of the owner of the servient estate is, manifestly, one of fact to be determined in the light of all the surrounding circumstances. Evans Ditch Co. v. Lakeside Ditch Co., 13 Cal. App. 119, 108 Pac. 1027.

[5] It is not sufficient that the claim of right exists only in the mind of the person claiming it. It must in some way be asserted in such a manner that the owner may know the claim. Clarke v. Clarke, 133 Cal. 667, 66 Pac. 10. And while it sometimes occurs that evidence of the use itself and of the manner in which it is exercised carries with it a conviction that said use was under a claim of right, and therefore will justify a finding to that effect, each case depends upon its own particular facts, and, unless those facts compel the conclusion that the use is adverse, the court should find in favor of the owner of the record title.

The evidence here in favor of defendant is very meager, and consists in the bare fact of using the road for the purpose for which it was constructed. It does not appear that any claim was ever made that appellant had the right so to use it, or that it asserted any such claim. It does not even appear that the owners of the land ever knew that it was being so used by defendant, or were put upon inquiry to ascertain whether or in what manner it was being used. Without detailing further, it may be said that there is an entire absence of those significant circumstances of hostile assertion usually found where adverse possession is claimed, and, while it is not necessary to hold that a finding to the contrary would be totally unsupported, it is at least plain that the court's conclusion from the evidence is sound and rational.

We think there is no merit in the appeal, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by Ellen M. Fernandez, formerly Ellen M. Brodies, against James Alva Watt and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Watt appealed to the Supreme Court, whence the case is transferred to the Court of Appeal. Affirmed.

John F. Clute and James Alva Watt, both of San Francisco, and Wyckoff & Gardner, of Watsonville, for appellant. T. C. Judkins and S. W. Molkenbuhr, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action comes to this court upon an order of transfer from the Supreme Court. The plaintiff's complaint alleges substantially that she was the owner of 36 shares of the capital stock of the Watsonville Realty Company (a corporation), which, upon March 24, 1905, and ever since, were held in trust for her by the defendant James Alva Watt, an attorney at law. Watt, at the time of the commencement of the action, so the complaint alleged, claimed the right to hold the stock in controversy as security for the payment of an indebtedness due him for professional services alleged to have been rendered to the plaintiff. The plaintiff prayed for an accounting of the dividends paid on the stock in controversy, and alleged to have been retained by the defendant Watt, and for a judgment directing the delivery of the stock to her by the defendant "upon the payment to him of such sum of money as may be determined by the court * * * to be due and payable" to him. The defendant Watt, in his answer and cross-complaint, admitted his possession of the stock, and admitted the plaintiff's title thereto, but alleged a prior agreement with the plaintiff whereby he was employed as her attorney, under the terms of which he had rendered her professional services of the reasonable value of $1,621.60, in several transactions which culminated in prolonged litigation, and then pleaded the pledge of the stock to him by the plaintiff as security for the payment of the sums alleged to be due him for professional services, together with advancements and disbursements made by him during the litigation in which the plaintiff became involved, in the sum of $292.10. The defendant prayed for a judgment for the sums claimed to be due him, and that, after crediting the amount of dividends on the stock admitted to have been received and retained by him, a decree be made foreclosing his lien upon the stock and directing a sale thereof to satisfy his claim.

The trial court found that the defendant received and held the stock in trust for the plaintiff; that he had collected the sum of $1,404 as dividends thereon; that he had rendered professional services to the plaintiff which were reasonably worth only the sum of $400; and that he in the rendition of such services had expended in the plain-tiff's behalf only the sum of $100. Thereupon judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff for the recovery of the stock and the sum of $904, which sum represented the difference between the dividends due to the plaintiff and collected and retained by the defendant on the stock and the sum found to be due him for professional services and advances made. Judgment was also rendered in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant Watsonville Realty Company in the sum of $144 for a dividend declared to be due and payable on the stock which the court found had not been paid to plaintiff by the corporation defendant nor collected by the defendant Watt. The judgment against the corporation defendant is not assailed; but it is insisted upon behalf of the defendant Watt that the judgment as to him should be reversed, because of errors of law occurring during the trial, and the alleged insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings of the trial court.

[1-3] Incidentally, it is insisted that certain findings are conflicting and contradictory, and that therefore the judgment should be reversed. With reference to the last point, it may be conceded that the findings referred to, which relate to the plaintiff's ownership of the stock, are in a measure conflicting, but, inasmuch as the plaintiff's ownership of the stock was an admitted fact in the case, it is obvious that the claimed conflicting findings were wholly unnecessary, and therefore immaterial to the issues involved in the case. It needs no citation of authority to support the proposition that findings upon admitted facts are not required, and that a judgment will not be disturbed because of a real or apparent conflict in such findings. The argument made in support of the contention that the material findings in favor of the plaintiff upon the subject of the value of the services rendered by the defendant are not supported by the evidence is devoted chiefly to a discussion of the credibility of the plaintiff as a witness in her own behalf, and the weight of the evidence generally adduced upon this phase of the case. The credibility of the witness and the weight of the entire evidence were matters to be determined by the lower court in the first instance upon the trial of the case, and finally upon the hearing and determination of a motion for a new trial. Our examination of the record convinces us that there is some evidence sufficient to sustain the findings complained of, and that the evidence as a whole is in substantial conflict in so far as it relates to the issue of the value of the defendant's services. This being so, the judgment cannot, under the well-settled and generally well-understood rule, be disturbed by this court upon the ground that the evidence is not sufficient to support the findings and judgment. If our examination of the record had convinced us that the findings complained of were not, as a matter of law, supported by sufficient or any evidence, we would deem it our duty to narrate in substance and discuss in detail the evidence relied upon by the plaintiff to support the findings and judgment; but, in view of our conclusion, after a full examination of the record, that there exists a substantial conflict in the evidence offered and received in response to the issue of the value of the defendant's services, no useful purpose would be subserved by narrating all of such evidence and then in detail demonstrating its conflict.

[4] In support of the assertion that there is some evidence to support the finding of the court upon the issue of the value of the defendant's services, it will suffice to say that the record shows that on June 8, 1907, the defendant Watt sent to the plaintiff, Mrs. Brodies, a statement of account showing a balance due to him for professional services and money expended in the sum of $344.30. Subsequently, in May of the following year, Attorney Brueggerhoff, of Austin, Tex., called upon the defendant Watt and exhibited a power of attorney from Mrs. Brodies, which authorized Brueggerhoff to receive the stock in controversy from the defendant Watt and negotiate a settlement of the latter's claim for professional services. Shortly thereafter Watt, recognizing the existence of the relation of attorney and client existing between Mrs. Brodies and Brueggerhoff, wrote to the latter, inclosing another statement of account, which showed a balance due to Watt in the sum of $331.50. In response to this statement Watt received a letter from Brueggerhoff requesting that the stock be forwarded to him, together with a draft upon Mrs. Brodies for the amount of Watt's bill. This letter from Brueggerhoff, written at the instance of and upon behalf of Mrs. Brodies, indicated clearly enough her desire to terminate the relation of attorney and client existing between her and Watt. The letter last referred to was dated June 22, 1908, and referred to Watt's letter of June, 1907. In September, 1908, another letter from Brueggerhoff was addressed to and received by Watt, asking that Watt draw upon Mrs. Brodies for the amount of his claim as rendered in his previous statement; and thereupon Watt, in reply, on September 17, 1908, mailed another statement to Brueggerhoff, showing a balance due of $409.60. These statements and correspondence were undoubtedly evidence of the condition of the account between Mrs. Brodies and Watt as understood by the latter in September, 1908. Subsequently, however, on April 1, 1909, Watt rendered another statement of account, showing a balance due of $759, to a Mr. Judkins, an attorney at law who had become associated with Mr. Brueggerhoff in the transaction, and who had called upon Watt at the instance of Mrs. Brodies. Shortly thereafter the plaintiff brought the action to compel a delivery of the stock; and when issue was joined Watt's claim had advanced to the sum of $1,913.70. We think it clearly appears from all of the statements rendered by Watt, considered in connection with other evidence, that at least 75 per cent. of his claim was based upon expenses incurred and services rendered after he had been repeatedly, fully, and finally informed that his services were no longer needed by the plaintiff, and after she had repeatedly offered to pay the amount of his claim which, at the time of his dismissal, did not exceed, as evidenced by his own statement, the sum of $409.60. That there was a very material conflict in the evidence with reference to the propriety of the charges made in the several accounts rendered by Mr. Watt for his per diem and expenses of trips to Watsonville for the claimed purpose of attending meetings of the corporation in which plaintiff was a stockholder is evidenced by the records of the corporation, which show that upon several of the occasions charged for no meeting of the corporation was held, or, if held, the defendant was not present.

[5-7] One of the alleged errors of law relates to the ruling of the trial court admitting, over the objection of the defendant Watt, certain testimony of Mr. Judkins, one of the counsel for plaintiff, which, it is claimed, was offered and improperly received for the purpose of bolstering up the testimony of the witness Brueggerhoff, whose testimony, in deposition form, upon a certain phase of the case, it is claimed, was in conflict with the testimony of the defendant Watt. In this behalf it is the contention of the defendant Watt that the testimony complained of tended to show the good reputation of the witness Brueggerhoff for truth, honesty, and integrity, and therefore, by adding to the credibility of the witness, whose character in the particulars stated had not been previously assailed, gave his testimony greater weight with the trial court than it would otherwise have had. It may be conceded that, as a general rule, evidence is not admissible to show the good character or reputation for truth and veracity of a witness whose character has not been attacked and whose testimony has not been impeached; but, in our opinion, this rule has no application to the situation presented in the record before us. The testimony complained of was merely to the effect that Mr. Judkins had at one time prior to the trial of the present action employed the witness Brueggerhoff as an attorney at law to look up and pass upon certain legal matters in the state of Texas, and that he (Brueggerhoff) had handled these matters with ordinary skill, and at all times conducted himself as a rational and well-balanced gentleman. This testimony was provoked by, and offered in rebuttal of, the testimony of the defendant Watt, who, when testifying in his own behalf, declared that in his dealings with Attorney Brueggerhoff concerning the transaction in suit, the latter manifested erratic symptoms, and seemed incapable of understanding ordinary transactions, and generally did not deport himself as if he were a person of character and responsibility. In this view of the testimony we see no substantial error in the ruling of the court. While the fact that Watt's opinion as to the legal ability of Brueggerhoff was admitted in evidence without objection would not, in the presence of an objection from the defendant, warrant the introduction of material testimony in reply upon behalf of the plaintiff, nevertheless it is apparent that the testimony complained of, although objectionable, was not intended to show, and did not, strictly speaking, have the effect of showing, the good reputation of Brueggerhoff for truth and veracity. The most that it did was to rebut the opinion of the defendant Watt to the effect that Brueggerhoff was not a capable and clearheaded lawyer. Brueggerhoff's legal ability and mentality, however, were never facts of any importance one way or the other in the case, and did not, so far as we can ascertain from the record, ultimately enter as an essential in the attempted adjustment of the defendant's claim. That this is so is evidenced by the fact that in all of Watt's subsequent dealings with Brueggerhoff, which were conducted by correspondence, the latter's professional ability was never doubted or disputed. Moreover, we are unable to discern any material conflict in the testimony of Watt and Brueggerhoff as to what occurred when they first met to discuss Mrs. Brodies' affairs; and therefore we cannot conceive how the testimony complained of, although immaterial and objectionable, could have weighed against the defendant in the mind of the trial court.

[8] We see no error in the ruling made over the objection of the defendant admitting the testimony of Brueggerhoff to the effect that he had exhibited a power of attorney from Mrs. Brodies at his first interview with Watt, even though the power of attorney was not offered in evidence. The error, if any, in this behalf was harmless, for the reason that the defendant Watt in a subsequent interview with Brueggerhoff, and in all of the correspondence referred to, recognized and treated with Brueggerhoff as the duly authorized attorney at law and in fact of Mrs. Brodies.

[9, 10] The two remaining assignments of error alleged to have been committed by the trial court have no merit. It is not apparent from our examination of the record that parol evidence was admitted to vary the contents of the written agreement of December 4, 1904; but, even if this were so, the result would be harmless in view of the fact that after some preliminary testimony the agreement itself was finally admitted in evidence.

While objection was interposed to the question put to the plaintiff, "Do you owe the defendant anything for services rendered in connection with the estate of James Brodies?" upon the ground that it called for the conclusion of the witness, nevertheless no claim of prejudicial error can be predicated upon the admission of the testimony elicited by the question, because the plaintiff later testified, and apparently without objection, that all of the professional services rendered to her by the defendant Watt had been paid for in full.

We are of the opinion that the evidence sustains the material findings of the lower court, and that no prejudicial error appears in the conduct of the trial.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

Fred T. King and another were convicted of adultery, and they appeal. Reversed.

Shreve, Reed, Sample & Shreve, of San Diego, for appellants. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CONREY, P. J. The defendants were convicted upon an information charging them with the crime of cohabitation and adultery, as defined by section 269b of the Penal Code. Each defendant appeals from the judgment and from the order of the court denying the motion of defendants and each of them for a new trial.

The case comes clearly within the ruling of this court as declared in People v. Breedling, 19 Cal. App. 359, 126 Pac. 179:

"As used in the statute, the words 'living in a state of cohabitation and adultery' mean the living or dwelling together as husband and wife and exercising the sexual rights and duties implied by such relation when legally created—in other words, a counterfeit of the marriage relation."

The evidence shows that defendant King was living apart from his wife and defendant Fernando was living apart from her husband. The defendants, during several weeks or months, were together a great deal, but they were not dwelling together in the same habitation, nor living in the manner of husband and wife together. It was shown that for a short period of time the defendants separately had rooms in the same lodging house. There was no door connecting these rooms, and each defendant rented his or her room separately and paid the rent separately and individually. Mrs. Fernando occupied her room in her own name. The evidence shows that King spent some of his evenings in Mrs. Fernando's room, and that usually the door was left open. On one evening, according to the testimony of a certain witness, this witness saw the defendants lying on her bed, and the circumstances were such as tended to show illicit intercourse. But when officers came to the house a little later the same night, expecting to find the defendants in the same room together, they were found in their separate rooms and beds.

The decisions uniformly and thoroughly establish that mere acts of illicit intercourse do not constitute a living together "in a state of cohabitation and adultery," within the meaning of statutes like that under which these defendants have been prosecuted. The evidence is legally insufficient to support the verdict.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are, as to both defendants, reversed.

PEOPLE v. GREENING. (Cr. 350.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⇨1166½ — RULINGS AT TRIAL—DISCRETION—PREJUDICE.

On a separate trial of accused for murder, the court excepted his codefendant from an order excluding witnesses from the trial, save when called to testify, and, the district attorney having waived his right to make an opening statement to the jury, the court denied accused's counsel the privilege of so doing prior to the close of the evidence on behalf of the people. Held, that neither ruling was an abuse of discretion, and, even if so, was not prejudicial to accused's substantial rights.

2. WITNESSES ⇨277 — CROSS-EXAMINATION OF ACCUSED.

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, the state claimed that accused killed deceased to rob him, and proved that after the homicide accused was in possession of certain money from which he made several disbursements, to contradict which accused testified that he had the money before deceased was killed, the district attorney was properly permitted to ask him on cross-examination as to where, how, from whom, and when he got the money and the amount and disbursements thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; E. P. Unangst, Judge.

Martin L. Greening was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Carpenter & Gibbons, of San Luis Obispo, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, J. By indictment defendant and one Mary Suggs were charged with the murder of Charles Quinn. Upon a separate trial the jury convicted defendant of murder in the first degree, recommending that his punishment be fixed at imprisonment for life. Judgment followed in accordance with this recommendation, from which, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, he appeals. It was admitted upon trial that defendant shot and killed Quinn, and it is conceded the evidence was sufficient to justify the verdict rendered.

The grounds upon which counsel ask for a reversal are: First. That the court abused its discretion in not excepting Mary Suggs from an order excluding witnesses from the trial save when called to testify. Second. The district attorney having waived his right to make an opening statement to the jury before introducing evidence on behalf of the prosecution, the defendant's attorney asked leave to make an opening statement on behalf of defendant before the introduction of such evidence. The court denied him the privilege of so doing, and this ruling is assigned as abuse of discretion on the part of the court. Third. Erroneous rulings of the court in permitting the district attorney to cross-examine defendant. To illuminate these questions we are presented with a transcript of upwards of 1,100 pages.

[1] Consideration of the two assignments of error herein first noted may be dismissed with the statement that our attention is not directed to anything tending in the slightest degree to show an abuse of discretion on the part of the court. Neither, conceding such abuse, is it made to appear that the order and ruling could have affected the substantial rights of defendant. As to the order excluding witness Suggs from the courtroom during the trial, counsel for appellant say: "It is impossible now to determine to what extent the defendant was prejudiced by her absence from the courtroom." And with reference to the refusal of the court to permit defendant's attorney to make an opening statement to the jury, prior to the close of evidence on behalf of the people, it is merely said: "It would have tended to clarify the issue."

[2] The assignment of error based upon the ruling of the court in permitting the cross-examination of the defendant is equally without merit. The theory of the prosecution was that the killing of Quinn by defendant was for the purpose of robbing him of certain money of which he was shown to have been in possession a short time prior to the homicide. In line with this theory it was shown that defendant, after the homicide, was in possession of certain money from which he made several disbursements around town. To contradict the effect of this evidence, defendant in his own behalf testified that he had the money before Quinn was killed. Thereupon, over defendant's objection, the district attorney was permitted to question him as to where, how, from whom, and when he got the money, and the amount and disbursements thereof. In this cross-examination defendant testified that he had won some $35 or $40 in a game of coon-can from one Sellers. Further questions on cross-examination were apparently for the purpose of showing the falsity of his statements, defendant being interrogated as to the identity of Sellers, the expenditure of the money so won, and generally as to what he and Sellers did, in the course of which he said that they went to different saloons and clothing stores. Whereupon he was asked if they went anywhere else, to which he replied: "Went to a sporting house." Appellant insists that how, when, where, or from whom defendant obtained the money which he testified to having prior to the homicide was wholly immaterial, and hence his objections should have been sustained. If such contention be true, there can be little purpose in cross-examination, the object of which in this case was to show that defendant had no money immediately prior to the killing of deceased. The extent to which cross-examination may go is largely a matter in the discretion of the trial court. Certainly there was no abuse of discretion in permitting an inquiry the result of which might show the statement of defendant to be untrue, or even improbable. The questions were proper and well calculated to elicit answers affecting the weight to be given the statement made by the witness.

The points presented by counsel in conducting this appeal are so trivial and so wholly without merit that the prosecution thereof, at an expense to the taxpayers of several hundred dollars for a transcript of the proceedings, can only be justified upon the ground that in a criminal case the law gives to the defendant and counsel no opportunity for considering the merits of the case or advisability of an appeal, but compels them to appeal at once or lose the right so to do. The law in this regard should, in my opinion, be amended so as to give a defendant and his counsel time in which to consider whether or not the taking of an appeal be advisable.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE — 159—CONTRACTS—CONSIDERATION — SURETYSHIP FOR HUSBAND.

Defendant's general manager, bookkeeper, and sales manager were stockholders in the C. Co., which was indebted to defendant, and they proposed to plaintiff's husband that, if he would assume and become liable to defendant for the payment of such debt, one-third of the stock in the C. Co. would be transferred to him. With plaintiff's consent, he agreed to this, received the stock, and he and plaintiff executed a note to defendant secured by a deed of trust on land which was plaintiff's separate property, for the indebtedness of the C. Co. Held, that the transfer to plaintiff's husband of title to a one-third interest in the C. Co. was a good consideration for the note and deed of trust, under Civ. Code, § 1605, providing that any benefit conferred or agreed to be conferred upon the promisor by any other person to which the promisor is not lawfully entitled, or any prejudice suffered, or agreed to be suffered by such person other than he is at the time lawfully bound to suffer as an inducement to the promisor, is a good consideration for a promise, and the contention that plaintiff merely became a surety to defendant for the antecedent obligations of the C. Co., and that, as no consideration passed between her and defendant, the note and deed of trust were without consideration, was unsound.

2. EVIDENCE — 471—WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY—FACTS OR CONCLUSIONS.

In an action to cancel a note and deed of trust on the ground that they were without consideration, the testimony of a witness, in answer to leading questions, that the note and deed of trust were given to secure the antecedent obligations of a third party to defendant, involved a mere legal conclusion having no evidentiary force.

3. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS — 45—PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF—CONSIDERATION.

In an action to cancel a promissory note on the ground that it was given without consideration, the note itself imported a sufficient consideration, and the burden was upon plaintiff to overcome and destroy that presumption by evidence sufficient in probative force to satisfy the jury or the trial judge.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by Emma M. Dunlap against the Sunset Lumber Company and others. From a judgment in favor of the defendant named, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Sterling Carr, of San Francisco, for appellant. C. L. Colvin, of Oakland, for respondents.

HART, J. The plaintiff brought this action for the purpose of securing a decree canceling a certain promissory note and a certain deed of trust, said note having been executed in favor of and delivered to the defendant corporation by her and her husband, and said deed of trust executed by her to secure the payment of said note. The sum and substance of the allegations of the complaint are that the note in suit was and is not, so far as the plaintiff is concerned, supported by a consideration. The defendants answered the complaint, specifically denying each and all of its material averments, and also filed a cross-complaint, setting forth the facts constituting a history of the transaction leading to this action and declaring that the trustees under the deed had, in accordance with the terms of said deed, sold the property which was the subject of said deed at public auction for the sum of $275, the highest bid offered for the same, and that, after paying the legal expenses of said sale, the said trustees paid the balance of the sum so received, to wit, the sum of $135, to the defendant corporation, and that said sum was by it applied to the debt, to secure the payment of which the note and the trust deed in controversy were executed. The prayer of the cross-complaint is that judgment be awarded the defendant corporation against the plaintiff, that "she take nothing by this action, and that this defendant may have judgment against the plaintiff Emma M. Dunlap and defendant George T. Dunlap for the sum of $5,060.60, with interest," etc. Judgment was rendered and entered in favor of the Sunset Company and against the plaintiff and the defendant George T. Dunlap in accordance with the prayer of the cross-complaint. The plaintiff appeals from said judgment, supporting said appeal by a transcript of the testimony prepared in pursuance of the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The principal point made by the plaintiff is that the findings are not supported by the evidence.

[1] The action grows out of a transaction whereby George T. Dunlap, the husband of the plaintiff, became the owner of one-third of the capital stock of the Clayton Advertising Company, a corporation, which was, at the time said transaction took place, engaged in the business of "outdoor" advertising in the city of Oakland. It appears that said Clayton Advertising Company was, prior and down to the date of the note in question (December 9, 1909), indebted to the defendant Sunset Lumber Company on an open account, in the sum of $4,816.84, for goods, wares, and merchandise sold and money advanced to the first-named company. It further appears that certain persons who were connected in official capacities with the defendant corporation were stockholders and members of the board of directors and officers of the Clayton Company. These persons were E. H. Nash, J. E. Neal, and C. S. Lamb, and were, respectively, the general manager, the bookkeeper, and the sales manager of the Sunset Company. They, with one C. L. Clayton, held all of the issued capital stock of the Clayton Company. Neither the plaintiff nor her husband, George T. Dunlap, was in any way connected with either of said corporations prior to the execution of the promissory note in question, nor was the plaintiff at any time, either prior or subsequent to the 9th day of December, 1909, the date of said note, an officer, a director of or a stockholder in the Clayton Company. While this indebtedness of the Clayton Company to the Sunset Company still existed, negotiations were had between the said George T. Dunlap and the above-named stockholders of the former concern, who, as seen, were also connected with the Sunset Company, which resulted in an agreement whereby one-third of the capital stock of the Clayton Company was to be transferred to said Dunlap in consideration of the payment by Dunlap of the debt due from the Clayton Company to the Sunset Company. Pending these negotiations and before they were consummated, however, Dunlap presented the proposition to his wife (the plaintiff) and requested her to join him in the execution of a promissory note in favor of the Sunset Company for the amount of said debt and at the same time asked her to make and execute the deed of trust in question to secure the payment of said note. Mrs. Dunlap assented to this proposition, and, accordingly, joined her husband in the execution of said note and made the deed of trust, which latter instrument covered a city lot, situated in the city of Oakland, and which lot was at all times her sole and separate property; the same having been purchased by her with money obtained through the estate of her deceased father. After the delivery of said note and the execution and delivery of said deed of trust, certain shares of the stock of the Clayton Company were transferred to George T. Dunlap. The plaintiff, as before stated, did not then, nor at any other time, become a stockholder in said company. The note above mentioned was given directly to the Sunset Company. The defendants E. H. Nash, J. E. Neal, J. R. Pereira, Jr., and George T. Dunlap were, except the last-named defendant, trustees under the deed of trust and as such were proceeded against as necessary parties.

The specific contention of the plaintiff is, stating it in the language of her counsel, that, since, "according to the findings, the note and the trust deed were not made or delivered until long after the obligations of the Clayton Company to the Sunset Company arose and became due and payable," and since "said promissory note formed no part of the original transaction between these two companies, Mrs. Dunlap became but a surety for the antecedent obligations of the Clayton Company, and that as such surety it was necessary that a valid consideration pass between herself and the Sunset Company to hold her upon the note in suit; that Mrs. Dunlap did not become the surety of her husband, as there was no obligation of any kind due from her husband to the Sunset Company or to the Clayton Company." Hence, it is contended, there was, in the execution of said note by the plaintiff, no consideration moving to her from either of said companies, or from her husband. It follows, so the argument proceeds, that the findings, which accord with the theory of the defendants that the transaction whereby one-third of the capital stock of the Clayton Company was transferred to George T. Dunlap involved a sale of said stock to the latter in consideration of the assumption by him of the payment of the debt due the Sunset Company from the Clayton Company, are not supported by the evidence.

After making findings negating certain averments of the complaint, the court made the following finding, which is reproduced here in full because it involves a statement of all the ultimate facts essential to the support of the judgment:

"That on or about the ——— day of December, 1909, and prior to the execution of said promissory note, the said plaintiff and the said George T. Dunlap entered into an agreement with defendant Sunset Lumber Company, acting by and through its agents, E. H. Nash, C. S. Lamb, and J. E. Neal, under and by which the said George T. Dunlap agreed to assume and pay the indebtedness theretofore existing in favor of the Sunset Lumber Company, and against the Clayton Advertising Company aggregating an amount in the sum of $4,816.84, in consideration that the Sunset Lumber Company would cause to be transferred to said George T. Dunlap and said plaintiff one-third of the capital stock of the Clayton Advertising Company, and agreed to execute and deliver to the Sunset Lumber Company the promissory note aforesaid, and to secure the payment of the same agreed to execute and deliver to the said Sunset Lumber Company the deed of trust referred to in said amended complaint; that on the 7th day of December, 1909, the said Sunset Lumber Company caused to be transferred to the said George T. Dunlap, upon the order of the said plaintiff, and the said George T. Dunlap, one-third of the capital stock of the Clayton Advertising Company, and in consideration of said transfer the said plaintiff and the said George T. Dunlap executed and delivered to defendant, Sunset Lumber Company, the promissory note and deed of trust referred to in said amended complaint; that said promissory note and said deed of trust were received by the said Sunset Lumber Company in settlement of its claim against the Clayton Advertising Company, and the said Sunset Lumber Company, at the request of the said plaintiff and her said husband, George T. Dunlap, released and reassigned to the Clayton Advertising Company all contracts and other securities it then held for the payment of the indebtedness due and owing to it by the Clayton Advertising Company; that the said plaintiff and the said George T. Dunlap acquired the said stock of the Clayton Advertising Company, as a business investment for the said George T. Dunlap, and for the son of the said plaintiff, Emma M. Dunlap; that said promissory note and said deed of trust were not given as security for the debt of the Clayton Advertising Company, but were given in payment of the stock in the Clayton Advertising Company, caused to be transferred to them by the Sunset Lumber Company as aforesaid, and were intended to be the original and absolute obligation of said plaintiff and the said George T. Dunlap, and were received and accepted by said defendant Sunset Lumber Company as such absolute obligation."

It can hardly be said that there is a conflict in the evidence itself as to the facts of the transaction from which this case arises. The controversy between the parties seems rather to hinge upon the interpretation of the testimony, or, perhaps it would be the more correct to say, upon the nature, in legal effect, of the transaction as it is explained by the uncontroverted or admitted facts of the same.

George T. Dunlap was the only witness called by the plaintiff. Testifying for her or in support of the claims of her complaint, he admitted that the arrangement was that he was to assume and so become liable to the Sunset Company for the payment of the debt due it from the Clayton Company in consideration of the transfer to him of one-third of the capital stock of said company. He said that, after the proposition had been discussed between him and Mr. Lamb, of the Sunset Company, on several different occasions, and after he had been persuaded that it would be a profitable investment, he submitted the matter to his wife, the plaintiff herein, and explained to her that he could acquire one-third of all the capital stock of the Clayton Company by assuming the payment of the debt due from said company to the Sunset Company, and that the latter company was willing to accept security for its claim against the Clayton Company. He requested the plaintiff to join him in the execution of the note in suit and, as security for the payment thereof, to make and deliver to the Sunset Company a trust deed to the real property described in the complaint, which was, as before shown, her separate estate, and that she consented to do so upon her understanding of the proposition as so explained to her by him. But a clearer understanding of the nature of the transaction may the better be obtained from George T. Dunlap's version of it in his own language. He testified:

"He (Mr. Lamb) proposed to me if some arrangement could be made that security could be given, if I could supply the security for the obligations to the Sunset Lumber Company, that he could arrange that I could have a third interest in this business and be identified with the management of it. That plan was carried out. Question by the Court: You had no interest in the business up to that time? A. No, sir; that was the basis on which I was to acquire some interest. The Court: Then you signed this note? A. Yes, sir. Q. In other words, as a payment for your interest in the business. A. No, sir. Oh, so far as I was concerned? The Court: Yes. Q. Stock was issued to you, was there not, at the time you and your wife signed this (the note)? A. Stock was issued to me; yes, sir. Q. At that time? A. Yes, sir. Q. A part of that transaction? A. Or immediately afterwards. Q. A part of the transaction? A. Yes, sir; it was a part of the transaction. * * * I requested Mrs. Dunlap to supply some security, explained to her what the proposition was, and I suggested that she give a trust deed, or I thought it could be arranged that if she would consent to give a note and deed of trust for property on Adeline street that it would be satisfactory. * * * Q. At the time this note was given by yourself and Mrs. Dunlap, to whom were the shares of the capital stock of the Sunset or the Clayton Advertising Company delivered? A. Well, it was understood that one-third of the stock to be issued should be issued to myself and son."

After thus relating the circumstances of the transaction, Dunlap, during the course of his testimony, later on went over the matter again as follows:

"I explained the whole proposition to Mrs. Dunlap, and, after having suggested and discussed with Mr. Lamb what security might be provided, I think he reported to me that he believed the security would be satisfactory—in fact, I think he did state that it was satisfactory, and papers were prepared, and, while these papers were being prepared, I explained to Mrs. Dunlap what was to be done, and she consented to sign the papers. * * * Q. Now, getting back to this transaction, Mr. Dunlap, as I understand it, the agreement was that you would secure this indebtedness of the Clayton Advertising Company to the Sunset Company? A. I was to supply security; yes, sir. Q. In consideration of that you were to get one-third of the capital stock of the Clayton Advertising Company? A. Yes, sir. Q. Prior to that time you had not any interest at all in the Clayton Advertising Company? A. No, sir. Q. You did get that stock, did you? A. In the way I have explained, yes. * * * Q. Why did she (the plaintiff) sign this deed of trust? A. Because I requested it. Q. Why did you request it? A. Because I thought there was an opportunity to get hold of an interest in a desirable business for myself and son. Q. You desired to get it, did you? A. Yes, sir. Q. And you got it by her signing this? A. Unfortunately I got it."

Dunlap proceeded to testify that, on the day of the consummation of the deal, he had 500 shares of the stock purchased by him issued to his son, Robert E. Dunlap, and the remainder of the stock issued to him as trustee for the benefit of himself and son. He said that he intended ultimately to transfer all the stock he had secured to his son—

"if he was good to me, and the business was good. Q. Did you state to your wife, when she signed the papers, you intended to give it to him? A. Yes. Q. That was part of it? A. That was the understanding. Q. This stock was to go to you, and you were to invest it or keep it for your son? A. That was understood, that the business might afford an opportunity to him, and that as it might seem wise to me he should receive the interest in the company. Q. And the purpose of executing this note and deed of trust in reality was to purchase an interest in this business as an investment for your son, is that right? A. The purpose was to give an opportunity for myself and son to take hold of this business with the other people interested. * * * The original understanding was that she (Mrs. Dunlap) was to sign the deed of trust to secure the amount of the Sunset Lumber Company, and in return the Sunset Lumber Company was to cause to be transferred to me one-third of the capital stock. That arrangement was carried out. * * * I represented Mrs. Dunlap through all the transactions, so far as she had anything to do with it."

[2] The foregoing excerpts from the testimony of George T. Dunlap may appear to involve, so far as this opinion is concerned, an unnecessary repetition of his version of the transaction; but they are here thus given for the purpose of showing that, throughout his entire testimony, there was not the slightest variance in the facts and circumstances of the transaction as he understood them and as undoubtedly they occurred. It is true that in one or two instances he was made to say, through leading questions by his attorney, that Mrs. Dunlap executed the note and the trust deed to secure the "antecedent obligations of the Clayton Advertising Company to the Sunset Lumber Company"; but this statement involved a mere legal conclusion which could, of course, have no evidentiary force.

The witnesses Lamb, Neal, and Nash, who, as seen, were officers of the Sunset Company, having authority to transact the usual and ordinary business of said corporation, each gave testimony confirming the conclusion of the trial court that the transaction involved the sale to Dunlap of a one-third interest, or stock amounting to the same thing, in the Clayton Company and that the making of the note and trust deed by Mrs. Dunlap was in consideration of the transfer of such interest or stock to her husband.

It is not deemed necessary to present here a minute statement of the testimony of those witnesses. It is considered enough to say that their testimony corroborates in all essential particulars that of George T. Dunlap concerning the circumstances of the transaction, and that it further shows that, upon the completion of the sale to Dunlap, Nash, the general manager of the Sunset Company, and one of the owners of the stock transferred to Dunlap, prepared and delivered to the Clayton Company a statement showing that its account with the Sunset Company had been canceled and closed as a part of the transaction with Dunlap.

That the important findings of the court are well buttressed by the testimony—indeed, by the testimony of Dunlap alone—there appears to us no possible ground for controversy.

Reduced to a simple and concise statement, the transaction, according to Dunlap's own version of it, involved a purchase by him of a one-third interest in the Clayton Company from Lamb, Neal, and Nash, and that, in the place of paying cash therefor, he agreed to and did assume the payment of an indebtedness due from said Clayton Company to the Sunset Lumber Company, with which the vendors of the stock were connected as officers and agents. And the plaintiff, before signing the note and executing the deed of trust in question, was made fully acquainted by her husband with the purpose for which she was to give the security. She was told by Dunlap that he desired to purchase a one-third interest in the Clayton Company as an investment for himself and their son.

If the plaintiff had joined her husband in the execution of the note and made the trust deed to secure its payment and upon the faith thereof had secured the money with which to pay the Sunset Company the amount of the Clayton Company's indebtedness to it from a third party, wholly disinterested in either of the companies concerned here, and thus had obtained the one-third interest in the Clayton Company, the transaction, so far as either she or her husband is concerned, would be no different in principle from the one which is disclosed by Dunlap's testimony. And certainly in such case no one would be found to say that the note, so far as the plaintiff was concerned, was not supported by a sufficient consideration.

The entire fabric of the argument of the plaintiff, however, is erected upon the proposition, pressed by her, that the transaction was one with which the Sunset Company had no connection whatsoever, since the negotiations were wholly between George T. Dunlap and the stockholders of the Clayton Company. Thus the theory is deduced that, by signing the note and executing the trust deed, she merely became a surety of the Clayton Company for the extinguishment of its "antecedent obligations" to the Sunset Company. But no such proposition was submitted to the plaintiff by her husband. Besides, neither she nor her husband had any interest in the Clayton Company prior to the consummation of the negotiations whereby he became the owner of a one-third interest therein, and, obviously, there was no sane reason for assuming or guaranteeing the payment of a claim for which neither was in any legal sense or measure liable.

It is true that the stock purchased by Dunlap was owned by Neal, Lamb, and Nash; but these men were not only interested as stockholders and officers in the Clayton Company, but were as well connected with and the agents of the defendant corporation. In the transaction with Dunlap, they not only acted for the Clayton Company as a corporation, but for themselves as stockholders therein, and at the same time they represented the Sunset Company as its agents. And by the consummation of said transaction, they not only released the Clayton Company from its liability for the payment of the debt due from it to the Sunset Company, but also released themselves from their respective proportions of the individual liability resting upon them as owners of stock of the corporation for the payment of said debt. At the same time and by reason of said transaction, they, as agents of the Sunset Company, authorized to represent it in such a transaction, secured ample and satisfactory security for the ultimate extinguishment of a large indebtedness due to it. Thus it is plainly manifest that in said transaction they acted no less for the Sunset Company than for the Clayton Company and for themselves, individually. That they had the legal right to represent these several interests in the transaction is a proposition which will not be disputed.

Acting, then, for the two corporations and themselves as individuals, they, in effect, said to Dunlap:

"We will transfer to you one-third of the issued capital stock of the Clayton Company if you will pay the latter's indebtedness to the Sunset Company."

This was the effect of the proposition to which Dunlap assented and which was in effect ultimately consummated by the execution by him of satisfactory security for the payment of the debt and the transfer to him of the one-third of the capital stock of the Clayton Company. And it was the identical proposition submitted by Dunlap to his wife and upon which she consented to execute the note and the trust deed involved in this controversy.

[3] We can perceive no possible reason for holding that the note, so far as both the plaintiff and her husband are concerned, is not supported by a sufficient consideration. She was, as we have seen, moved to sign the note and to execute the trust deed in consideration of the transfer to her husband of title to a one-third interest in the Clayton Company. This was undoubtedly a good consideration in law. Civ. Code, § 1605. The note itself imported a sufficient consideration, and the burden was upon the plaintiff to overcome and destroy that presumption by evidence sufficient in probative force to satisfy the jury or the trial judge. Keating v. Morrissey, 6 Cal. App. 163, 91 Pac. 677; Thom v. Stewart, 162 Cal. 413, 421, 422, 122 Pac. 1069; Adams v. Hopkins, 144 Cal. 19, 36, 77 Pac. 712; People v. Milner, 122 Cal. 171, 179, 54 Pac. 833; Estes v. Ballard, 22 Cal. App. 344, 134 Pac. 361. The plaintiff not only failed to dispel that presumption, but by her own proofs seems to have strengthened and sustained it.

Quite obviously the case here is wholly different from the cases of Chaffee v. Browne, 109 Cal. 211, 41 Pac. 1028, Lagomarsino v. Giannini, 146 Cal. 545, 80 Pac. 698, and Wright v. Byrne, 129 Cal. 616, 62 Pac. 176, all cited by the plaintiff. In Chaffee v. Browne, it is held that a mortgage given by the wife upon her separate property to secure her husband's antecedent debt, without any new consideration received either by the husband or wife or moving from the creditor, is a nudum pactum, and therefore not of binding force upon the wife. Lagomarsino v. Giannini is a case where a third party indorsed a demand note long after its execution, and after the death of the maker, "without any new consideration or the relinquishment of any right by the payee," and the court held that an indorsement of a note under such circumstances imposed no obligation upon the indorser. In Wright v. Byrne a note was given by the guardian of the person and estate of a minor to evidence an indebtedness contracted by a former guardian of the same minor. The action was against the later guardian and the ward, who, when the action was brought, had attained her majority. The court held that, since the defendant Byrne (the guardian) did not owe the debt for which the note was executed, so far as she was concerned there was no consideration for the note, and that so far as was concerned the defendant Hinkley (the ward), who did not sign the note, she could not be held liable on the theory that the note was executed by her guardian as guardian, for no authority from the probate court was shown for such execution. That case upon the facts is in no particular analogous to the case at bar.

It perhaps ought to be stated that other findings than the one above quoted are challenged by the plaintiff for want of sufficient evidence to sustain them. But, as above intimated, we regard the quoted finding as involving a disposition of the whole ultimate question in this case. Whether therefore (referring to one of the points thus made) the finding that the Sunset Company, upon the consummation of the sale of the stock to Dunlap, returned and reassigned to the Clayton Company certain contracts between the latter company and its patrons and which contracts were, down to the time of the sale to Dunlap, held by the Sunset Company as security for the debt due it from the Clayton Company, is or is not supported by evidence, is of no material importance, as said finding is not essential to the support of the judgment. Indeed, we view that finding as of a mere probative and not of an ultimate fact. In other words, that fact, if proved, could have the effect only of tending to prove that the obligations of the Clayton Company to the Sunset Company had been extinguished, which fact, in turn, would, under all the circumstances of the transaction, merely tend to prove, if anything at all, that Dunlap bought the stock in the Clayton Company upon the terms and conditions claimed by the defendants.

Our conclusion is that the findings essential to the support of the judgment are sufficiently supported by the proofs.

There are no other points calling for special notice.

The judgment is affirmed.

FURTADO v. BIRD. (Civ. 1260.)

1. HIGHWAYS — 184—INJURIES FROM NEGLIGENCE DRIVING—ACTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for injuries to a person riding a horse, sustained in a collision with an automobile, evidence as to the manner in which the accident occurred held to support a verdict for plaintiff.

2. HIGHWAYS — 172—INJURIES FROM NEGLIGENCE DRIVING—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

It was not the duty of a person, riding a horse on a highway, to constantly look back though he was hard of hearing, especially where there was ample room for the driver of an automobile to turn out and avoid striking the horse.

3. HIGHWAYS — 176—INJURIES FROM NEGLIGENCE DRIVING — DUTIES OF AUTOMOBILE DRIVERS.

When the driver of an automobile overtook a person riding a horse and observed that such person apparently did not hear the horn, it was his duty to slow down, and even stop, if necessary to avoid running into the horse.

4. HIGHWAYS — 184—INJURIES FROM NEGLIGENCE DRIVING—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for injuries to a person riding a horse, sustained in a collision with an automobile, where the complaint alleged that defendant was driving at a high rate of speed and came suddenly upon plaintiff from the rear, without warning, and, in attempting to pass plaintiff, negligently steered his machine or allowed it to run into and strike plaintiff's horse, and plaintiff testified that the automobile was coming at the rate of 25 miles an hour, that he first saw it when it was eight or nine yards from him, and that he reined the horse as near the fence as he could, but that the automobile ran into it, a requested instruction was properly modified so as to submit negligent acts of defendant, other than the running of the automobile at a high rate of speed.

5. HIGHWAYS — 184—INJURIES FROM NEGLIGENCE DRIVING—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

In such action, an instruction if plaintiff was riding sidewise, and by reason thereof was unable to properly control the horse, and if the accident would not have occurred had he been riding in the usual manner, to find for defendant, was properly modified by adding "unless defendant knew of the situation of plaintiff, and realized that he might inflict injury upon plaintiff by driving his automobile as he did, but nevertheless recklessly took a chance upon so doing, while having the ability to avoid the accident, if he had such ability," as the instruction, in the form requested, would apparently have excused defendant's negligence because plaintiff was not riding in the usual manner, while the meaning of the modification was not, as claimed, obscure.

6. HIGHWAYS — 184—INJURIES FROM NEGLIGENCE DRIVING—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for injuries to the rider of a horse, sustained in a collision with an automobile, where it was undisputed that plaintiff was partly deaf or hard of hearing, he testified that he heard no warning horn, and defendant testified that plaintiff appeared not to be aware of his approach, an instruction that plaintiff was bound to use ordinary care for his own safety, and to observe and take notice of all such dangers as could have been discovered by the observation of a person using ordinary care and caution, "and possessed of ordinary sight and hearing," and, if thereby informed of danger, to avoid it, was properly modified by adding, after the quoted words, "provided he had ordinary hearing," since while plaintiff was bound to use even greater care than a person of good hearing, in order to exercise that care required of a person having unimpaired faculties, it was not true that he was bound to hear what would have been heard by one possessing normal faculties, nor to act as a person would have been required to act who heard the horn, and the modification could not have led the jury to understand that plaintiff, because of his defective hearing, was not required to use ordinary care.

7. HIGHWAYS — 184—INJURIES FROM NEGLIGENCE DRIVING—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for injuries to a person riding a horse, sustained in a collision with an automobile, where it appeared that plaintiff was partly deaf, but defendant testified that he did not know this, and he also testified that he sounded the horn when 200 or 300 feet from plaintiff, but that plaintiff did nothing to indicate that he knew of his approach, an instruction that if defendant sounded an alarm which would have been heard by a person of ordinary hearing, and if he believed that plaintiff had ordinary hearing, and if, by reason of the condition of the road, he could not turn to the left and pass plaintiff, he had a right to presume that plaintiff would turn to the right and permit him to pass, until it became apparent to him that plaintiff did not hear him, did not, as claimed, place upon defendant the burden of proving that he believed that plaintiff had ordinary hearing, especially as the instruction was favorable to defendant, since by his own testimony it appeared that he discovered, in ample time to avoid the collision, that his warning was not heard and, if heard, was not heeded.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Action for personal injury. It is alleged in plaintiff's complaint:

"II. That on or about the 24th day of October, 1912, plaintiff was traveling along said county highway in a northerly direction, riding horseback; that at said time he was riding on a walk and traveling from the land rented by him, and lying south and west of said county road, going to the land upon which he was living; that on said day said defendant was traveling on said road in an automobile driven by himself in the same direction as plaintiff; that at said time said defendant overtook plaintiff, who was then riding along the westerly side and close to the west line of said highway; that said defendant was driving at a high rate of speed and came suddenly upon plaintiff from the rear without giving any warning whatsoever and did attempt to pass plaintiff; that in attempting to pass plaintiff said defendant negligently steered his machine or allowed it to run into and strike the horse upon which plaintiff was riding; that, upon said horse being struck by said machine so operated by defendant, plaintiff was thrown from said horse violently to the ground, suffering a broken arm. * * *

"III. That the road upon which said plaintiff and defendant were traveling on said 24th day of October, 1912, at the place where said injury was inflicted by defendant on plaintiff, so as aforesaid, is at least 50 feet wide, all of which, with the exception of about 5 feet thereof, has been, at all times herein mentioned, traveled and adapted to travel by persons either in horse-driven vehicles, horseback, or motor vehicles."

In his answer defendant "denies that he was driving his automobile at a high rate of speed, and denies the allegations of plaintiff as to his approaching plaintiff without giving any warning, and denies that he attempted to pass plaintiff, or that he negligently steered his machine or allowed it to run into or strike the horse upon which plaintiff was riding, and denies that plaintiff's horse was at any time struck by defendant's automobile, and in this respect alleges that plaintiff negligently caused his horse to collide with defendant's automobile. Defendant further sets up the separate defense of contributory negligence, and alleges that, by the exercise of proper or ordinary or reasonable care on plaintiff's part, plaintiff could have avoided colliding with defendant's automobile, and that each and all of the injuries alleged in plaintiff's complaint were caused by his failure to exercise proper or ordinary or reasonable care at the time said injuries were received."

The cause was tried by a jury, and plaintiff had a verdict for $1,000. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant attacks the implied findings of the jury on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to establish any negligence of defendant either as the proximate cause of the injury or as contributory thereto, and that the evidence is insufficient "to justify the jury in finding that the plaintiff was not guilty of negligence, which was the proximate cause of his injury," or, in other words, the evidence was sufficient to establish plaintiff's contributory negligence.

[1] It appeared that the highway on which the accident occurred is 50 feet wide and runs south from the city of Merced. It is graded and used in the center, and a roadway is also used on each side of the center grade, and the road is fenced on both sides. A berm or bench of earth, about three feet wide, extends from the fence on each side to the sides of the roads. At the time of the accident plaintiff was riding a horse in a northerly direction along the west side of the highway, between the graded part of the road and the fence. He explained in his testimony that he was riding sidewise, because the stirrup straps of the saddle were too short, and was going along slowly, no faster than a walk. He was a farmer and stock raiser and, at the time, was cultivating two places, as stated in the complaint, and was going to his home from his rented place. He stated on the witness stand that one of his ears had been injured, which practically destroyed his hearing in that ear, and he said he was "hard of hearing." Plaintiff and defendant were well acquainted with each other, and plaintiff testified that he "knew of no reason why he should run into me." Defendant, driving a seven-passenger 45 horse power automobile, weighing 3,200 pounds, approached plaintiff from the rear, on this road, and overtook him. A collision occurred, and plaintiff was thrown from his horse, causing his arm to be broken. There were no witnesses to the accident in the immediate vicinity, except the parties themselves, and plaintiff's and defendant's account of the circumstances surrounding the collision is irreconcilably conflicting. Recognizing the rule by which we are governed in cases of conflicting evidence, appellant claims that plaintiff's "narrative of the facts, surrounding and incident to the accident, is so highly improbable and so contrary to the laws of nature and of probabilities, in fact, of possibilities, such narrative should be rejected." We have read plaintiff's account very carefully and do not find it of the character described by appellant. The substance of his story may be given in few words. He testified:

"The first I noticed I was riding sideways, and I was just walking my horse along, and I just happened to turn my head, just naturally happened to turn my head kind of westerly over my right shoulder [in several other places describing the accident he said left shoulder], and I happened to notice the automobile up to me, as near as I can make out, 8 yards, or 7 or 8 yards, maybe 9 yards, because I didn't take time, I thought at the time, then I say I noticed it coming at high speed, and I thought my life was in danger, so I thought all the chance I had in the world. I reined my horse as near the west fence as I could. * * * I no more had my horse turning heading to the west and his automobile run into my horse and threw my horse down, and I was thrown off my horse to the front of the automobile, I should judge 6 or 8 feet. * * * I think the braces of the light was sprung around. The light that was broken was on the left side of the machine. The horse that I have referred to up to the time that I was thrown off had not scared at any time that day. It was the horse my little boy Tony rides. * * * The horse is about 14 years old. I was riding sideways because the stirrups was too short for me and I could not ride otherwise. I have been accustomed to riding horseback for 30 years. * * * The horse was not scared by the automobile coming up behind. * * * It has been his habit not to notice automobiles when they go by at all. * * * I don't swear that the automobile was coming at the rate of 25 miles an hour, but it is my judgment it was. My horse was paying no attention to the machine and was walking quietly, and Mr. Bird ran upon me at that rate of speed."

Plaintiff's story was that, upon noticing the automobile as he turned his head westerly, looking over his left shoulder, his horse's fore feet were upon the bench of earth next to the fence. In this position the horse's hind feet would be next to the road along which defendant was traveling. His machine was damaged by the breaking and bending of the glass lamp at the left side. Plaintiff's horse was injured "8 or 10 inches above the hock joint" of the left leg. These facts harmonize with and corroborate plaintiff's account of the accident. And these admitted facts are wholly inconsistent with defendant's account.

Defendant testified:

"When I was within 200 or 300 feet of him, I sounded the horn. When he turned to the left, I wheeled the machine suddenly to the right to get out of his way, and, as I got the front wheels up on top of the grade just about where the first track would be, he had wheeled his horse toward the fence, and his horse got his fore feet up on the berm. The berm is a three-foot space which is not plowed from the fence, out to the side of the road. As his horse got his feet up on there he started to come back. Furtado was sitting sideways, and he lost balance on the horse and started to run the horse back, and by that time I shut the gasoline off. I just got the machine on top, got the wheels on top of the grade, and I shut the gasoline off and threw on the emergency brakes, and the horse ran right back and struck the lamp on the left-hand side of the machine. * * * The horse fell back against the machine because it struck the ground just where the grade starts up from the bottom of the ditch, and Mr. Furtado was thrown off in the road. The horse fell on his right side."

According to defendant's testimony his car was almost at right angles with the road and the front wheels well up on the grade when the horse backed up the grade and in front of the car. It hardly seems probable that both horse and rider would be thrown down in this manner.

Plaintiff may have been mistaken about the speed of the car, although it must have been approaching him with considerable force to knock the horse down. Both parties agree that plaintiff endeavored to escape danger by turning his horse to the fence, and, under the circumstances, it was the natural and safest thing for him to do. It is possible that plaintiff's injury may have been brought about in the way defendant describes the accident. But it is not only possible but probable that it came about as plaintiff testified. In any event, there is nothing in the testimony of plaintiff which would warrant our holding that it was so improbable as to be unworthy of belief.

Two witnesses for plaintiff, who were some distance from the scene of the accident, testified to having observed the car as it approached plaintiff and ran against the horse. Much of defendant's evidence was directed to the testimony of these witnesses to show its improbability owing to physical objects intervening between where they stood and the place of the accident. It is not necessary to determine whether or not these witnesses were speaking the truth. The jury had plaintiff's and defendant's testimony before them, and had a right to accept plaintiff's account without other corroboration than was furnished by the facts and circumstances made to appear.

Defendant testified:

"Q. Did you slow up your machine at all after leaving the Stone House? A. Yes, sir. Q. Why? A. Because I saw a man ahead of me on horseback. * * * Q. How far away from you was he when you commenced to slow up? A. About 300 feet. Q. What else did you do in the operation of your machine? A. I just slowed it down, that is all, shut off the gasoline. * * * I began to honk the horn when I was a good deal further away than 300 feet, but he did not make any effort to turn out. I don't think he knew of my approach until I was pretty close to him. From the time I first noticed him he did not do anything to indicate that he knew of my approach until I got within 20 or 30 feet of him, and then he turned his horse out to the left. At the same time I was turning to the right."

[2, 3] Appellant contends that plaintiff was guilty of contributing to his injury because, being hard of hearing, it was his duty to look back as well as forward, and that, if he had been doing so, this accident would not have occurred. We do not think it was plaintiff's duty to be constantly looking back. Both parties had an equal right to the use of the road, but defendant was in the better position to avoid a collision, and, when he observed that plaintiff appeared not to hear the horn, it was defendant's duty to slow down, and even to stop his car, if necessary to avoid running against plaintiff's horse. Furthermore, he had ample room to turn his car to the right, and could thus have avoided the accident. He says he did this, but that the horse backed up against the car after it was stopped and caused plaintiff to fall off and the horse to go down also. The jury evidently did not believe this, and we cannot say they were unauthorized to reject defendant's story of the accident.

Some objections to the instructions given by the court will be noticed.

[4-6] Instruction 18, requested by defendant, was properly modified so as to include negligent acts of defendant other than running his automobile at such high rate of speed as to cause the accident.

Instruction 19 was that if the jury found from the evidence that plaintiff was riding sidewise, and by reason thereof he was unable to properly control the actions of the horse, and that if he had been riding in the usual manner, the accident would not have occurred, defendant was entitled to the verdict. This instruction would have been error if given as asked, for it ignores defendant's responsibility for alleged negligence in running his car against plaintiff's horse, and would seem rather to excuse it because he was not riding in the usual manner. The court modified the instruction by adding:

"Unless defendant knew of the situation of plaintiff and realized that he might inflict injury upon plaintiff by driving his automobile as he did, but nevertheless recklessly took a chance upon so doing while having the ability to avoid the accident, if he had such ability."

Counsel says:

"We are frank to confess we do not know just what the court intended the jury to understand by the modification."

It seems to us that the intention is not far to seek. If defendant knew how plaintiff was situated, and realized that if he (defendant) kept on his course plaintiff might be injured, the fact that he was riding sidewise would not excuse defendant; or, as the court put it, it was defendant's duty "to avoid the accident, if he had the ability to do so."

Instruction 24, requested by defendant, was given as modified; the italics showing the modification:

"The plaintiff in the case was bound to use ordinary care for his own safety while riding along the highway, and to observe and take notice of all such dangers as could have been discovered by the observation of a person using ordinary care and caution, and possessed of ordinary sight and hearing, provided he had ordinary hearing, and if thereby informed of danger to avoid it."

It is insisted that the modification "destroyed the effect of the instruction and told the jury that, if plaintiff did not have ordinary hearing, he was not required to use ordinary care for his safety." The undisputed evidence was that plaintiff was partly deaf or hard of hearing. In view of this admitted fact, it would not have been proper to instruct the jury that he was bound to observe and take notice of all such dangers as could have been discovered by a person possessed of ordinary hearing. He testified that he heard no warning horn, and defendant testified that he appeared not to be aware of his approach. Strictly, he could not be bound to act as a person would have been required to act who heard the warning or was possessed of ordinary hearing. He was, however, bound to use even greater care than a person of good hearing, in order to exercise that care which is required of a person having unimpaired faculties. Still, he would not be bound to hear what would have been heard by any one possessing normal faculties. We do not think the jury could have understood the court to tell them that, because plaintiff had not ordinary hearing he was not required to use ordinary care for his safety. That this was his duty was impressed upon the minds of the jury in other instructions very plainly.

[7] The instruction 25 is subjected to the same criticism and need not be further noticed. Instruction 30 was modified as noted by italics:

"I instruct you that if you believe from the evidence that defendant Bird sounded an alarm while approaching plaintiff, and that such alarm would have been heard by a person of ordinary hearing, and the defendant Bird believed that plaintiff had ordinary hearing, and that the defendant could not turn to the left and pass plaintiff by reason of the condition of the road, then the defendant had the right to presume that plaintiff would turn to the right upon hearing such alarm and permit defendant to pass; and such right so to presume would exist until it became apparent to the defendant that plaintiff did not hear him."

We cannot see that the modification had the effect to cast the burden upon defendant to "prove affirmatively that he believed plaintiff had ordinary hearing." Defendant testified that he "was not aware that he [plaintiff] was deaf"; that he had conversed with him, "but never observed him holding his hand up to his ear to help his hearing. * * * I did not know he had any trouble with his hearing." The instruction was intended, no doubt, to give the defendant the benefit of the law of the road, and we do not think that the modification weakened the instruction in respect of such law. In its entirety it was favorable to defendant. According to defendant's own testimony, he discovered, in ample time to avoid the collision, that his warning was not heard and, if heard, was not heeded. By his own testimony it appeared that he saw plaintiff turn his horse to the left while he (defendant) was some distance behind plaintiff, and he testified that he thereupon turned his car to the right to pass plaintiff. The jury evidently did not accept this latter statement as true.

We discover no prejudicial error in any of the rulings of the court. There was evidence supporting the implied findings of the jury.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

VASIK v. SPEESE. (Civ. 1574.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 3, 1914. Rehearing Denied Jan. 2, 1915. Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 1, 1915.)

1. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF ~~125~~—VERBAL AGREEMENT TO LEASE.

Under the statute of frauds (Civ. Code, §§ 1624, 2309), providing that an agent must be appointed by writing to contract for his principal, where such contract must be in writing, and section 2310 providing that a ratification of an agent's authority can be made only in the manner required to confer original authority, the breach of a verbal agreement to lease for a term of five years cannot serve as a basis of an action for damages.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT ~~48~~—RECOVERY OF MONEY PAID AS A DEPOSIT ON VOID AGREEMENT TO LEASE.

Where defendant, by an unenforceable verbal agreement, contracted to lease certain premises for five years, and the plaintiff paid a sum of money as a deposit on making the agreement, such sum cannot be recovered, in an action on the agreement.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Tony Vasik against J. M. Speese. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Harriman, Ryckman & Tuttle, of Los Angeles, for appellant. G. F. McCulloch, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

In this action the plaintiff seeks to recover damages for the breach of an alleged agreement of the respondent to lease to plaintiff certain real property for a period of five years. The damages are alleged to consist in the sum of $100 paid by the plaintiff at the time of making the agreement, and in certain other sums expended and time lost by the plaintiff in preparing for performance of the contract by him.

[1] The evidence shows that there was no written agreement or lease made or signed by the defendant, or by any person authorized in writing by the defendant to act for him. Under the rules declared in sections 1624, 2309, and 2310 of the Civil Code, the alleged contract is invalid and not binding upon the defendant. There being no valid contract, it follows, of course, that there can be no damages for breach thereof.

[2] It is true that the plaintiff, having paid the sum of $100 to H. L. Suydam on account of the proposed lease, would be entitled, in an action properly brought for that purpose, to recover the money so paid, and this recovery could be had from Suydam, or from the defendant, upon showing that the money was received on behalf of the defendant or applied to his use. But that is not the case presented upon this record. The complaint does not purport to demand anything, except damages for the breach of an agreement, which damages, for the reasons above stated, cannot be obtained in this action.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

POISONS — STATUTORY PROVISIONS — SALES BY OTHER THAN REGISTERED PHARMACISTS.

Under Poison Act (St. 1907, p. 125) § 7, as amended by St. 1913, p. 694, by adding to the schedule of poisons which may not be dispensed except by a duly registered pharmacist or assistant pharmacist, ant poison containing any of the poisons enumerated in the schedule, such ant poisons may not be sold by grocers and dealers generally notwithstanding St. 1911, p. 1248, § 14a, as added by St. 1913, p. 363, which includes ant poison in the list of insecticides and fungicides which may be sold by grocers and dealers generally, as the Legislature evidently recognizes the existence of two classes of ant poisons, some of which do and others of which do not contain the poisons enumerated in section 7.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Poisons, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. —2.]

Original habeas corpus proceeding by E. S. Potter. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded to custody.

Parker & Moote, of Los Angeles, for petitioner. John D. Fredericks and George L. McKeeby, both of Los Angeles, John F. Davis, of San Francisco, and Edward E. Leighton, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. On writ of habeas corpus directed to the chief of police of the city of Los Angeles.

Petitioner is held under arrest by virtue of a criminal complaint charging him with a violation of the provisions of "an act to regulate the sale of poisons in the state of California and providing a penalty for the violation thereof," commonly known as the "Poison Act." This petitioner is the same person who was the petitioner in the case of In re Potter, 164 Cal. 735, 130 Pac. 721. The facts in that case are similar to those here presented, and the statutes affecting the case are the same now as then, with the exceptions hereinafter noted. A certain act, referred to in the briefs in this case as the insecticide or fungicide act, approved May 1, 1911, was amended by an act approved June 2, 1913, by adding thereto a section numbered 14a (Stats. 1911, p. 1248; Stats. 1913, p. 363). In that new section "ant poison" was included in a list of articles permitted to be sold by grocers and dealers generally without restriction. Section 7 of the so-called "poison act" was amended June 11, 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 694). Prior to this amendment, said section 7, in schedule A referred to therein, included "arsenic, its compounds and preparations," in a list of articles which might not lawfully be sold by persons situated as the petitioner; he not being a licensed pharmacist. Nevertheless, it was held by the decision above mentioned that, under the permissive language contained in the so-called "Pharmacy Act," the petitioner had a right to sell Kellogg's Ant Paste, an ant poison containing arsenic. It was declared that the pharmacy act and the poison act are statutes in pari materia, and that construing them together grocers such as the defendant were empowered to sell ant poisons "when prepared and sold only in original and unbroken packages and labeled with the official poison labels," even though they contained arsenic.

Subsequent to that decision, by the amendment approved June 11, 1913, to section 7 of the Poison Act, the Legislature added to schedule A the following words: "Ant poison containing any of the poisons enumerated in this schedule." Petitioner claims that the addition of these words does not extend the meaning of the section, which already contained in the same list the words, "arsenic, its compounds and preparations." If this contention be sustained, the decision in the former case is fully applicable here.

We are of the opinion, however, that this latest and very specific expression of the will of the Legislature recognizes the existence of two classes of ant poisons, some of which may contain poisons enumerated in the schedule A and others may be prepared without any of those poisons. The first-named class is thereby excluded from the ant poisons which may be sold by grocers and dealers generally, and on the facts here presented may not lawfully be sold by the petitioner.

The writ is discharged, and the petitioner is remanded to the custody of the chief of police of the city of Los Angeles.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment and order denying a new trial, the conviction being for the crime of rape. In support of the appeal it is urged that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict, this contention being based upon the alleged inherent improbability of the evidence.

We have read the record and considered it carefully, and are satisfied that, while an argument might be made against the truthfulness of the testimony, it fails when made against its inherent probability. The mere fact that it is unusual and out of the ordinary to encounter the situation described in the record does not make it absolutely and inherently improbable. We do not see, upon the whole case, that the evidence is inherently incredible and improbable; on the contrary, the story in its entirety may well be true. In parts, perhaps, it is doubtful, and might be made the foundation of a strong argument to the jury that the complaining witness was not to be believed.

That argument doubtless was made to the jury and considered by it, but such an argument cannot be considered by this court.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

Jan You was convicted of crime, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Frank A. McDonald, of Los Angeles, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, J. Defendant was convicted upon an information charging him with the crime of pandering, as defined by an act of the Legislature approved February 8, 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 9). He appeals from the judgment and an order of court denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] The first ground upon which appellant bases his claim for a reversal is that the evidence did not justify the verdict rendered, in that it failed to show that defendant did by promise, threats, device, or scheme cause, induce, persuade, or encourage the prosecuting witness, whom we shall call A. B., to become an inmate of a house of prostitution, or an inmate of any place in which prostitution was encouraged or allowed, or to enter any place wherein prostitution was encouraged or allowed. The evidence was ample as tending to prove that defendant conducted a rooming house, and under the pretense of showing A. B., the prosecuting witness, and her two female companions some curios, as well as by other means, encouraged and induced them to go to this rooming house, which they visited at night on three occasions, and while there, at his suggestion, occupied rooms with Chinese habitues of the place, with whom they had sexual intercourse and from whom in consideration of such intercourse they received money, and in each case defendant exacted a division of the money so received. That he not only allowed but encouraged A. B. to visit the house for such purpose admits of no doubt.

[2,3] The fact that the character of the witnesses so testifying was, as claimed by defendant, bad and their evidence false and unworthy of belief, or that defendant's reputation, as shown by two of his Chinese friends, was good, are not questions affecting the judgment to be considered by the court upon appeal. Neither is there any merit in the contention that the prosecuting witness was not an inmate of the house. In our opinion, it would place a too narrow construction upon the term "inmate of a house of prostitution," as it is used in the statute, to say A. B.'s visits there under the circumstances shown did not constitute her an inmate. It is unnecessary, however, to determine the question, since under the statute the offense is complete where one procures a female person "to enter any place in which prostitution is encouraged or allowed"; and it clearly appears that the practice of prostitution was encouraged and allowed by defendant in this rooming house of which he was proprietor. There could be no stronger evidence that it was a house of prostitution.

[4] It is next contended that the court erred in permitting to be introduced in evidence a confession of defendant made to one Joseph C. Nardini, a United States immigration inspector, whose official duty it was, under the circumstances, to make inquiry into the offense charged against defendant for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not he had violated the provisions of the laws of Congress. The record shows that the inspector called upon defendant at the county jail, presented to him the warrant issued by the United States authorities, advised him of the nature of the proceedings, told him that he need not answer any incriminating questions, and asked, "Didn't they (the police) charge you with receiving money from the girls that were caught practicing prostitution by them in your house on that evening?" to which the defendant answered, "Yes." He was then asked, "Is that charge true or not?" which question was accompanied by the statement: "You don't have to answer that if you don't wish to. Do you wish to answer it?" To which defendant answered:

"Yes. Q. Each one of these girls stated that they paid you 75 cents every time they had sexual intercourse with a Chinaman; is that true or not? A. Yes. Q. Those girls said they had practiced prostitution, and they said they paid you 75 cents for the use of the room; is that true? A. Yes."

There is absolutely nothing in the record tending to show that these answers were made under duress or by reason of any inducement or promise held out to defendant as a consideration for making them. They were freely and voluntarily made, and the objection here urged to the admission of the statement finds no support in the record. People v. Eslabe, 127 Cal. 243, 59 Pac. 577.

[5] Appellant insists the court erred in giving to the jury certain instructions requested by the prosecution. In reply to this contention it is sufficient to say that the record discloses no instructions given at the request of the prosecution. For aught that appears from the record, the instructions as to the giving of which appellant complains may have been given at his own request. Where a defendant urges error predicated upon the giving of erroneous instructions, it devolves upon him to show affirmatively that such instructions were not given at his request. In the absence of such affirmative showing, the court cannot indulge the presumption that the trial court erred. People v. Casselman, 10 Cal. App. 234, 101 Pac. 693.

[6] Defendant requested the court to give instructions which, as stated in the record, covered 26 pages, and now urges that the court erred in refusing to give a number of these instructions. An examination of the instructions given shows that the jury was fully and fairly instructed upon every phase of the case, and, while some of the instructions requested by defendant embody proper and correct statements of the law applicable to the case, the subjects thereof appear to have been fully and fairly covered by the instructions given; hence defendant's substantial rights could not have been prejudiced by the refusal of the court to give the same.

Appellant cites a great many authorities in support of the alleged error that the court abused its discretion in limiting the argument to the jury made by defendant's counsel to 30 minutes, and refusing defendant's request for additional time in which to present such argument. There is absolutely nothing in the record which discloses such action on the part of the court, and without a showing of such error the question becomes a mere abstract proposition which will not be considered by this court.

Other errors are predicated upon rulings of the court upon the admission of testimony. Conceding that the court might properly have ruled otherwise, the matters are trivial and the rights of defendant in no event could have been prejudiced thereby.

The record discloses no merit in the appeal, and the judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

PEOPLE v. WALKER. (Cr. 343.)

CRIMINAL LAW — 1169 — APPEAL — HARMLESS ERROR — ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for murder, the admission of a confession claimed to have been extorted by fear, intimidation, and improper influence in which defendant admitted that he shot deceased, but claimed to have acted in self-defense, if erroneous, was harmless, where he testified substantially to the same effect.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Gavin W. Craig, Judge.

John Walker was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Paul M. Nash and L. D. Barnett, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CONREY, P. J. Defendant, having been convicted of murder and sentenced to imprisonment for life, appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The first proposition urged on behalf of the defendant is that the court erred in admitting in evidence, over the objections of the defendant, the testimony of the witness Coulter, a shorthand reporter, relative to a so-called confession made by the defendant in the presence of a deputy district attorney and certain police officers and other persons. The ground of the objection is that, under the circumstances shown in the record, the alleged confession was not free and voluntary, but was extorted by fear, intimidation, and improper influence.

If it be admitted for the purposes of the argument that the facts affecting the admissibility of the confession are within the rule as stated in People v. Quan Gim Gow, 23 Cal. App. 507, 138 Pac. 918, and cases there cited, and that the court in the case at bar erred in receiving the evidence, the record further shows that the error is without prejudice to the substantial rights of the defendant. The substance of the confession is that the defendant, in the presence of said persons, admitted that he fired the shots which caused the death of Maurice W. Halloran, but in the same statement claimed that he was acting in self-defense, because at the moment of the shooting, Halloran "was reaching for something," and defendant thought that Halloran was going to shoot right away. At the trial of this action the defendant became a witness in his own behalf, and his testimony there given is substantially to the same effect as that above noted. He makes the admission in his testimony as follows:

"When I turned around I saw this man Halloran going for his pocket just like that (showing). Q. Then what did you do? A. I took my gun and began shooting, because I thought he was going to shoot me."

The so-called confession did not tend to prove anything more than that which the defendant admits to be true; namely, that it was he who killed the deceased. Unfortunately for him, the jury did not believe that the circumstances as shown by the other evidence were such as to constitute a justification for the killing.

We have examined the several instructions which defendant requested and which were refused by the court. So far as these instructions were legally correct and appropriate to the case, they were contained in other instructions given by the court to the jury.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

1. CRIMINAL LAW — 274 — PLEA — WITHDRAWAL — RIGHT.

A refusal to permit defendant to withdraw a plea of guilty in order that he might object to the want of a preliminary examination before a qualified magistrate was not an abuse of dis-

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

A. J. Ronse was convicted of assault, and appeals. Affirmed.

Davis & McCoy, of San Diego, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

JAMES, J. Appellant was charged by an information with the crime of assault with intent to commit rape. He was convicted of having committed a simple assault, which charge was included within that upon which he was tried. This appeal is from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

It was alleged in the information that appellant assaulted one Dorothy Zeigler and used force and violence in the attempt to accomplish an act of sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix. The complainant's testimony was to the effect that prior to the time of the alleged assault she had made an engagement of marriage with appellant, who was a veterinary surgeon; that upon the night of the 27th of December, 1913, after attending a theater with the accused, she accompanied him, at his request, to his office, which was in a building then being used as a veterinary hospital. She testified that appellant first showed her through the office and drugroom at the hospital, and that he then took her into his bedroom, which was adjoining the office, for the purpose, as he stated, of showing her some photographs; that she sat upon his bed and that he sat beside her while the photographs were being shown; that he then turned out the light and reclined with her upon the bed; that he first "coaxed" her to accede to his wishes, which she refused to do; that thereupon he endeavored to remove a large part of her clothing, in which attempt he partially succeeded; that she did not cry out, but fought and scratched him and prevented him from accomplishing his purpose; that finally he abandoned the attempt; and that she dressed herself and rode with him to her sister's house in the city of San Diego, where she remained that night, as her home was in a suburban town. The occurrence at the hospital happened between the hours of 11 and 12 o'clock at night. The complainant admitted that the accused had caressed her earlier in the evening, and that while he was showing her the rooms he had his arm about her shoulders a portion of the time, to all of which proceedings she made no objection for the reason, as she stated, that they were engaged to be married. Immediately after this occurrence, it appears from the testimony that the accused evidenced some disinclination to enter into a marriage with the complainant, and it fairly appears by every reasonable inference to be drawn from the evidence that the prosecutrix gave the accused the option of either leaving town, marrying her, or being prosecuted. There was a meeting held at the office of the district attorney when the issuance of a complaint was under consideration, and at that time appellant agreed to marry the girl. He accompanied her to the office of the county clerk and secured a marriage license, and that evening prosecutrix rode with him in his automobile and accompanied him to a restaurant and later to her home. However, after further considering the matter, the accused declined to enter into the marriage at that time, and the filing of the complaint and his arrest on the charge made in the information immediately followed. Upon this state of the evidence, which is narrated as strongly in favor of the case made by the prosecution as can be drawn from the record, the jury convicted of a simple assault, and appellant was sentenced to serve six months in the county jail.

The statement made by appellant's counsel in their brief to the effect that the chief object sought to be accomplished by the prosecutrix in lodging the complaint against appellant was to force him into a marriage with her is entirely justified by the facts as we gather them from the transcript of the evidence. And it may be here mentioned that the accused denied in positive terms that he had used any force upon the person of the prosecutrix. He admitted that, while the two were lying upon his bed at a late hour of the night, he had suggested to her that she submit to his wishes, which she refused to do, adding that, even though she were so inclined, her then condition was such as to make the act impossible of commission. However, as to the matter of what the facts were with reference to the alleged assault having been made, the jury had the right to conclude, as they must have concluded, that the testimony of the prosecutrix was more entitled to be believed than that of the accused; and, unless some error or irregularity appears to have been committed which resulted to prejudice the case of the accused in the eyes of the jury, the judgment and order must stand affirmed. We have examined closely all of the points made by appellant and have kept in mind the consideration that the case was such, as presented by the prosecutrix, as might well have suggested a suspicion that the prosecution was lacking in good faith.

[1] Appellant first contends that it was error for the trial court to refuse to allow him to withdraw his plea of not guilty so that he might move to set aside the information. After the plea was entered, the application to withdraw it was filed in written form, and at the same time there was filed a motion to set aside the information. The motion to withdraw the plea was promptly denied, but it does not appear that any ruling was made upon the motion to set aside. The ground assigned in support of the motion to set aside the information was that the defendant had never been legally held to answer by a committing magistrate. It was set forth in the notice of motion that the board of supervisors were without authority to appoint the justice of the peace before whom appellant appeared, because there was in fact no such office existent and that the said board was without power to create it.

In order to entitle a motion to set aside the information to a hearing, it must be made at the time fixed for pleading and should be made before plea is entered. Section 990 of the Penal Code provides that the defendant may, "in answer to the arraignment, move to set aside, demur, or plead to the indictment or information." The record shows that on February 16, 1914, defendant was before the court with his counsel and was duly arraigned; time for pleading was set for February 20, 1914; that on February 20th he appeared with counsel and pleaded not guilty. On April 14, 1914, he appeared again with counsel, and the date of his trial was then fixed for May 6, 1914. Next, on April 30, 1914, more than two months after the plea of not guilty was entered, he filed his motion for leave to withdraw that plea, and also his motion to set aside the information.

A defendant in a criminal case is not entitled as a matter of right to withdraw a plea duly made to an indictment or information, in order that he may interpose objections to the proceedings which should have been presented before the plea; and when he appeals to the discretion of the court to allow him so to do there should be some showing of reasonable excuse for his neglect, such as: that he was without the advice of counsel theretofore as to his rights. Other facts might exist which, when presented to the trial judge, would be persuasive in determining such an application in favor of a defendant. No such facts were here presented, and, instead of there appearing to have been an abuse of discretion shown, had a contrary ruling been made the court's action would more properly have been subject to that criticism.

[2-4] Conceding that defendant was able to show, as his contention is, that the person who acted as a justice of the peace and committed him for trial was not invested with the powers of a magistrate, but was only a pretended incumbent of a pretended office, nevertheless this objection made at the time of trial, and also after verdict, by which appellant sought to question the jurisdiction of the court, came too late. It was the same objection that was made the ground of the offered motion to set aside the information. The information was regular in form, and its presence on the files of the superior court presupposed a valid prior examination and commitment. In Ex parte McConnell, 83 Cal. 558, 23 Pac. 1119, where, on habeas corpus, after conviction, a defendant raised the question that he had never been examined and held to answer before the filing of an information, the Supreme Court, by the late Chief Justice Beatty, pointed out that this question should have been seasonably raised by a motion to set aside the information under section 995 of the Penal Code. In the opinion it is said:

"The filing of the information gave the court jurisdiction to proceed in the case, and the section of the Code cited provides the exclusive method of trying the question whether the information was founded on the necessary preliminary examination and commitment."

And it may be added that section 996 of the Penal Code, immediately following the section which specifies the grounds upon which a motion to set aside an indictment or information may be made, provides that if the motion is not so made the defendant is precluded from afterwards raising any of the specified objections. See, also, People v. Bawden, 90 Cal. 195, 27 Pac. 204. The decision in People v. Webber, 133 Cal. 623, 66 Pac. 38, is not authority for the position taken by appellant, that he was entitled to raise the question as to the regularity of the preliminary examination by objection to the jurisdiction of the court. The decision referred to only declares what the Code in plain terms provides, to wit, that a motion in arrest of judgment will reach any defect in the information which would have been good ground for demurrer. Pen. Code, §§ 1004, 1185. It has been before noted herein that the information was regular on its face; it sufficiently charged a public offense and one within the jurisdiction of the superior court.

[5] The complaining witness was asked on cross-examination several general questions as to whether she had testified to the facts of the case at the preliminary examination. Objections were made to the questions and sustained by the trial judge. While it would have been proper to have allowed the questions to be answered (People v. Hart, 153 Cal. 261, 94 Pac. 1042), still no prejudice could have resulted to the defendant's case, for the court did allow answer to be made to questions calling for a statement as to particular matters as to which the witness had testified or failed to testify at the preliminary examination.

[6, 7] On further cross-examination, the prosecutrix was asked whether she ever had a conversation with a Mrs. Hendee in regard to the complaint lodged against the appellant, or in regard to her relations with appellant, or whether she ever talked with Mrs. Hendee about the case. She was then asked whether she had ever talked with any one about the case. Objections were made to the several questions and in each instance sustained. The objection to the last question was properly sustained. The question was too general in its scope and pointed to no particular conversation which might furnish a basis for proof affecting the credibility of the witness. The remaining questions asked might well have been allowed as preliminary to further interrogation; but, while such rulings were improper to be made, it cannot be said that the defendant was prejudiced thereby. We conceive the correct rule to be this: Where in the endeavor to lay a foundation for impeaching the credibility of a witness general questions are asked going merely to an inquiry as to whether a witness has had conversations with a third person, and objections are sustained thereto, the party against whom the adverse rulings are made should, either by an offer to show what he expects to prove or by a more comprehensive question, indicate wherein the matter expected to be elicited will be material. This, unless it is shown that the court declined to allow the statement of the expected evidence to be made or such further questions to be asked. Such was not the condition at the trial of appellant, as shown by this record. This view is applicable to all of the objections to later rulings presented on page 4 of appellant's brief.

[8] Before the complaint charging the crime for which appellant was prosecuted had been filed, the prosecutrix, her mother, and a Mrs. Praul, visited the appellant and held conversations with him. Appellant while testifying on his own behalf stated that he and the prosecutrix had retired to another part of the building and there had some conversation. He stated that reference was made by the young woman to the subject of his marrying her. He was then asked to tell what she said on the subject, and the question was objected to. The court inquired what the purpose of it was, and counsel replied:

"Simply to show, your honor, that the whole thing in the mind of Dorothy Zeigler and her mother and Mrs. Praul was forcing the defendant into a marriage; that their visit there was for that purpose, and failing in that object they lodged this criminal complaint."

The court responded:

"If it is admissible at all, it goes to the question of the credibility of the witness, and for no other purpose."

The objection was then sustained. Appellant had the right to show all of the words, actions and conduct of the prosecutrix which in any way would furnish the jury with evidence as to her motive in instituting the prosecution. But we find it stated by appellant immediately following in his testimony that he was taken to the prosecuting attorney's office and there agreed, as a condition that he would not be prosecuted, to marry the prosecutrix. The jury could have been under no misapprehension as to the fact that had the accused been willing to enter into a marriage with the prosecutrix the charge never would have been lodged against him. Notwithstanding all this, the jury chose to believe the complainant in her narrative as to the attempted rape.

We find no error in the record which may properly be said to have resulted in depriving defendant of his right to a fair trial. While this case belongs to a class where, as has been often said by appellate courts, trial judges should be extremely liberal in permitting an accused the privilege of a very broad and unhindered cross-examination of the prosecutrix, still, before this court is authorized to disturb the judgment, it must be made apparent that the rulings complained of have been prejudicial.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

MAGNESON v. PACIFIC MFG. CO.
(Civ. 1298.)

1. HOMESTEAD ⇨203—LEVY ON AND SALE THEREOF—EFFECT.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1237, 1238, a homestead, selected by the plaintiff, a married woman, from the separate property of her husband and in accordance with the statute, impressed its character upon the land in controversy, and the defendant's judgment, not falling within Civ. Code, §§ 1240, 1241, establishing exceptions to the homestead exemption from execution, such defendant acquired no title to the land by levy thereon and sale thereof.

2. QUIETING TITLE ⇨7—LEVY ON AND SALE OF HOMESTEAD—ACTION TO QUIET TITLE.

An action to quiet title is a proper mode to afford the court opportunity to remove an apparent cloud on a homestead title, although it is in point of law unaffected by a levy on, and sale of, the premises.

3. HOMESTEAD ⇨200 — APPRAISAL—EFFECT OF FAILURE TO APPLY FOR WITHIN STATUTORY PERIOD.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1245-1254, providing that a judgment creditor, within 60 days after levy, may make application for an appraisal of homestead property to determine what excess in value over $5,000 exists to be applied on his judgment, if such application is not made within the statutory period, the judgment creditor's lien by virtue of his levy, if any exists, ceases.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. §§ 372-377; Dec. Dig. ⇨200.]

4. HOMESTEAD ⇨21 — VALIDITY — MARRIED WOMAN.

Where the action is to quiet title, the plaintiff pleading a homestead exemption as against a creditor of her husband, to give judgment for her the court need not find that the property is her separate estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. §§ 29, 30; Dec. Dig. ⇨21.]

5. QUIETING TITLE ⇨47 — FINDINGS — PLEADINGS—FACTS IN ISSUE.

In an action to quiet title, the trial court in its findings cannot go outside the issues raised by the pleadings.

6. QUIETING TITLE ⇨10—BASIS OF JUDGMENT.

In an action to quiet title, the plaintiff must secure judgment on the strength of his own title, not the weakness of the defendant's.

7. HOMESTEAD ⇨213 — PLEADING — EXISTENCE OF HOMESTEAD.

Where the complaint, in an action to quiet title, set out a cause of action, alleging that the fee of the premises was in the plaintiff, and an answer and cross-complaint to traverse such allegation set up that the fee was in plaintiff's husband, while in her answer to such cross-complaint plaintiff traversed the allegation of title in the husband and set out a right of homestead in herself, the existence of such right of homestead is properly in issue, and may be found.

Action to quiet title by Chrestina Magnuson against the Pacific Manufacturing Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. B. Rinehart, of Oakland, for appellant.
Jas. H. Boyer, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was to quiet title, the complaint being in the usual form, plaintiff alleging absolute ownership in herself. Defendant filed an answer and a cross-complaint denying the title of plaintiff and setting up that O. M. Magnuson, the husband of plaintiff, was, on the 6th day of February, 1911, and ever since has been, the owner of said premises, subject to defendant's claim as follows: That said property was attached by defendant in an action brought by it against said O. M. Magnuson and, upon recovery of judgment, said property was sold by the sheriff under execution and purchased by defendant herein and a certificate of sale issued to it. Defendant prayed that it be decreed that it holds a valid lien upon said property by virtue of said sale and for general relief. Plaintiff answered said cross-complaint, denying the material allegations thereof and setting up the occupancy of said premises as a dwelling by plaintiff and her husband during all the time mentioned in said cross-complaint and also the due execution and recordation of a declaration of homestead by herself on said premises prior to the levy of said attachment. The court found that, on the 20th day of February, 1911, said O. M. Magnuson was the owner in fee and he and his wife, plaintiff herein, were then in the possession and entitled to the possession of, the property in controversy; that on said date, while so residing with her husband and occupying the dwelling house on said premises, said Chrestina Magnuson "duly selected and claimed said premises as a homestead for the joint benefit of herself and her said husband" and properly executed and filed for record a declaration of homestead in due form; that, at no time prior to the recording of said declaration of homestead by plaintiff had she or her husband "made, executed, or recorded, any declaration of homestead on said or any other property; that said homestead has never been released or abandoned and remains in full force and effect." The findings also set out the statements contained in said declaration of homestead, showing a full compliance with the requirements of the law. The court further found that, on and prior to February 6, 1911, O. M. Magnuson was indebted to defendant in the sum of $2,567.59, and that, on March 22, 1911, suit was brought for its recovery and a writ of attachment was levied on said homestead; that judgment was recovered, on April 29, 1912, for said amount, and a writ of execution was issued and levied on said property, and the same was duly sold by the sheriff to the defendant on June 7, 1912; that said defendant, Pacific Manufacturing Company, did not, prior to said sale or at any time, apply to the superior court for the appointment of persons to appraise the value of said homestead and no persons were ever appointed by said court in said action to appraise the value of said homestead; that said sale was illegal and void and conveyed no title to said Pacific Manufacturing Company. From the foregoing the court deduced the conclusion that:

"Said plaintiff, Chrestina Magnuson, now and at all the times since the 20th day of February, 1911, has been the owner of a homestead interest and title in and to the real property hereinbefore and in the complaint herein described, and said defendant Pacific Manufacturing Company has not any right, title, or interest in or lien upon said land or premises, or any part thereof. Plaintiff, Chrestina Magnuson, is entitled to a judgment of this court against said defendant, quieting her homestead title and interest in and to said property."

Accordingly, a decree was entered quieting her title to said homestead interest.

[1] No other conclusion could have been legally drawn from the facts found by the court. This is made apparent by the plain terms of the statute.

The homestead was selected as provided by the law, and therefore its character became impressed upon the dwelling house in which plaintiff resided and upon the land on which said dwelling house was situated. Section 1237, Civ. Code. The claimant, being married, had the right to select the homestead from the separate property of her husband. Section 1238, Id. The effect of said selection, as far as important here, is provided and declared in sections 1240 and 1241 of said Code as follows:

"The homestead is exempt from execution or forced sale, except as in this title provided."

"The homestead is subject to execution or forced sale in satisfaction of judgments obtained: (1) Before the declaration of homestead was filed for record, and which constitute liens upon the premises. (2) On debts secured by mechanics, contractors, subcontractors, artisans, architects, builders, laborers of every class, materialmen's or vendor's liens upon the premises. (3) On debts secured by mortgages on the premises, executed and acknowledged by husband and wife or by an unmarried claimant. (4) On debts secured by mortgages on the premises, executed and recorded before the declaration of homestead was filed for record."

It is clear that the said judgment against said O. M. Magnuson does not fall within any of said exceptions to the general rule as to exemption of the homestead.

[2] As clear as language can make it, therefore, the homestead of plaintiff was not subject to execution to satisfy said judgment. The purported levy and sale were and each of them was, consequently, of no legal effect. Said homestead was not thereby destroyed nor subjected to any lien or incumbrance. At most, the effect of said levy and sale was to create an apparent cloud upon the homestead title, and it was proper for the court in this action to adjudicate its invalidity and determine that said homestead was unimpaired and unaffected by said abortive proceeding to subject it to a sale to satisfy a judgment against the husband rendered long subsequent to the selection of the homestead.

It seems hardly necessary to comment upon the terminology of said sections of the Code. The language is so plain and its meaning so well settled that additional definition or description is not called for. Assuredly, the expression, "exempt from execution," can create in the mind of appellant's counsel no doubt as to the intention of the Legislature. Of course, if it is exempt from execution, the homestead is not liable to execution. If not liable, it cannot be impaired or affected by an attempted levy of execution. In legal effect, therefore, plaintiff's title to and interest in the homestead was just the same after said purported levy and sale as before.

But, while the homestead is thus exempt, the statute contemplates that one selected as this was may not exceed the value of $5,000, and a method is provided whereby said exemption may be limited to said amount. The course to be pursued thus to limit it is prescribed by the sections of the Civil Code from 1245 to 1254, inclusive. It is necessary to quote only said section 1245 as amended in 1911 (Stats. of 1911, p. 888):

"When an execution for the enforcement of a judgment obtained in a case not within the classes enumerated in section 1241 is levied upon the homestead, the judgment creditor may at any time within sixty days thereafter apply to the superior court of the county in which the homestead is situated for the appointment of persons to appraise the value thereof, and if such application shall not be made within sixty days after the levy of such execution the lien of the execution shall cease at the expiration of said period, and no execution based upon the same judgment shall thereafter be levied upon the homestead."

[3] The execution here was levied on said homestead April 30, 1912, and the action was commenced July 16, 1912, more than 60 days thereafter, and it was tried November 6, 1912, nearly 6 months after said levy, and no application was ever made for the appointment of appraisers. The lien of said execution, therefore, if any existed, ceased by virtue of said statutory provision, and for all purposes of this case said homestead must be considered as one not to exceed $5,000 in value and entirely exempt from said execution.

If any authority be needed in support of conclusions that are so obvious, we may refer to Lubbock v. McMann, 82 Cal. 230, 22 Pac. 1145, 16 Am. St. Rep. 108; Sanders v. Russell, 86 Cal. 120, 24 Pac. 852, 21 Am. St. Rep. 26; and Roth v. Insley, 86 Cal. 141, 24 Pac. 853. In the first of these it is said:

"When the attributes of residence and selection according to law exist so as to express its essence, the homestead becomes an estate in the premises selected, exempted by law from forced sale. They may be of greater or less value than the interest in them exempted by law. The excess, if there be one, in value, though it may be homestead in fact, is subject to the jus disponendi of the owner and the claims of his creditors. Ham v. Santa Rosa Bank, 62 Cal. 139 [45 Am. Rep. 654]. But it does not follow that the excess in value is subject to seizure and sale at the instance of an execution creditor. If the property so impressed with the character of homestead is worth more than the homestead exemption, and the creditor desires to avail himself of that excess, the proceedings provided by the Code (Civ. Code, §§ 1245-1259) must be taken for the admeasurement and application of such excess. Waggle v. Worthy, 74 Cal. 268 [15 Pac. 831, 5 Am. St. Rep. 440]. A judgment creates no lien upon property thus affected, and a levy gives no right, except to inaugurate the proceedings for the admeasurement of such excess. Barrett v. Simms, 62 Cal. 440. It follows that a sale, unless made under order of court, and for purposes of segregation of the excess as provided in the sections referred to, would convey no title. But though the sale of a homestead under execution conveys no title, it may create a cloud and involve the homestead claimant in litigation, and will therefore be enjoined. Oliver v. Rogers, 28 Cal. 520; Eby v. Foster, 61 Cal. 287."

Appellant contends that the judgment is erroneous for the reason that respondent based her right of action, not on a homestead claim, but upon absolute ownership, and the court found that she had in the property a homestead interest, and that O. M. Magneson was the owner in fee, and that therefore the judgment was not within the issues and opposed to and inconsistent with the material allegations of the complaint. We can find no merit in this position. The situation seems to be as follows: In her complaint plaintiff claimed title in herself. This was denied in the answer, and in the cross-complaint defendant alleged that the title to the property was in O. M. Magneson subject to defendant's lien as aforesaid and a certain mortgage specifically referred to. In her answer to this cross-complaint plaintiff "denies that said O. M. Magneson ever since the 6th day of February, 1911, or at any time since said date, has been, or is now, or at any time mentioned in said cross-complaint was, the owner in fee or otherwise or at all of said or any portion of said described premises, or the holder thereof; and denies that said defendant and cross-complainant has or ever had any lien thereon"; and, "for a further and separate answer and defense" to said cross-complaint, plaintiff fully set forth her claim as to the homestead. The issues were thus clearly presented as to the title of plaintiff and of O. M. Magneson to said property, the validity and effect of the homestead declaration of plaintiff, and the interest, if any, acquired by defendant through said levy and sheriff's sale.

It was the duty of the court to determine the issues raised by the cross-complaint and answer, as well as those presented by the complaint, and therefore the court did find that the title to the property was vested, on February 20, 1911, in O. M. Magneson, but that by reason of said declaration of homestead plaintiff became the owner of a homestead interest and title therein, and that defendant's attempted sale of said premises was illegal and void, and therefore defendant was without any title or interest in or to said property or any part thereof.

[4] Manifestly, to uphold the judgment it was not essential that the court should find that the property was the separate estate of plaintiff. As far as the homestead interest and the rights growing therefrom affect the controversy here, it is of no consequence whether the legal title to the property was in plaintiff or her husband or the community. If any of these conditions existed by reason of the said declaration of homestead, the property would become exempt from the execution and sale attempted by defendant. Nor is there any inconsistency in the finding that, "on the 20th day of February, 1911, said O. M. Magneson was the owner in fee" of said premises, and that said plaintiff, Christina Magneson, "is now and at all times since the 20th day of February, 1911, has been the owner of a homestead interest and title in and to" said property. It is to be noticed that the court does not find that said O. M. Magneson has been the owner in fee since said February 20th, as seems to be assumed by appellant. We are not therefore called upon to consider whether such finding would be inconsistent with the determination of the homestead interest to be in plaintiff, nor does it seem necessary or advisable to attempt any technical disquisition as to the exact nature of the homestead title or claim. It is sufficient to ascertain that there was and is a valid homestead interest vested in plaintiff, and that, under the conditions shown to exist, it was unaffected by said proceedings of defendant.

In none of the cases cited is there anything held to lead us to doubt the integrity of the judgment herein.

[5, 6] It is elementary, as held in Reilly v. Wright, 117 Cal. 77, 48 Pac. 970, and Schroder v. Aden Gold Mining Co., 144 Cal. 628, 78 Pac. 20, that the court in its findings cannot go outside of the issues raised by the pleadings, and that the plaintiff must recover, if at all, upon the strength of his own title, and not the weakness of that of his adversary.

In Tappendorff v. Moranda, 134 Cal. 421, 66 Pac. 491, it was stated:

"It was essential to the plaintiff's cause of action that her complaint should show that the land sued for was covered by a valid declaration of homestead. Otherwise she could not sue alone, but the right of action would have been in her husband. Code Civ. Proc. § 370."

[7] The foregoing case might afford appellant some comfort if there had been here no allegation as to the homestead, but that issue, as we have seen, was presented by the answer to the cross-complaint. In other words, if the complaint had been the only pleading on the part of plaintiff, no claim not included therein could have been maintained by her. But, having stated a cause of action and other issues having been made by other pleadings, it was proper to find the facts included therein as they were disclosed by the evidence.

In MacLeod v. Moran, 11 Cal. App. 622, 105 Pac. 932, the property involved appeared to be community property, and therefore it was necessary for the wife to allege that the land was covered by a valid declaration of homestead in order to justify the action by herself alone.

We are satisfied that the appeal, being on the judgment roll alone, is without substantial merit, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

MILLER v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR RIVERSIDE COUNTY et al.
(Civ. 1631.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 25, 1914.)

PARTIES ☞95—DESCRIPTION—COMPLAINT—AMENDMENT.

Where plaintiff filed a complaint entitled "San Jacinto Packing House, Plaintiff, v. I. N. Miller, Defendant," and alleged that H. was transacting business in R. county under the fictitious name of "San Jacinto Packing House," and had duly filed with the county clerk a certificate authorizing him to so conduct his business, the complaint was not fatally defective as designating as plaintiff a thing having no legal entity, but the court was authorized to permit an amendment so that the title should properly read "Arthur S. Holden, Doing Business under the Name and Style of San Jacinto Packing House, Plaintiff, v. I. N. Miller, Defendant."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parties, Cent. Dig. §§ 160-166; Dec. Dig. ☞95.]

Petition for certiorari by I. N. Miller against the Superior Court of California for Riverside County and F. E. Densmore, Judge thereof, to review an order allowing an amendment of the complaint in the suit of the San Jacinto Packing House v. I. N. Miller. Application denied.

Barstow, Beach & Rohe, of Los Angeles, for petitioner. H. L. Carnahan and C. W. Benshoof, both of Riverside, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Certiorari to secure a review of the action of the superior court in allowing a certain amendment to be made in a complaint filed in the justice's court and brought to the superior court on appeal. The justice court action was entitled "San Jacinto Packing House, Plaintiff, v. I. N. Miller, Defendant," and the suit was to recover a sum of money alleged to have been earned by plaintiff for labor performed. The first paragraph of the complaint contained the following allegation:

"That Arthur S. Holden is transacting business in the county of Riverside, state of California, under the fictitious name of San Jacinto Packing House, and that the said Arthur S. Holden has duly filed with the clerk of the county, in which the principal place of business of said San Jacinto Packing House is situated, a certificate, duly acknowledged, stating the name in full and the place of residence of the person transacting business under said fictitious name, and that he has caused said certificate to be published in a newspaper in said county for a period of four successive weeks."

Defendant, after demurring, filed an answer to the complaint and the action proceeding to trial, and judgment followed in favor of the plaintiff. An appeal was then taken, and at the trial had in the superior court, and upon application made therefor and against the objection of the defendant, plaintiff was allowed to amend the title of his suit making it read as follows:

"Arthur S. Holden, Doing Business under the Name and Style of San Jacinto Packing House, Plaintiff, v. I. N. Miller, Defendant."

Defendant offered no testimony, and judgment was again entered in favor of the plaintiff.

Petitioner here insists that it was not within the power of the superior court to allow the amendment to be made in the title of the suit for the reason that the title, as originally made, designated as plaintiff a thing which had no legal entity, and that therefore the suit should have been viewed as though there was no party designated as plaintiff, in which view, it is contended, no amendment could be permitted to be made which would cure the defect. Extensive quotations are made from a number of decisions, notably that in the case of Western, etc., Co. v. Dalton Marble Works, 122 Ga. 774, 50 S. E. 978. In that case a summons was issued in the name of Dalton Marble Works, and at the trial an amendment was allowed by which the words "H. P. Colvard, Proprietor," were added to the designation of plaintiff. The Georgia court held that the amendment was improperly allowed, and that the motion to dismiss should have been granted "on the ground that it was not alleged that the 'Dalton Marble Works' was a corporation, nor, if it was a partnership, did it appear who were the partners composing the firm, nor was it the name of an individual." In another case where the same ruling was made, it was said:

"Pembina & Owners" is not alleged to be a corporation or partnership, and is not a party, within the meaning of this section." Steamboat Pembina and Owner v. Wilson, 11 Iowa, 479.

It will be noted that, in support of the objections made in the cases referred to, it appeared that the complaints were lacking in allegations showing that the plaintiffs were in fact persons or other legal entities of which the law would take cognizance.

In this case it did appear, by an affirmative allegation in the complaint, that the plaintiff designated as San Jacinto Packing House was represented in the person of Arthur S. Holden, as the owner of the business transacted under that name. The complaint disclosed fully the exact character of the plaintiff. If the title and style of the plaintiff as "San Jacinto Packing House" had stood alone, then it might properly be said, as is urged by petitioner, that the name imported no legal entity, and it would follow in such case that no amendment could be made in the title to make good that which was fatally deficient in the first instance. We think that, in determining whether the amendment should have been allowed, the court was entitled to take into consideration the allegations of the complaint; and, if it appeared upon such consideration that the bare title was defective in not describing the plaintiff sufficiently, an order might properly be made permitting the additional words of description to be inserted. Here the defendant could not have been misled as to the true character of the party suing, for he was plainly told by the allegations of the complaint that that party was Arthur S. Holden, who was doing business under the name of the San Jacinto Packing House. We have no criticism to make of the law as stated by petitioner, to wit, that a party to a suit designated in an authorized way under a fictitious style, where the complaint does not disclose his true character, cannot afterwards correct his pleading by amendment. We do hold, however, that, in determining the identity of a party plaintiff, the allegations of the complaint may be looked to as well as the title. Petitioner suggests that had the cause proceeded to judgment under the title in which it was brought, and that judgment had been in his favor, such a judgment would be of no value as against the plaintiff designated under the fictitious name. The answer to this contention is that, as the complaint disclosed the identity of the real party in whose favor the action was being prosecuted, the petitioner might have asked the court to require an amendment to be made which would clearly describe the name of the real party in interest. If the order for amendment was not complied with, the action might have been dismissed.

From these conclusions it follows that the application for the writ should be denied; and it is so ordered.

MORRIS v. HARTLEY et al.

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 30, 1914. On Petition for Rehearing, Dec. 31, 1914.)

1. PLEADING $\S$ 254—AMENDED COMPLAINT—DEMURRER.

Where a complaint was amended at the trial to conform to the proof, a special demurrer theretofore filed against the original complaint cannot be treated as applying to the amended complaint.

2. SUBROGATION $\S$ 35—JUNIOR MORTGAGEES—INTEREST IN PROPERTY.

Plaintiff and his wife owned a lot covered by a mortgage securing a note executed by plaintiff, and sold the property to H., who assumed the mortgage, paid a portion of the purchase price, and gave a mortgage for the balance. The deed to H. was executed only by plaintiff. H. thereafter conveyed the lot to T. to secure the payment of a loan to him. At T.'s request, plaintiff and his wife executed a new deed for the purpose of correcting the first one. Thereafter defendant paid to T. the balance of H.'s debt, and T. conveyed the lot to him; defendant having knowledge of the facts and taking the conveyance subject to the mortgages. At the maturity of the original mortgage debt, plaintiff paid it and had it released of record, and now seeks to foreclose his mortgage and also to be subrogated to the rights of the first mortgagee. Defendant contended that the deed of plaintiff and his wife extinguished the purchase-money mortgage given by H., and plaintiff was therefore a mere volunteer not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the original mortgagee, under Civ. Code, §§ 2903, 2904, giving to a person having an interest in property subject to lien the right to redeem the property from the superior lien in the same manner that the owner might, and to be subrogated to all benefits of the superior lien. Held, that the deed having been intended solely to correct the former deed, and defendant having notice of that fact, plaintiff did not thereby lose his interest in the property or his right to subrogation.

3. MORTGAGES 494—FORECLOSURE—JUDGMENT.

A judgment, in foreclosure proceedings, which describes the property and directs the sale of it or so much thereof as may be sufficient to raise the amount due to plaintiff with costs of suit, appoints a commissioner to make the sale, gives specific directions for the application of the proceeds, and forecloses the rights of the defendants in the property, sufficiently complies with the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 726, that the judgment shall direct the sale of the incumbered property or so much thereof as may be necessary, and the application of the proceeds to the costs and expenses and the payment of the amount due to plaintiff, though such judgment stated that the land was declared to be a valid lien, not that the mortgages constituted such lien.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 1441-1445; Dec. Dig. 494.]

On Petition for Rehearing.

4. PLEADING 420—AMENDMENT AT TRIAL—OBJECTIONS—WAIVER.

Where a complaint is amended at the trial to conform to the proofs, the defendant cannot sit by without objection and then contend that by the entry of the judgment he was deprived of his right to demur or answer within ten days, but he must seasonably make any objection that he has to the amended complaint or is deemed to have waived such objection.

5. PLEADING 254—AMENDMENT AT TRIAL—DEMURRER—TRIVIAL AMENDMENT.

Amendments to a complaint for the foreclosure of a purchase-money mortgage, which showed that the property was originally owned by the plaintiff and his wife, not the plaintiff alone, and that a deed executed by them, which defendant contended extinguished the mortgage, was intended merely to correct the omission of the wife's execution in the first deed, were not trivial amendments which did not require the filing of a new special demurrer to the complaint.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR 247—QUESTIONS PRESENTED—THEORY IN LOWER COURT.

Where defendant moved to strike an amended complaint filed to conform to the proofs on the ground that it radically changed plaintiff's cause of action, he cannot contend on appeal that the amendment was so trivial that his special demurrer to the original complaint would apply to the amended complaint.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR 1040—HARMLESS ERROR—RULINGS ON SPECIAL DEMURRER.

Where all the questions raised by special demurrer were considered at the trial and none of the defects in the complaint misled the defendant, he was not prejudiced by the overruling of his special demurrer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; P. J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Isidor F. Morris against A. F. Hartley, F. J. Bethel, and others, to foreclose a mortgage on real estate. Judgment for the plaintiff, and defendant Bethel appeals. Affirmed, and petition for rehearing denied.

P. H. Johnson and Jas. D. Meredith, both of Sacramento, for appellant. M. S. Wahrhaftig, of Sacramento, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action for the foreclosure of certain mortgages upon real property situated in the city of Sacramento. Judgment went against defendant Hartley for the several sums mentioned in plaintiff's amended complaint as secured by said mortgages, and foreclosure was ordered. It was found by the court that defendant Brooke Realty Company had no interest in the subject-matter of the action. Defendant Hartley made default. Defendants Trainor and Bethel answered. Defendant Bethel alone appeals; his appeal being from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

There are two separate transcripts, the present one, No. 1116, an appeal from the judgment, and No. 1271, an appeal from the order. By stipulation both appeals are presented together in the same brief.

The land involved consists of two separate parcels; one parcel being the north one-half of the south one-half of lot numbered 1 in the block bounded by T and U and Twenty-Fifth and Twenty-Sixth streets (hereinafter designated as parcel "A"), and the other parcel being the south one-quarter of said lot (hereinafter designated as parcel "B"), the two parcels constituting the south one-half of said lot.

It appears that, on and prior to September 30, 1910, plaintiff and his wife, Belle Morris, were the owners of the said property. On November 16, 1909, they executed their promissory note to Susie Harlow for the sum of $2,000, due one year after date, at 10 per cent. interest, payable monthly, and, if not so paid, an option was given to treat the principal as due. It also provided that if not paid at maturity the note "is hereby renewed from year to year, at the option of the holder." Plaintiff and his wife, on the same day, executed their mortgage to said Susie Harlow to secure the payment of said note on what we designate as parcel "A." On November 16, 1909, plaintiff and his wife executed to B. P. McIntyre and Lulu Speer their promissory note for $2,000 secured by mortgage on parcel "B." Neither of these last-named persons was made party to the action, and, of course, they are not concerned with the decree. The court, however, in ordering the sale of parcel "B," directed that it be sold subject to the mortgage of McIntyre and Speer.

It appears from the amended complaint: That on September 30, 1910, plaintiff sold all of said land to defendant Hartley for the sum of $6,100, payable as follows: $500 at the execution of the deed; $2,000 when due on the Susie Harlow promissory note; $2,000 when due on the McIntyre and Speer promissory note; $750 to be paid plaintiff in seven years with 10 per cent. interest per annum, "to be secured by promissory note and mortgage upon" parcel "A"; and $850 to be paid in eight years with 10 per cent. interest per annum, to be secured by promissory note and mortgage upon parcel "B," pursuant to which said agreement said notes and mortgages were duly executed and delivered by Hartley to plaintiff and said mortgages were duly recorded. That, on October 5, 1910, defendant Hartley conveyed the land by deed to defendant Trainor, duly recorded on that day, and, at defendant Hartley's request, plaintiff and his wife, on October 10, 1910, executed and delivered to Hartley their deed to said land, which was duly recorded October 20, 1910, but that said deed "was executed as a mere correction of the former deed dated September 30, 1910, in which the name of Belle Morris, his wife, was inadvertently omitted," and it appeared at the trial that this second deed to Hartley was without further consideration and was given because the title, on said last-named date, was in plaintiff and his wife. That, on January 16, 1911, defendant Trainor executed and delivered to defendant Bethel his deed to said land which was on that date duly recorded. It appeared that in each of the promissory notes given by Hartley to plaintiff there was a provision that the "principal is due and payable each month in installments of $10.00 (ten dollars) or more." There was also a provision that, should Hartley fail to make payment as provided in said notes, either of principal or interest, plaintiff had the option to treat the notes as due. It is alleged that, except the sum of $500 paid by Hartley to plaintiff at the time of the execution of said deed to him, said Hartley has failed and neglected to pay any part of either of said two promissory notes, and the same are now due, "and plaintiff now exercises his said option to collect the same in full." It is further alleged that the Susie Harlow incumbrance on said property of $2,000, "which defendant Hartley agreed to pay when due as part of the consideration for the sale to him of the said land, became due on the 16th day of November, 1910, and neither defendant Hartley nor any of the aforesaid subsequent purchasers of the said land paid the same; that plaintiff was thereupon obliged to discharge such obligation, and on or about the 5th day of December, 1910, paid to said Susie Harlow the said sum of $2,000," with interest, and on said 5th day of December, 1910, she duly satisfied said mortgage by indorsement on the margin of the book of mortgages in the said county; that "the said incumbrance for the sum of $2,000 to B. P. McIntyre and Lulu Speer which defendant Hartley agreed to pay * * * became due on the 1st day of November, 1910, * * * and is still a subsisting incumbrance in the sum of $2,000 and interest thereon upon said land"; that neither defendant Hartley nor either of said subsequent purchasers of said land has paid the said sums of $750 and $850 secured by the said mortgage to Susie Harlow and the whole thereof, to wit, the sum of $3,600, is due and owing plaintiff from said defendant Hartley; that, by reason of plaintiff's having paid to said Susie Harlow the amount called for in her said mortgage, plaintiff is subrogated to her rights.

The amended complaint then proceeds to state what purport to be second, third, fourth, and fifth causes of action. In each of them the averments of the first cause of action are re-averred and made part thereof except, in the fifth cause of action, certain two paragraphs, not important to notice, are omitted. The second cause of action simply repeats Hartley's liability to pay the Susie Harlow mortgage. The third cause of action alleges that neither Hartley nor "either of the aforesaid subsequent purchasers has paid" the $850 note and mortgage of Hartley to plaintiff. The fourth cause of action alleges that neither Hartley nor either of said subsequent purchasers has paid said $750 note and mortgage executed by Hartley to plaintiff. The fifth cause of action alleges that neither Hartley nor either of said subsequent purchasers has paid, except the sum of $500, the purchase price for which the said land was sold to Hartley by plaintiff.

The prayer of the complaint is for judgment against Hartley for the sum of $5,600 with interest at 10 per cent. per annum from September 30, 1910, and the sum of $200 attorney's fees and costs and for the usual order of sale of the premises; the proceeds to be applied in payment of the McIntyre and Speer note and mortgage and interest and "in payment of the amount of $3,600 and interest thereon as aforesaid to plaintiff and the further sum of $200 with which to pay attorneys and counsel fees, and that the defendants and all persons claiming under them or either of them, either as purchasers or incumbrancers, or otherwise, may be barred and foreclosed of all right, claim, or equity of redemption in the said premises," and for judgment and execution against defendant Hartley, and also for deficiency judgment should any deficiency remain after applying the proceeds of the sale of said premises; that the plaintiff or any party to the suit may become a purchaser at said sale to whom a deed shall be executed and the purchaser let into possession; and for "such further relief in the premises as to the court may seem proper."

Defendant Trainor answered that the deed of October 5, 1910, from Hartley to him was as security for the payment to him by Hartley of a certain sum which has been fully paid, and that he was ready and willing to reconvey the property to Hartley, but that the latter requested him to make and execute a deed of said land to defendant Bethel, which Trainor did, on January 16, 1911.

Defendant Bethel filed a general and special demurrer to the original complaint, which was overruled, and he answered the original complaint, admitting many of its averments. He denied that plaintiff was obliged to discharge the Harlow mortgage and alleged that the Harlow note and mortgage were fully satisfied and discharged, on December 5, 1910; admitted the execution of the deed by Morris and his wife, on October 10, 1910, but denied that it was for the purposes of correction only; denied that by paying the Harlow mortgage plaintiff became subrogated; and alleged that the two Hartley notes of $750 and $850 were fully discharged, on October 10, 1910.

The court found that all the allegations of the first cause of action set forth in the amended complaint are true; also, all the allegations of the third and fourth causes of action; also, that all the allegations of the answer of defendant Trainor are true. The court also found that defendant Bethel did not purchase the land for a good and valuable consideration; that the deed made by Trainor to him, January 16, 1911, was so executed by him at Hartley's request as security for the sum of $150 "then and there paid by defendant F. J. Bethel to extinguish a debt then due from defendant A. F. Hartley to defendant W. E. Trainor; that defendant F. J. Bethel took said deed from defendant W. E. Trainor with notice of all incumbrances subsisting upon the land in controversy at the time defendant A. F. Hartley executed his deed to the said land to said W. E. Trainor on the 5th day of October, 1910."

In defendant Bethel's answer it was alleged that neither the note nor the mortgage executed by plaintiff and his wife to Susie Harlow for $2,000, on November 16, 1910, is "owing or unpaid from defendant F. J. Bethel"; on the contrary, that both said note and mortgage were fully paid, satisfied, and discharged, on December 5, 1910. The court found that these averments of Bethel's answer were not true, "except that the mortgage therein mentioned was satisfied of record by plaintiff as an inferior lienor." The court further found: That there is due and owing plaintiff from defendant Hartley the sum of $2,000 and interest, upon the promissory note of plaintiff and his wife to Susie Harlow, on November 16, 1909, secured by mortgage upon parcel "A" of said land; also, the sum of $750 upon said note of defendant Hartley executed to plaintiff September 30, 1910, secured by mortgage executed by said Hartley on parcel "A" of said land; also, the sum of $850 and interest upon said note of defendant Hartley executed to plaintiff on September 30, 1910, secured by mortgage on parcel "B" of said land. That it is necessary to appoint a commissioner for the sale of said premises, and that said commissioner be directed to sell parcel "B" subject to the mortgage lien of B. P. McIntyre and Lulu Speer, and from the moneys realized at such sale to pay to plaintiff the sum of $1,072.25, with costs and interest. That such commissioner also sell parcel "A", and out of the moneys realized from such sale, after deducting expenses thereof, to pay to plaintiff the sum of $3,245.20, and, if the amount realized from said sale shall be insufficient to pay said sums, then plaintiff may have judgment for any deficiency remaining. As conclusion of law the court found that plaintiff is entitled to judgment for the sum of $4,317.35.

The original complaint was filed January 18, 1911, to which defendant Bethel filed a general and special demurrer, on February 4, 1911. The court overruled the demurrer, on April 10, 1911, and on October 27, 1911, defendant Bethel filed an answer to plaintiff's original complaint. The cause came on for trial February 23, 1912, "and the same was continued to the 27th day of February, 1912, and upon completion thereof, upon motion of plaintiff's counsel, the court allowed the complaint herein to be amended to conform to proofs adduced at the trial." On March 8, 1912, plaintiff served and filed his amended complaint, and on March 14, 1912, the court made its findings and filed its judgment, and on March 15, 1912, said judgment was duly entered. On March 28, 1912, defendant Bethel served and filed a motion to strike the amended complaint from the files, which purports to have been "based upon the pleadings and records in the action and the affidavit of James D. Meredith, attorney for Bethel, and upon oral testimony to be adduced at the hearing of said motion." The record contains no affidavit or testimony in support of the motion. On May 13, 1912, this motion and the settlement of the bill of exceptions came on to be heard. The motion was denied and appellant given on May 20, 1912, "to prepare and serve a statement on motion for a new trial and the settlement of bill of exceptions." No answer to the amended complaint was filed, although it was served and filed six days before findings and judgment, and no stipulation appears that the answer to the original complaint should be deemed an answer to the amended complaint. The case, however, seems to have been tried upon the theory that the facts presented by the amended complaint, except as admitted, were denied substantially as appeared in appellant's answer to the original complaint, and we shall so treat the record.

[1] We cannot, however, so treat the demurrer. It is well settled that an amended complaint supersedes the original complaint and furnishes the sole basis of plaintiff's cause of action. If defendant Bethel had desired to avail himself of objections, other than to the sufficiency of the amended complaint to state a cause of action, he should have renewed his special demurrer. We are satisfied that a cause of action is stated in both complaints.

[2] Upon the merits, appellant's position is: First, that the deed of plaintiff and his wife to Hartley, on October 10, 1910, "absolutely released and discharged the two mortgages of Hartley to Morris (one for $750 and one for $850) and merged them in Hartley and had the operative effect of absolutely releasing and discharging said two mortgages of A. F. Hartley to Isidor F. Morris," and that appellant took the title freed from these mortgages; second, that Morris was a mere volunteer or intermeddler when he paid the Susie Harlow mortgage debt and caused the mortgage to be satisfied, on December 5, 1910, and that when Trainor, January 16, 1911, conveyed the land to appellant, the latter took the title with no incumbrance upon the premises except the McIntyre and Speer mortgage. On the face alone of the records of deeds and mortgages this contention finds support. And appellant's claim at the trial was and is here that he made the purchase upon such notice only as these records imparted. There was testimony, however, which the court accepted and which tended to show that Trainor took his deed to secure $250 loaned by him to Hartley, $100 of which Hartley paid him and $150 was paid him for Hartley by appellant, and that Trainor conveyed to appellant to secure the latter in paying Trainor this amount, and that there was no other consideration for Trainor's deed to appellant. There was evidence that when Morris and wife made their deed to Hartley, five days after Morris had deeded the land to Hartley, it was for the sole purpose of conveying the wife's interest, and that it was well understood by Hartley that the premises remained subject to the mortgages given by him and the two mortgages of $2,000 each given by Morris and wife; that the consideration was $6,100, of which Hartley paid $500 at the time of his purchase, the balance being made up of these four mortgages. There was evidence that when Morris paid the Harlow mortgage it was to protect the mortgages given him by Hartley, and there was evidence from which the court was justified in finding that appellant had notice of these transactions, and that when he received his deed from Trainor he knew in what capacity Trainor held the title, and also knew that Hartley and Morris treated all these mortgages as subsisting liens and that appellant in fact took the land subject to these liens. Appellant's contention is that Morris ceased to be a lienor because of the conveyance of himself and wife to Hartley, October 10, 1910, and therefore had no right to be subrogated under the Harlow mortgage and had no such relation to the land as would authorize him to pay off the Harlow mortgage under sections 2903 and 2904 of the Civil Code. These sections confer upon a person having an interest in property, subject to a lien, the right to redeem from the lien, and by such redemption he becomes subrogated to all the benefits of the lien; and further provides that one who has a lien inferior to another, upon the same property has a right to redeem the property, in the same manner as its owner might, from the superior lien; and "to be subrogated to all the benefits of the superior lien, when necessary for the protection of his interests, upon satisfying the claim secured thereby." See, also, section 2876, Civ. Code. The evidence showed that plaintiff was endowed with these rights. Appellant's various points in challenging the findings rest upon the assumption that he had no notice of any transaction other than shown by the records of deeds and mortgages and that he purchased the property outright and unconditionally with such notice only. But there was evidence sufficient to show that this, as the court found, was not true, and that he in fact took his conveyance from Trainor to secure the $150 paid Trainor for Hartley's benefit, and that he then knew all the facts upon which plaintiff bases his rights in the action as herein above set forth. We think there were sufficient averments in the amended complaint on which to base the findings. We are of the opinion that the learned trial judge was fully warranted by the evidence in making his findings of fact and conclusions of law.

[3] Some criticism is made of the form of the judgment, and it must be admitted that in some respects it is open to appellant's criticism. For example, it adjudges that the land "be and hereby is declared a valid lien for the payment to plaintiff," etc. And it is claimed that:

"Nowhere is it decreed and adjudged that any of the mortgages set forth in the complaint are a lien upon the premises involved, or that the plaintiff is entitled to the foreclosure of such a lien on the premises involved."

Section 2931 of the Civil Code provides that:

"A mortgagee may foreclose the right of redemption of the mortgagor in the manner prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure."

Section 726 of the latter Code prescribes no form for the judgment. The principal object of the proceeding is to cause a sale of the incumbered property and the application of the proceeds of sale to the payment of the debt secured thereby as in the section directed. The judgment describes the property and directs its sale, "or so much thereof as may be sufficient to raise the amount due to the plaintiff with costs of suit," etc.; appoints a commissioner to conduct the sale; and gives specific directions as to the application of the proceeds to pay the amounts due, which are specifically given; and declares that all the defendants and all persons claiming under them or having liens subsequent to plaintiff's liens, and who have acquired any estate or interest in said premises subsequent to the filing of the motion of the pendency of the action, "be forever barred and foreclosed of and from all equity of redemption," etc. The judgment seems to be a sufficient compliance with the statute to effectuate its object.

The judgment is affirmed.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Appellant petitions for a rehearing. The point especially urged is that the court erroneously held that the demurrer to the original complaint could not be considered as a demurrer to the amended complaint.

[4] As shown in the opinion, heretofore filed, the judgment was entered six days after the amended complaint was filed. Appellant contends that he was entitled to 10 days in which to demur or answer. It frequently happens that amendments are made by leave of court to conform to the evidence adduced at the trial. We do not understand that in such cases the opposing party can stand by without answering or demurring and, after the court has made its findings and entered its judgment, claim that he was deprived of his right to answer or demur. If he has objection to the amended complaint as allowed by the court, he should seasonably make such objection known, or he must be deemed to have waived such objection. In the present case he was duly served with a copy of the amended complaint, which recites that it was filed "by leave of court first had and obtained."

[5] It is further contended that the amendments to the complaint were trivial and did not require a new demurrer, citing Flood v. Templeton, 148 Cal. 374, 376, 83 Pac. 148. The amendment was, we think, something more than trivial and was to meet a very important issue in the case as to which there was evidence and a finding of the court. There was an amendment showing that the property was owned by Morris and his wife, whereas the original complaint alleged that Morris was the owner. There was also an amendment that, on October 10 1910, Morris and his wife conveyed the premises to Hartley merely by way of correcting the deed made by Morris alone and with no intention that it should affect the mortgages given by Hartley. One of appellant's contentions at the trial—strongly urged—was that this deed "absolutely released and discharged the two mortgages of Hartley to Morris (one for $750 and one for $850) and merged them in Hartley and had the operative effect of absolutely releasing and discharging said two mortgages of A. F. Hartley to Isidor F. Morris," and that appellant took the title freed from these mortgages. This issue was fully exploited at the trial, and evidence admitted tending to show that the purpose of this deed of October 10th was well known to all the parties.

[6] In his motion to strike the amended complaint from the files, appellant states, among other grounds, that it "radically changes and alters the alleged causes set forth in plaintiff's original complaint on file herein"; and that it "set forth matters and issues entirely new, wholly distinct, and completely different from those embraced in the original complaint." Appellant would hardly seem justified in now claiming that the amendments were trivial and such as were referred to in the case above cited. Besides, in the case cited the demurrer was general and the court stated that the objections to the complaint could be made at any time. We still think that he should have renewed his demurrer if he intended to rely upon it.

[7] Furthermore, we are of the opinion, if we are in error upon this point, that the matters called to the attention of the court by the special demurrer (it is not contended that there was any merit in the general demurrer) were gone into at the trial. Appellant was not misled by any of the defects in the pleading pointed out in the special demurrer, for the case seems to have been fairly tried on the merits. He was not prejudiced by the overruling of his demurrer. Stein v. United Railroads, 159 Cal. 368, 113 Pac. 663.

The petition is denied.

MORRIS v. HARTLEY et al. (Civ. 1271.)
(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 30, 1914.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; P. J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Isidor F. Morris against A. F. Hartley, F. J. Bethel, and others, to foreclose a real estate mortgage. From an order overruling defendant Bethel's motion for a new trial, after judgment had been rendered for plaintiff, defendant Bethel appeals. Affirmed.

James D. Meredith and P. H. Johnson, both of Sacramento, for appellant. M. S. Wahrhaftig, of Sacramento, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an appeal from the order denying defendant Bethel's motion for a new trial and, by stipulation, was presented in the briefs filed in the appeal from the judgment (No. 1116, 146 Pac. 73), this day decided. For the reasons therein presented, the order is affirmed.

BERNARDO v. RUE. (Civ. 1547.)

1. ELECTIONS ⇨303 — CONTEST—SUBMISSION OF CASE—FINDINGS—FILING—TIME—JURISDICTION.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1118a, relating to election contests, provides that, within five days from the end of the time allowed for filing statements required, the county clerk must notify the superior court of the county or city and county of all statements filed, and the court shall continue in special session to hear and determine issues arising, and within ten days after submission thereof shall file its findings of fact and conclusions of law, and immediately thereafter judgment shall be entered. Held, that such provision as to time was directory only, and that the court, by failing to file its findings and enter judgment within ten days after submission of the case, did not lose jurisdiction thereof.

2. ELECTIONS ⇨300—CONTEST—NONSUIT.

Where, in a high school election contest, the judges of the election not only did not proceed to count and dispose of the ballots as required by law, but changed their returns after they were filed at an illegal and secret meeting in the rear of a saloon, so as to change the result of the election, and, had they followed the statute, the result at which they arrived would have been impossible without a fraudulent purpose, the court erred in directing a nonsuit.

3. ELECTIONS ⇨241 — CANVASS — BALLOTS FOLDED TOGETHER.

At the close of the polls, Pol. Code, § 1253, requires the board to compare their count with the list of voters kept by the clerk and to lay aside sets of votes folded together until the count is completed, when a comparison of the count with the number of names of electors on the lists will show whether the ballots folded together were cast by one elector, in which event they should be rejected.

4. ELECTIONS ⇨243—COUNT—MODE.

Pol. Code, § 1252, provides that, on the close of the polls, judges must immediately canvass the votes in public and in the presence of bystanders, which must be continued without adjournment until completed and the result declared. Held, that the election board is required to commence their count at once on the close of a school election, and publicly, and in the presence of bystanders, conduct the same without adjournment until the count is completed, and after the result is declared and recorded and the ballots, together with their official returns, have been deposited with the clerk, the jurisdiction of the board over any matter concerned in the election ceases.

5. ELECTIONS ⇨245—RETURN—CORRECTION—CONTEST.

After the result of a school election has been declared and recorded, and the ballots and the returns deposited with the clerk of the district, any review or correction of the returns must be under direction of the board of trustees of the school district or other canvassing board, as required by Pol. Code, § 1281a; there being no authority in law for the withdrawal by the board, on the day following the election, of their official returns from the custody of the clerk for any purpose.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Election contest by Frank J. Bernardo against Joseph Rue. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Ross & Ross, of San Mateo, for appellant. Barrett & Thomas and Fabian D. Brown, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This was a proceeding instituted to contest the election of the defendant to the office of high school trustee at Half Moon Bay, Union high school district, held within said district on April 3, 1914. The action was commenced on April 21, 1914, and came on for trial on the 8th day of May, 1914. The plaintiff's case was presented on that day; and, at the conclusion of the evidence offered in his behalf, a motion for nonsuit was on the same day made by the defendant and granted by the court. On the 28th day of May, 1914, the court filed its findings and caused its judgment to be entered in defendant's favor; and from the order granting said motion for nonsuit, and from the judgment affirming the election of the defendant to the office in question, the plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

[1] The first point urged by the appellant is that the case having been submitted and the motion for nonsuit granted on May 8, 1914, it was the duty of the court under section 1118a of the Code of Civil Procedure to file its findings and enter its judgment within ten days after the submission of the case; and that the court, having failed to do so within said time, lost jurisdiction to render its decision or enter a judgment after the expiration of the ten-day period within which it was permitted by the statute to act; and hence that the judgment rendered and entered in this proceeding is a nullity and must be reversed. We incline to the opinion that the sections of the act governing the court's action upon the trial of proceedings of this character are directory, in the absence of an express provision of the statute declaring them to be mandatory, and that, while the recent amendment to the Code of Civil Procedure, by which section 1118a was added, was evidently intended to hasten the work of the courts in passing upon election contests, it was not intended thereby to provide the parties to an election contest should lose valuable rights because of the delay of the judge in making or filing his findings and judgment. We think therefore that this point of the appellant is not well taken.

The practically undisputed facts before the court, upon which such motion for nonsuit was made and granted, are these: On the 3d day of April, 1914, two elections were held in the town of Half Moon Bay, one for the election of a grammar school trustee and one for the election of a high school trustee; the polls of each of these elections being in different places. During the progress of the high school election a voter was noticed to have inadvertently dropped a grammar school ballot into the box at the time of the deposit of his high school ballot. When the polls closed, the ballots cast were dumped out of the ballot box on a table and, with the exception of this particular grammar school ballot, were counted, when it was found that 287 ballots had been cast. The election board did not compare this count of the ballots with the poll list of voters, as required by section 1253 of the Political Code, but proceeded to open the ballots and announce the count of the names written thereon. In so doing, it was found that there were four additional grammar school ballots, which were cast aside. During the progress of the count two high school ballots, folded together as one, were found, which the inspector declared "a stuffed ballot," and which was laid aside without being unfolded or counted at the time. Presently two other ballots folded together as one were found, which were similarly laid aside without unfolding or counting. When the count was completed, it was found that the plaintiff Bernardo had received 164 votes and the defendant Rue 117, and that there were four grammar school votes not counted for either. After the completion of the count, as above set forth, and while the judges of the election were in the act of writing down on their official tally list how many votes had been cast for the respective candidates, the inspector took up one of the two sets of double ballots and opened it and separated the ballots and showed them to the defendant Rue, and then asked:

"What are we going to do with these two ballots? They could have slipped together very easily when they were thrown in together. I think it is right to give them to Mr. Rue."

The board so decided, over the protest of the plaintiff Bernardo, and credited Mr. Rue with the two extra votes, making his total number 119 votes, and also making the total number of votes counted tally with the initial count of the ballots before the canvass began, but leaving the other of the two double sets of votes unopened and uncounted and out of question for the time being. The board then proceeded to fill out the official sheet showing the returns of the election, and, after doing so, they gathered up all of the ballots, including the four grammar school ballots, and also the remaining unopened and uncounted double set of ballots, and threw them into the ballot box, which they then delivered, together with their official returns of the election, to the clerk of the high school district, who was not a resident of this precinct nor a member of this election board, and thereupon the election board and the bystanders dispersed.

In the meantime the election had also proceeded in the seven other polling places of the high school district, with the result that the plaintiff Bernardo received in these 131 votes and the defendant Rue 176 votes; these, added to the votes of each in the polling place in question, would give to each of the candidates a total of 295 votes and create a tie election.

It is fairly inferable that this result was known to the members of the election board of the precinct in question at least by the following day; but, however this may be, the undisputed evidence shows that on the following night, at least 24 hours after the election of the previous day was closed, and the vote canvassed, and the result announced and recorded, and the ballot box and official returns deposited with the clerk of the district, the members of this election board re-assembled in the back room of the saloon of one of their number, and which was a different place from that where the election had been held, and there, about 9 o'clock in the nighttime, and in the absence both of the public and of the contestants in the election, the members of the board proceeded to alter their formal official returns, which, in some way not revealed by the record, they had recovered from the clerk of the district, so as to add to the already recorded vote of the defendant Rue two additional votes, presumably those contained in the set of double ballots which, so far as the record discloses, they had never opened nor examined nor counted. The effect of this alteration was to give to the defendant Rue, upon the face of the altered returns, a majority of two votes in the election.

The foregoing undisputed facts were before the court in this proceeding at the time the motion for nonsuit was made. They show upon their face such a state of facts and such a repeated and willful disregard of the plain letter of the law regarding elections as would seem to render it perfectly plain that a motion for nonsuit ought not to have been granted in this case. Conceding the respondent's contention that the provisions of sections 1252-1260 of the Political Code are directory, and that, in the absence of insignia of fraud, election boards will not be held to a strict compliance with the statute, it would seem clear that, if this election board had followed the direction of the sections of the act above quoted, the result at which they arrived would have been impossible without a fraudulent purpose.

[3] It was the duty of the board, under section 1253 of the Political Code, to compare their count of the number of votes cast with the list of voters kept by the clerk.

Had they done this, they would have found that the count of the votes cast either did or did not correspond with the poll list, and this knowledge would have guided that board in determining whether the two sets of votes folded together were each to be counted as one vote or as two; but, having disregarded this requirement of section 1253, the board also proceeded to disregard the succeeding section of the Code, which reads:

"If two or more separate ballots are found so folded together as to present the appearance of a single ballot, they must be laid aside until the count of the ballots is completed; then, if upon comparison of the count with the number of names of electors on the lists which have been kept by the clerks, it appears that the two ballots thus folded together were cast by one elector, they must be rejected."

If the foregoing two sections of the Code had been followed and if the board were then still in doubt as to whether the two sets of double ballots should be counted each as one or as two votes, the succeeding section of the Code supplies the procedure by providing that, if the number of ballots is in excess of the names on the list, the ballots must be replaced in the box, and a number of ballots equaling such excess must be publicly drawn therefrom by one of the judges and destroyed unopened. It is evident that the election board were in some doubt as to whether these two sets of double ballots were illegal, and whether, if divided, they would cause the number of votes to exceed the number of voters, for they laid both of them aside during the regular count and did not in fact open or count one of these double sets of ballots at all. These repeated divergences from the plain letter of the statute, conceding it to be directory, nevertheless indicate the drift of this election board toward the precipice of a positive violation of the election laws, which of itself should suffice to invalidate this election.

"As soon as the polls are finally closed the judges must immediately proceed to canvass the votes given at such election. The canvass must be public, in the presence of bystanders, and must be continued without adjournment until completed and the result thereof is declared."

It is the plain intentment of this section of the act that the election board shall commence their count of the votes at once upon the close of the election, and that they shall publicly and in the presence of the bystanders conduct the same without adjournment until such count is completed and the result declared and recorded. When this is done, and the ballots, together with their official returns, have been deposited with the clerk of the school district as other sections of the act require, the powers and duties of the election board are at an end; and their jurisdiction over any matter concerned in the election ceases.

rection of the board of trustees of the school district, or other canvassing board, under the provisions of section 1281a of the Political Code. There was therefore no authority in law for the withdrawal by this board, on the day following the election, of their official returns from the custody of the clerk of the district for any purpose whatever; and, conceding their action in this regard to have been inspired by an honest motive, it was clearly beyond their lawful power. It is difficult, however, to make even this concession, in view of the circumstances under which this election board effected the alteration of their official returns. The conduct of the members of the board in reassembling in the night of the following day, 26 hours after the election, privately and in the back room of a saloon, and in there attempting to so alter their official returns as to change the result of an election, made up a series of improprieties which of themselves, and even in the absence of any other lapses in the course of the election, should have led the trial court to deny a motion for nonsuit and require affirmative proof justifying such a course of action and clearly establishing an integrity of motive as well as a rightfulness of result on the part of this board.

Whether or not a motion for nonsuit is the proper proceeding in an election contest may be open to question, in view of the language of section 1221 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, requiring the court to hear and determine the proofs and allegations of the parties, and to file its findings of fact and pronounce its judgment either confirming or annulling such election, and also in view of the fact that an election contest is not an ordinary adversary proceeding between private parties, but is a proceeding in which the public is vitally interested and concerned. However this may be, it appears that in the case at bar the court, in addition to granting the motion for nonsuit, made and filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law at the time of entering its judgment in the case. The findings of fact of the court are as follows:

"I. That all of the allegations of plaintiff's and contestant's complaint and petition are untrue, except the allegations contained in paragraphs I, II, III, and IV thereof, which are hereby found to be true, and except the allegations thereof admitted to be true by defendant's answer, which are hereby found to be true.

"II. That all of the allegations contained in the answer of defendant and respondent on file herein are true."

In order to test the correctness of the foregoing findings, it is necessary to examine the answer of the defendant. It is found to consist of several pages of specific denials of the averments of plaintiff's pleading and also of several more pages of affirmative matter set forth as a separate answer and defense to plaintiff's action. The defendant, having made a successful motion for nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's case, was not required to offer and in fact did not offer any evidence in support of the averments of his answer. One of the averments of defendant's answer was the affirmative allegation that the election officers "did publicly, correctly, and rightfully announce and declare that 164 votes had been cast in said school district for plaintiff and contestant and that 121 votes had been cast for said defendant and respondent herein." This affirmative averment of the defendant's answer was not only unsupported by any evidence in the case, but was positively negated by the affirmative and undisputed evidence above set forth, showing that the only time and manner in which the election board ever declared that the defendant Rue had received 121 votes in the election was upon the occasion referred to, when, 26 hours after the election was over and after the functions and power of the board had ceased, they privately, illegally, and wrongfully, and in a place where they had no business to conduct any part of the official proceedings of the election, changed the official returns so as to show a different result from that recorded upon the day of the election, and so as to change the result of the election itself. This is but one of a number of affirmative allegations of the defendant's answer, which were not only not supported by the evidence, but were directly negated by the undisputed proofs in the case. There are other alleged errors in the record; but the foregoing considerations render unnecessary their determination upon this appeal.

The order granting a nonsuit and the judgment confirming the respondent's election are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

Ex parte SMITH. (Cr. No. 282.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚡661—STREETS—RIGHT TO CONTROL.

The state has the original right to control streets in cities and towns, except that, under the Constitution, any city operating under a freeholder's charter has the exclusive right to pass ordinances as to "municipal affairs."

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚡592—CITIES OF THE SIXTH CLASS—CONSTITUTIONAL POWERS.

Under Const. art. 11, § 11, the authority of a city of the sixth class is only to make local, police, and sanitary regulations, and such other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚡703—POLICE POWER—REGULATION OF SPEED OF MOTOR VEHICLES—CONFLICT OF ORDINANCE WITH STATUTE.

An ordinance of a city of the sixth class, limiting the speed of motor vehicles to 12 miles an hour within the city, conflicts with and is superseded by motor vehicle act (St. 1913, p. 639), which sets speed limits from 30 to 10 miles an hour, according to the character of the place through which the vehicle is passing.

J. C. Smith was convicted of violating the speed ordinance of Merced City, and applies for writ of habeas corpus. Writ ordered to issue.

L. J. Schino, of Merced, for petitioner. F. W. Henderson, of Merced, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Petitioner was convicted of the offense of misdemeanor for violating the speed limit prescribed by ordinance of the city of Merced for automobiles, and was sentenced to pay a fine of $20, and, if not paid, that he be imprisoned in the county jail until said "fine be duly satisfied, in proportion to one day's imprisonment for every $2 of the fine." Failing to pay his fine, the petitioner was committed to the sheriff of the county, and it is from such commitment he seeks to be discharged.

It was charged in the complaint:

"That said J. C. Smith, on or about the 4th day of September, A. D. 1914, at Merced city, in the county of Merced, state of California, did willfully and unlawfully drive an automobile over the streets of Merced city at a greater rate of speed than 12 miles an hour."

Merced is a city of the sixth class, with a population of about 3,000 persons. For the purposes of the case, it was conceded at the hearing that at the time of his arrest petitioner was not exceeding the speed limit prescribed by the state law in the section of Merced where he was then traveling, but it does not appear upon what part of the street or in what part of the city he was traveling.

Ordinance No. 151 of the city of Merced, by section 14, provides as follows:

"No vehicle shall be allowed to be driven or run over the streets in the city of Merced at a greater rate of speed than twelve miles an hour."

And section 22 makes it a misdemeanor to violate any of the provisions of the ordinance, punishable by fine not exceeding $100, or by imprisonment not exceeding 30 days, or both, and, in case the fine be not paid, "by imprisonment at the rate of one day for every two dollars of the fine so imposed." This ordinance was passed on January 2, 1911.

The motor vehicle act of 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 639) is declared by its title to be:

"An act to regulate the use and operation of vehicles upon the public highways and elsewhere [enumerates many other purposes, such as payment of registration fees, licensing person operating motor vehicles, providing penalties for violating the provisions of the act, and the disposition of registration and license fees, fines and forfeitures]; * * * and to repeal all other acts or parts of acts either in conformity or in conflict with this act."

Some of the provisions of the act are as follows:

"Sec. 22. * * * (b) Every person operating or driving a motor or other vehicle on the public highways of this state shall operate or drive the same in a careful and prudent manner and at a rate of speed not greater than is reasonable and proper, having regard to the traffic and use of the highway, and no person shall operate or drive a motor or other vehicle on a public highway at such rate of speed as to endanger the life or limb of any person or the safety of any property: Provided, that it shall be unlawful to drive at a rate of speed in excess of thirty miles an hour: And provided, further, that in any event no person shall operate or drive a motor or other vehicle on any public highway where the territory contiguous thereto is closely built up, at a greater rate of speed than one mile in three minutes, or in the business district of any incorporated city and county, city or town, at a greater rate than one mile in four minutes, or at a greater rate of speed than one mile in six minutes where the operator's or chauffeur's view of the road traffic is obstructed either upon approaching an intersecting way, or in traversing a crossing or intersection of ways, or in approaching or traversing a bridge, dam, trestle, causeway or viaduct, or in going around corners or a curve in a street or highway."

"* * * (4) 'Public highways' shall include any highway, county road, state highway or state road, public street, avenue, alley, park, parkway, driveway, or public place in any county or incorporated city and county, city or town; (5) 'business district' shall mean the territory of any county or incorporated city and county, city or town, contiguous to public highway, which is at that point mainly built up with structures devoted to business; (6) 'closely built up' shall mean the territory of any county or incorporated city and county, city or town, contiguous to a public highway not devoted to business where for not less than a quarter of a mile, the dwelling houses on such highway average less than one hundred feet apart: Provided, that the local authorities having charge of such highway shall have placed conspicuously thereon at both ends of such closely built up section signs of sufficient size to be easily readable by a person using the highway, bearing the words 'Slow down to ——— miles' (inserting in the blank space preceding the word 'miles' the rate of speed prescribed by law and also an arrow pointing in the direction of the territory where the speed is to be reduced); (7) 'local authorities' shall include all boards of supervisors, trustees or councils, committees, and other public officials of counties, incorporated cities and counties, cities or towns; * * * (15) 'intersecting highway' shall mean any highway which joins another at an angle, whether or not it crosses the other. * * *

"Sec. 32. Excepting as in this act otherwise expressly provided, any person violating any of its provisions shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof unless in this act otherwise expressly provided, shall be punishable by a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding thirty days, or both, for the first offense; and punishable by fine of not less than fifty dollars nor more than one hundred dollars, or imprisonment not exceeding thirty days, or both, for a second offense; and punishable by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars nor more than two hundred and fifty dollars, or imprisonment not exceeding thirty days, or both, for a third or a subsequent offense."

Section 36 provides for the payment of all fines and forfeitures to the treasurer of the county where collected, who shall—

"at intervals of not greater than once a month place such moneys in a fund to be called the 'county good road fund' or 'city and county good road fund,' as the case may be, which shall be used by the highway commission of the county or city and county, as the case may be, or by the board of supervisors * * * for the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of such roads as shall be designated * * * with regard to the proper and just distribution of the benefits of this act throughout the county or city and county."

"Sec. 40. This act shall be known and cited as the 'Motor Vehicle Act.' An act entitled 'An act to regulate the operation of motor vehicles upon public highways, and making an appropriation for the purpose of carrying out the objects of this act,' approved March 22, 1905, and all acts or parts of acts amendatory thereof are hereby expressly repealed, and all other acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith, are hereby repealed."

Briefly stated, the motor vehicle act provides: First, that no motor shall be operated at "such rate of speed as to endanger the life or limb of any person or the safety of any property." This provision is independent of the provision fixing certain maximum speeds. The act then fixes the maximum rate of speed generally—I. e., in sparsely settled portions of the country, at 30 miles an hour; next, where "the contiguous territory is closely built up," the rate of speed is limited to 20 miles an hour; next, in the business districts of any incorporated city and county, city, or town, the limit is 15 miles per hour; and, finally, where "the operator's view of the road traffic is obstructed either upon approaching an intersecting way, or in traversing a crossing or intersection of ways, or in approaching or traversing a bridge, dam, trestle, causeway or viaduct, or in going around corners or a curve in a street or highway," the limit is 10 miles per hour.

The Merced ordinance fixes the limit of speed in all parts of the city at 12 miles per hour, regardless of crossings or intersecting streets or of obstructions to the view of the operator in approaching an intersecting way.

The authority of the city of Merced to pass ordinances is found in section 11, art. 11, of the Constitution:

"Sec. 11. Any county, city, town, or township may make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws."

In the municipal corporation act relating to cities of the sixth class, it is provided, by section 862, that the board of trustees of said city shall have power:

"(1) To pass ordinances not in conflict with the Constitution and laws of this state, or of the United States." Stats. 1883, pp. 93, 269.

It is contended, on behalf of petitioner, that the Merced ordinance is void because in conflict with the motor vehicle act of 1905 (Stats. 1905, p. 816), as amended in 1907 (Stats. 1907, p. 915). This alleged conflict, it is claimed, consists in the fact that the ordinance fixes a rate of speed greater than that prescribed by the state law, and the further fact that, in violation of the principle enunciated in the case In re Sic, 73 Cal. 142, 14 Pac. 405, the ordinance punishes the same offense as that covered by the state law.

It is also contended that the ordinance, if not in conflict with the motor vehicle act of 1913, is unreasonable and not in exercise of the police power. It is unreasonable in that it fixes one rate of speed for all parts of the city, in disregard of the requirements common to all similar ordinances regulating the speed of vehicles for the protection of persons and property at street crossings and in the business districts of the city where traffic is often congested. It is said not to be an exercise of the police power, because the main purpose of the ordinance is to secure to the municipal treasury the fines collected for violations which it is the design of the motor vehicle act should go to the road fund of the county.

Petitioner raises the still further question, namely, that the motor vehicle act, by its repealing provisions, was intended to repeal all acts and part of acts theretofore passed either by the Legislature or by municipal ordinances; that, if it did not have the effect of directly repealing local ordinances, it was intended as a "uniform law for the whole state in regard to the regulation of all motor vehicles, and thus do away with the great many automobile ordinances which had so vexed and annoyed the motorists of the state for so long. The circumstances under which the law was passed, and the notorious evils it was meant to remedy, certainly strengthen this view of the meaning of the act and the intention of the Legislature."

Upon this question, the Attorney General of the state, appearing amicus curiæ, contends that the only law now in force upon the subject is the act of 1913; that the effect of that act is to render inoperative ordinances of incorporated cities, towns, and of counties which attempt to regulate the speed of motor vehicles and to impose and collect fines for the violation of such ordinances.

[1] Except as to "municipal affairs" concerning which cities having freehold charters (Merced is not among them) are, by the Constitution, given exclusive authority to pass ordinances, and except where the state has relinquished control to municipalities, "the state in its sovereign capacity has the original right to control all public streets and highways" (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hopkins, 160 Cal. 116, 116 Pac. 557); and this carries with it the power to make regulations for the use of streets in incorporated cities and towns. Section 36, art. 4, of the Constitution, provides that:

"The Legislature shall have power to establish a system of state highways or to declare any road a state highway. * * *"

This control of the use of public streets has not, so far as we are aware, been relinquished by the state.

[2, 3] Merced is a city of the sixth class, and, as we have seen, its authority goes no further than to "make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws." Section 11, art. 11, Const. If, therefore, the Merced ordinance may be said to conflict with the motor vehicle act, or if this act can reasonably be held to have been intended to supplant all other legislation, state and local, with regard to the subject-matter of the act, clearly the Merced ordinance must stand aside. There may be a conflict where the act of the Legislature follows as well as where it precedes the local ordinance. It is immaterial how or when the conflict arises, if at the time of the alleged violation the ordinance is in conflict with existing general law.

[4] The motor vehicle act very properly provides for different speeds at different places and under different conditions in incorporated cities and towns for the obvious reason that where "the view of the road traffic is obstructed upon approaching an intersecting way," also when "traversing a crossing or intersection of ways," also "in approaching a bridge, dam, trestle, or viaduct," also in "going around corners or a curve in a street or highway," the danger to life and property is increased in direct proportion as the speed is increased. It follows that any reasonable rate of speed, deemed necessary for the protection of life and property, may be prescribed by the state as within its police power.

The Merced ordinance fixes one uniform rate of speed of 12 miles an hour for all parts of the city, whereas the state law limits the speed to 10 miles an hour where the conditions are as last above pointed out, and allows 15 miles an hour in other sections of the city. The Merced ordinance is in unmistakable conflict with the state law in allowing a speed of 12 miles per hour where the state law limits it to 10 miles. The right of the city to regulate the rate of speed is claimed upon the reasoning in the case In re Hoffman, 155 Cal. 114, 99 Pac. 517, 132 Am. St. Rep. 75. In that case the state law was a general regulation for the sale of milk. It did not purport to make regulations for incorporated cities, nor did it purport to limit the power of municipalities to legislate upon that subject. In the present case the motor vehicle act deals specifically with the speed of motor vehicles within incorporated cities and towns, and the regulations differ materially from those applicable to such vehicles operated outside of incorporated municipalities.

[5] In passing through the city of Merced with a motor vehicle the operator might, while endeavoring in good faith to obey the law, find himself driving within his rights under the state law and at the same time be violating the local ordinance, or he might be driving no faster than the ordinance allows, and yet be in violation of the state law. It seems to us that the Merced ordinance in its present form is in irreconcilable conflict with the state law.

[6] But, aside from these considerations, we are of the opinion that the motor vehicle act was intended to provide uniform regulations to govern all persons in operating motor vehicles in incorporated cities and towns, unless it may be where some exceptional conditions in such cities and towns demand a lower rate of speed in some parts thereof than is prescribed by the state law and such conditions clearly appear.

We have given the provisions of the motor vehicle act at some length for the purpose of showing its scope and, if possible, to disclose the intention of the Legislature in enacting it. Its title declares its intention to be to repeal all acts "consistent" as well as "in conflict" with it; in the body of the act public highways are declared to "include any public street, avenue, alley, park, parkway, or public place in any county or incorporated city and county, city or town"; it fixes different rates of speed for vehicles to meet the requirements for safety in traversing the streets of such cities and towns; it directs the local authorities having charge of the streets to assist in the execution of the law by placing "conspicuously thereon at both ends of such closely built up section signs of sufficient size to be easily readable to a person using the highway, bearing the words 'Slow down to ——— miles' (inserting in the blank space preceding the word 'miles' the rate of speed prescribed by law and also an arrow pointing in the direction of the territory where the speed is to be reduced)"; and it defines who are meant by "local authorities"; it punishes a violation of the act by fine and directs that all fines shall be used for road purposes; it appropriates quite a large sum of money to be used by the engineer department and otherwise in carrying out the provisions of the law; it provides for the issuing of licenses to dealers in motor vehicles and to persons operating motor vehicles with which they become entitled to use the highways of the state subject to the regulations prescribed by the act for such use, and all revenue received from the original registration of these vehicles is to be used in the construction and improvement of the state and county highways, divided equally between the state and the county from which the registration comes; and finally it expressly repeals the act of 1905 and its amendatory acts "and all other acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith."

The motor vehicle act, as is plainly manifest, has for its object the regulation of licensing and operating motor vehicles and the raising of revenue for the improvement of the state highways. Its importance as a means of raising revenue for this purpose can at once be seen from the amount derived for the six months ending June 30, 1914. The official reports show that the motor vehicle license amounted for that period to $1,218,466. There were 106,181 auto registrations and 21,701 motorcycle registrations. Besides these, licenses were issued to 635 auto dealers, 184 motorcycle dealers, and 12,316 chauffeurs, all of whom paid license fees which are to be devoted to the same uses. It will be recalled that the Legislature submitted to the people of the state (Stats. 1909, p. 647) a general highway scheme involving a bonded indebtedness of $18,000,000. The act was approved by popular vote at the election in 1910. It was provided, by section 4 of the act, that the moneys derived from the sale of these bonds "shall be used exclusively for the acquisition of the rights of way for and the acquisition and construction of a system of state highways," and the act contemplated a highway system "to constitute a continuous and connected highway system" traversing the Sacramento and San Joaquin valleys and along the Pacific Coast, "connecting the county seats of the several counties through which it passes and joining the centers of population, together with such branch roads as may be necessary to connect therewith the several county seats east and west of such state highway." Section 8 provides:

"All public highways within the state lying within the right of way of said state highway as determined and adopted by the department of engineering shall be and the same shall become a part of the right of way of said state highway, without compensation being paid therefor."

Section 9 (Stats. 1907, p. 218) places the department of engineering in "full possession and control of all roads * * * or other state highways which may hereafter be constructed."

[7] Under this contemplated system, now in course of execution, one or more streets in Merced, as in other county seats, will become a part of the state highway and the right to regulate the speed of vehicles over such streets should be in the state. We think it safe to say that the motor vehicle act is intended in no small degree to supplement the highway act of 1909, for it deals with and regulates the speed of all vehicles over all the highways and all the streets in the state, whether within or without incorporated cities and towns. It is inconceivable that the Legislature, in requiring the "local authorities" to post notices of the speed permitted under state law, contemplated that the local authorities might allow a different speed over the same street and punish the person who exceeded it.

[8] It is suggested by respondent that the direction given in the act to these "local authorities" to post notices requiring persons using the street "to slow down ——— miles," means that the blank space was intended by the Legislature to authorize the municipality to insert therein the speed prescribed by the municipality. Obviously this interpretation is unwarranted.

[9] The motor vehicle act is essentially a revenue law as well as a regulatory measure. To allow incorporated cities and towns unrestricted authority to impose and collect fines for municipal purposes would tend to defeat one of the objects of the act, for it is common knowledge that most of the prosecutions for infractions of speed regulations arise within incorporated cities and towns. The view contended for by respondent would justify every municipality in the state in passing and enforcing ordinances different from the state law and different from each other, thus placing a most vexatious burden upon the users of our streets and highways in compelling them to become familiar with all these statutes. It seems to us that the Legislature intended by the motor vehicle act to avoid this possible confusion in the law governing the speed of motor vehicles.

The writ is granted, and the petitioner is discharged.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by Dudley Sebree and others against C. L. Thompson and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

A. H. Carpenter, of Stockton, for appellants. Everts & Ewing and Geo. Cosgrave, all of Fresno, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by plaintiffs from a judgment in favor of defendants in an action to quiet title.

Joseph McKinney, who was a resident of San Joaquin county, state of California, died there on April 8, 1893, leaving a will, by the terms of which he left his real and personal property to Olive Jennings. He was of negro blood, born in slavery, and was a half-brother of the plaintiffs in this action. They had scarcely remembered him and had lost trace of him. The defendant, J. H. Kyle, who was an attorney practicing in Missouri, having become aware of the terms of McKinney's will and of the conditions of the estate, looked up his half-brothers; and, after having imparted to them the information he possessed concerning the estate, they and he entered into a contract, by the terms of which he was to contest the probate of the will, and to receive for his services a certain specified amount, provided he was successful. At the same time they executed to him a power of attorney, which vested him with certain authority concerning sales and conveyances of property, and the commencement and settlement of lawsuits. The will of McKinney had in the meantime been admitted to probate, and Kyle, who had come to California immediately upon the execution of the contract and power of attorney, after a fruitless effort to effect a compromise with Olive Jennings, filed a petition for the revocation of the probate of the will. This proceeding resulted in a judgment revoking such probate. In due time an appeal was perfected to the Supreme Court by the proponent of the will, and the contestants, apparently fearing the result of the appeal, effected a compromise with Olive Jennings in 1896, under the terms of which the appeal was dismissed, and she received under the compromise a conveyance of certain lands belonging to the estate. As a part of the same transaction, a certain other portion of the estate was conveyed to Kyle in settlement for the legal services he had rendered to plaintiffs. The conveyances thus made were made by Kyle as the attorney in fact for the plaintiffs. Kyle's codefendants claim through him. It is the validity of the deed by Kyle that is questioned in this proceeding.

It has been held in two cases springing out of this transaction that Kyle was not authorized, under the express terms of the power of attorney, to make a conveyance of any of the lands of the estate. Alcorn v. Buschke, 133 Cal. 655, 66 Pac. 15; Alcorn v. Gieseke, 158 Cal. 397, 111 Pac. 98. But it was held in the latter case—as we hold in this

(the facts being substantially the same)—that the deed in question was executed by Kyle with the knowledge and consent of the plaintiffs, and hence was ratified by them. True, according to the plaintiffs' testimony, there was no ratification of the acts of Kyle, but, on the other hand, the evidence shows that they accepted their share of the property and exercised acts of ownership over it, and acquiesced in the division made for 11 years. One of the brothers was here on the ground looking after their interests during the negotiations of settlement and actively participated in effecting the compromise and division of the estate. Kyle also testified that the plaintiffs residing in the East were kept informed by letters of each of the steps taken in the whole matter, and in particular concerning the negotiations for a compromise of the litigation and of the settlement thereof; and that they by letters approved of what he had done in this regard. True, these last-mentioned letters were lost in a fire which destroyed Kyle's office, and therefore could not be introduced in evidence; but this only affected the weight of the evidence. Any further discussion of the evidence is unnecessary, especially as a very complete review of the same is to be found in the case of Alcorn v. Gieseke, supra. From these considerations it appears that the finding upholding the validity of the deed in controversy is supported by the evidence.

Other points in the case, challenging the sufficiency of the pleadings on behalf of the defendants, have less merit than the one just discussed, and accordingly no comment need be made upon them.

Judgment affirmed.

INSURANCE ⚡256—FIDELITY INSURANCE—AVOIDANCE FOR BREACH OF WARRANTY.

Insured's false answers or statements in his letter or application for an indemnity bond against loss through his cashier, that the cashier had never been in arrears, that he knew no reason why the bond should not be issued, and that he was not indebted to him, declared by the policy to be warranties and part of the contract, were warranties broken in their inception, and, under Civ. Code, § 2612, the policy never attached to the risk; and the fact that insured made such statements in good faith and without negligence in the examination of its books, which would have disclosed the cashier's prior embezzlement, was immaterial.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Stanley A. Smith, Judge.

Action by the Wolverine Brass Works, Incorporated, against the Pacific Coast Casualty Company of San Francisco. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Myrick & Deering, of San Francisco (James Walter Scott, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant. Oliver Ellsworth, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial in an action upon a policy of insurance, issued by defendant, insuring the plaintiff against loss through the dishonesty of one Edwin J. Pope, its employé.

Some time prior to the 15th day of July, 1910, Edwin J. Pope, who at that time was employed by plaintiff as cashier, applied to the defendant for an indemnity bond in a certain sum. Thereupon defendant addressed a letter to plaintiff containing certain questions to be answered by it. Among these were:

"Has he [referring to Pope] ever been in arrears with you, or do you know of any reason why this bond should not be issued?" and "Is he now in debt to you?"

To both questions the plaintiff, through one of its officers, answered, "No." The document containing the questions with their answers was returned to the defendant about the 18th day of July, and about a month later the indemnity bond upon which the present suit is brought was issued, relating back to June 15, 1910, as the date on which the risk was to take effect. Within the life of the bond Pope embezzled $1,255.79 from the plaintiff. At the trial it was also established that there had been a prior embezzlement by Pope, while in the employ of the plaintiff, concerning which, however, the testimony shows that plaintiff was ignorant at the time of the negotiations for the present bond.

According to one of the stipulations of the policy, the statements or answers made in the letter of July 15th for the purpose of procuring the bond were declared to be warranties and part of the contract of insurance.

At the conclusion of plaintiff's case, which showed the facts above detailed, defendant moved for a nonsuit, which was denied; whereupon, and without any testimony being introduced by the defendant, the case was submitted to the jury, with the result already indicated.

We think that the defendant's contention must be sustained that under the proof the court should have directed a verdict in its favor. The above-mentioned warranties being false, the policy issued in reliance upon them was, in our opinion, void ab initio. When a warranty is broken in its inception, the policy never attaches to the risk which it purports to cover. Civ. Code, § 2612; Wenzel v. Commercial Ins. Co., 67 Cal. 438, 7 Pac. 817.

"As a warranty is in the nature of a condition precedent to the validity of the policy, and must be literally true, if the fact warranted is not true, there is a breach of the warranty. It follows as a matter of course that a breach of warranty will avoid the policy." Cooley's Briefs on Insurance, vol. 3, p. 1950.

Plaintiff does not deny this as a sound proposition of law, nor is it denied, nor could it well be, that, so far as the phraseology of the bond and application therefor is concerned, the truth of the answers to the questions propounded in the application is warranted by the plaintiff. It claims, however, that inasmuch as the evidence showed that those answers were made in good faith, and without any negligence in the examination of the books—which might have led, but did not, to a knowledge of the prior embezzlement—the bond is valid, and the judgment should consequently stand. But the answers quoted, relating as they do to the existence of arrears by Pope in his then employment, had a direct and vital bearing upon the contract of insurance (Frost on Guaranty Insurance, 69), and they being, as we have seen, warranties, it is not important, according to the great weight of authority, that the party making them really believed them to be true. Being false in fact, the contract was thereby rendered void. In American Credit Indemnity Co. v. Carrollton, etc., Co., 36 C. C. A. 671, 95 Fed. 111, it is said:

"When there is a distinct agreement that an application for insurance is a part of the contract, and the statements in the application are expressly declared to be warranties, they are to be treated as such, and not merely as representations, and must be strictly true, or the policy will not take effect."

So in Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. France, 91 U. S. 510, 23 L. Ed. 401, the same rule is declared:

"It is only necessary to reiterate that all the statements contained in the proposal must be true; that the materiality of such statements is removed from the consideration of a court or jury by the agreement of the parties that such statements are absolutely true; and that, if untrue in any respect, the policy shall be void."

In that case, as in this, the application was made the basis of the policy.

In Clemans v. Supreme Assembly R. S. of G. F., 131 N. Y. 485, 30 N. E. 496, 16 L. R. A. 33, the court says:

"The answer was a warranty, and upon this evidence there was a breach thereof. * * * It is not important that the party making the warranty really believed in its entire truth. If it be false, it avoids the contract."

See, also, Cobb v. Covenant Mut. Benefit Ass'n, 153 Mass. 176, 26 N. E. 230, 10 L. R. A. 666, 25 Am. St. Rep. 619; Model Mill Co. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 1 Tenn. Ch. App. 365.

It follows that the judgment and order should be reversed, and it is so ordered.

MECHANICS' LIENS § 33—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—"IMPROVEMENT."

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1191, providing that any person who, at the request of the owner of any lot in any city or town, grades, fills in, or "otherwise improves the same," or makes any improvements in connection therewith, has a lien for the work done and materials furnished, one planting a vineyard has a lien therefor, though he did not furnish the materials, since the planting of a vineyard is the making of an "improvement," which refers generally to those things which are permanent, and since there is no distinction between one furnishing materials and the one performing labor in effectuating an improvement.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by Joseph Grom against Mary Center and another. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

James A. Nowland, of St. Helena, and Clarence N. Riggins, of Napa, for appellants. E. S. Bell, of Napa, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The action was to foreclose a lien for planting a vineyard on the property of said Mary Center, situated within the incorporated limits of the town of St. Helena.

The particular allegation of the complaint important here is as follows:

"That in the months of March and April, 1912, said Mary Center and one Richard W. Fealy, a defendant herein, caused a vineyard to be planted upon said land, and that during the setting out of the same, and at their request, the plaintiff furnished and performed the labor actually used in planting said vineyard, and that they and the plaintiff mutually agreed on or about the 22d of March, 1912, that the said plaintiff should plant said vineyard on said land; that he should commence said planting immediately and do said work in a satisfactory manner; and that upon completion thereof he should be paid by said defendants therefor at the rate of two cents a vine, which was and is the reasonable value of said work at said time and place."

This is followed by allegations of the faithful performance of the work by plaintiff and of the amount still due and unpaid. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained; it being the opinion of the lower court that it was not a proper case for a lien.

The statutory provision upon which appellant relies is the portion we have italicized of section 1191 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as follows:

"Any person who, at the request of the reputed owner of any lot in any incorporated city or town, grades, fills in, or otherwise improves the same, or the street or sidewalk in front of or adjoining the same, or constructs any areas, or vaults, or cellars, or rooms, under said sidewalks, or makes any improvements in connection therewith, has a lien upon said lot for his work done and materials furnished."

While no case entirely like this has been found, appellant believes that the situation is covered by the principles announced in 22 Cyc. 5; California Portland Cement Co. v. Wentworth Hotel Co., 16 Cal. App. 692, 118 Pac. 103, 113; Donehoo v. Johnson, 113 Ala. 126, 21 South. 70; Thompson v. Buckner (Ky.) 40 S. W. 915; Gibson v. Fields, 79 Kan. 38, 98 Pac. 1112, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 378, 131 Am. St. Rep. 278, 17 Ann. Cas. 405.

In Cyc., supra, it is declared that an "improvement is more extensive than ordinary repairs and enhances, in a substantial degree, the value of the property"; and, "when the term 'improvements' is used, reference is generally had to those only which are permanent or beneficial."

In California P. C. Co. v. Wentworth, supra, it was held by the District Court of Appeal for the Second District that a lien was properly allowed for the furnishing of trees, shrubs, plants, flowers, seeds, bulbs, etc., for a hotel lot in the city of Pasadena; the court saying that:

"The furnishing and planting of seeds, trees, and shrubs, and the caring for the same for such a period of time as would insure that the seeds had become well started and that the plants and trees were thoroughly settled in the ground, would seem to be an improvement to the real estate, which was among those intended to be included in the provisions of section 1191, Code of Civil Procedure. It is probably not true that under the terms of this section a gardener or tiller of the soil could claim a lien by reason of labor expended in the general care of trees or crops, but under the contract made by Chisholm it appears that he was only to plant the seeds, trees, flowers, shrubs, etc., and to see that they were well started after being placed in the ground."

In the Alabama case, supra, the question was as to whether an apple orchard constituted "a permanent improvement," and the court said:

"The evidence discloses that the value of the land itself was enhanced by the orchard, and that such improvements are permanent we do not think can admit of controversy. 10 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 243, and notes."

In Thompson v. Buckner, supra, the Court of Appeals of Kentucky held that a good stand of clover and orchard grass must be regarded as an improvement, since it materially enhanced the salable value of the land.

In the Kansas case, supra, it was declared that:

"While it is recognized as the general rule that the plowing and cultivation of land therefore under cultivation does not constitute a 'permanent improvement,' the breaking and reducing of wild lands to cultivation does constitute such improvement."

In the note to said case, as reported in 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 378, are collated many decisions as to what comes within the purview of "improvements," to which reference may be had for further instances.

We can see no ground for holding that the planting of a vineyard is any less an improvement to the land than "the planting of lawns and shrubbery" or "of an apple orchard" or "of clover and meadow grass" or "the breaking and reducing of wild lands to cultivation." The planting of a vineyard is generally supposed to be, not only an important and valuable improvement to the land, but one of a lasting and somewhat permanent nature. It is assuredly supposed to enhance the value of the land, and the vines become a vital part of the realty. It is true that appellant did not furnish the vines, but the statute makes no distinction between the one who furnishes the material and him who performs the labor in effectuating the improvement. The lien is granted for the "work done and materials furnished." If the plaintiff had furnished the vines as well as planted them, it seems that no question could be raised that he had improved the land and would clearly be entitled to the lien. Since, however, the work of improving the land, as well as the contribution of material for such purpose, is made by the statute a basis for the claim of lien, the present case could be no different in principle from the contingency suggested. In other words, the plain meaning of the statute is that whoever contributes to the substantial improvement of the lot, either by furnishing work or material, is entitled to the privilege of so enforcing his claim.

"That the meaning and the purpose for which the said statute was enacted was to create a lien for all work performed by a contractor or a person in grading a street, or placing a sidewalk in front of one's property, or for filling a lot within the incorporated limits of a city, and not for work performed by one in the cultivation or tilling of another's land."

But this view ignores the significance of the expression "or otherwise improves the same," and loses sight of the said decision of the appellate court and cases from the Supreme Court there cited. It may be said, also, that the planting of a vineyard stands on an entirely different footing from the ordinary cultivation of the soil. It may be doubted whether, for the latter, said section affords a lien, since that is probably not such improvement as the statute exacts.

It may be suggested that what we understand to be the plain and natural construction of said statute does not seem to involve any injustice, and it is in harmony with the manifest policy of the law to protect those who furnish labor or material to the advantage of the owners of property. In the nature of things, there seems no stronger reason for allowing a lien to one who grades or fills in the lot than to him who effects or contributes to the improvement herein considered.

The only case cited by respondents in support of their position is Nanz v. Cumberland Gap Park Co., 103 Tenn. 306, 52 S. W. 999, 47

L. R. A. 273, 76 Am. St. Rep. 650. In that case the court reaffirmed the well-established rule that a liberal construction should be given to what is known as the mechanics' lien law, but it is declared that this applies only in favor of parties who are clearly entitled to such lien under the statute. Attention is called to the fact that the mechanics' lien law is purely a creation of and regulated by the statute, and therefore but little aid can be derived by the courts of one state from decisions in other states, unless the statutes are identical, "which is probably not the case in any two states in the Union." Many of the decisions are reviewed, and the court proceeds:

"These holdings are largely based, if not altogether, upon the special wording and phraseology of the statutes under which they are made; and, while they are instructive, they are not controlling under our statute. In the present case, the contention is that the lien rests upon a proper construction of the terms used in the statute, 'improvements made'; but we think it evident, from a reading of the statute, that the improvements therein referred to are such as buildings and structures. The latter part of the section uses the expression 'building contemplated in this section'; and this construction of these terms is strengthened by the use and the connection in which they are used * * * in other sections. * * * In the case at bar, the complainants 'improved' the property by putting on it flowers, shrubs, trees, and by grading and probably graveling the grounds and walks, but they made no erections, structures, buildings, fixtures, or machinery."

And therefore it was held that no lien would attach for such "improvements." The particular statute therein construed provides:

"There shall be a lien upon any lot of ground or tract of land upon which a house has been constructed, built or repaired or fixtures or machinery furnished or erected or improvements made, by special contract with the owner or his agent, in favor of the mechanic or undertaker, founder or machinist, who does the work, or any part of the work, or furnishes the materials or any part of the materials or puts thereon any fixtures, machinery or material, either of wood or metal, and in favor of all persons who do any portion of the work or furnish any portion of the material for the building contemplated in this section."

The difference between that section and the one herein involved is quite manifest. In fact, said section 1191, Code of Civil Procedure, does not contemplate a building at all, but provides for improvements to the lot or to the street or sidewalk in front of or adjoining the same.

As we conceive it, the only ground upon which could be excluded the improvement herein made would be to hold that the principle of ejusdem generis is applicable to the provision "grades, fills in, or otherwise improves the same," but this would be an arbitrary construction of the terms employed.

The judgment is therefore reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; W. D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by the Asbestos Manufacturing & Supply Company against the Lennig-Rapple Engineering Company, a copartnership, and others. Judgment for the plaintiff against the Lennig-Rapple Engineering Company, and that defendant appeals. Affirmed.

C. F. Kimball, of San Francisco, for appellant. Edwin H. Williams, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiff brings the action to recover for material and labor which it is alleged defendants, about July 1, 1910, contracted with plaintiff to furnish, and that defendants agreed to pay therefor the sum of $1,300; alleged full performance on plaintiff's part and the completion and acceptance of the work, about February 15, 1912; that at all the times mentioned in the complaint the defendant Lennig Engineering Company, and plaintiff, Asbestos Manufacturing & Supply Company, were corporations, and that defendants E. B. Lennig and J. W. Rapple constituted the copartnership of Lennig-Rapple Engineering Company. In a second count the sum of $34.83 is claimed for extra materials furnished. Said materials were furnished and labor performed upon the Hall of Justice, in San Francisco.

The court granted a nonsuit as to defendants Lennig Engineering Company, a corporation, and E. B. Lennig, as an individual, and J. W. Rapple, as an individual, on the authority of Redwood City Salt Co. v. Whitney, 153 Cal. 421, 423, 95 Pac. 885. Judgment passed only against Lennig-Rapple Engineering Company, a copartnership composed of E. B. Lennig and J. W. Rapple. We need, therefore, concern ourselves only with the answer of this defendant and its defense to the action, although the answer is jointly made by the copartnership and the said members thereof. They deny the making of the alleged or any contract with plaintiff; admit the alleged copartnership, and that it existed until the 30th day of December, 1910, when it was dissolved, and plaintiff had notice thereof soon thereafter; that, upon the dissolution of said copartnership, defendant E. B. Lennig agreed in writing to assume all liabilities of said copartnership, "and continued to carry on the business formerly conducted by the said copartnership until the incorporation of the defendant Lennig Engineering Company," which, it is alleged, was not organized or incorporated until on or about the 5th day of August, 1911; admit that "certain work was completed by plaintiff on said structure on or about February 15, 1912," but deny that the said work was accepted by defendants; allege that at the time of the dissolution of said copartnership as aforesaid "there was nothing due or owing to plaintiff, * * * and that subsequent to said dissolution of said copartnership and long prior to the commencement of this action the said plaintiff accepted the said corporation defendant, Lennig Engineering Company, as its debtor for all of its claims, * * * and released these defendants and each of them from all liability thereon, and thereafter billed all of its said claims to said corporation defendant." Similar answer is made to the second count of the complaint.

The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and judgment went for plaintiff against the Lennig-Rapple Engineering Company, a copartnership composed of E. B. Lennig and J. W. Rapple, defendants, for the sum of $919.83, with interest from April 13, 1912, the date of the commencement of this action. From a judgment and from the order denying its motion for a new trial this defendant appeals.

The court found as facts:

"That, on or about July 1, 1910, said defendant employed plaintiff to perform certain labor and furnish certain materials for the purpose alleged in the complaint, and agreed to pay therefor the sum of $1,300, in payments as alleged; that plaintiff duly performed all the conditions of the agreement, which was fully completed February 15, 1912; that said defendant has paid to plaintiff, on account of said agreement, the sum of $375, and plaintiff has allowed the sum of $40 as a credit thereon, and no more, leaving a balance due of $885; that plaintiff furnished to said defendant extra material of the value of $34.85, at its request, for which it promised to pay said sum; that at no time prior or subsequent to December 30, 1910, did plaintiff accept said Lennig Engineering Company, or any other person, for any of said materials or labor, as its debtor, and plaintiff did not at any time release said Lennig-Rapple Engineering Company, and that plaintiff did not bill said claims or any of them to said Lennig Engineering Company."

As its conclusion of law, the court found that plaintiff was entitled to judgment for $919.83, with interest from April 13, 1912, the date of the commencement of the action.

It was stipulated at the trial that plaintiff actually performed the labor and furnished the materials to the extent claimed in the complaint. It was also stipulated that defendant copartnership was dissolved December 30, 1910, defendant E. B. Lennig having withdrawn therefrom, and that plaintiff had notice of this fact shortly thereafter. It was also stipulated that the Lennig Engineering Company was incorporated August 15, 1911, all of which plaintiff had notice soon thereafter, and that, from December 30, 1910, until the incorporation of said company, E. B. Lennig carried on business, with plaintiff's knowledge, under the name of Lennig Engineering Company.

The alleged contract was in writing and consisted of a letter written by plaintiff to defendant Lennig-Rapple Engineering Company, of date July 1, 1910, followed by another letter dated July 7, 1910, containing specifications of the labor and materials to be furnished in performing the contract. Defendant copartnership replied, of date August 1, 1910.

"We are pleased to accept your proposition under date of July 1st, 1910. All the work to be performed in strict accordance with plans and specifications of the city architect and to be done to his entire satisfaction. Payments to be made as stipulated in your letter under date of July 7th, 1910."

It appeared that some of the labor was performed and some of the materials furnished after December 30, 1910. The job was not completed, in fact, until in February, 1912.

The only questions presented by appellant we give in the language of its brief:

"(1) Upon receiving notice of the dissolution of the partnership, plaintiff could not by furnishing labor and materials to the continuing partner alone thereby impose a liability therefor upon the retiring partner; and (2) in no event could a judgment be rendered against the partnership which almost two years before the trial had been dissolved, and at the time of the judgment had no existence either in fact or in law. If the retiring partner can be held for the price of labor and materials furnished after the dissolution, the only proper judgment could be against E. B. Lennig and J. W. Rapple, formerly doing business as copartners under the name of Lennig-Rapple Engineering Company. The judgment against a partnership which did not exist was improper."

Appellant concedes that there was no "novation or substitution of the continuing partner, Lennig, in the place of the partnership as plaintiff's debtor." Appellant concedes also that whatever was due at the time of the dissolution (which it appeared was about $125) is justly chargeable against the retiring partner.

The contention simply is this: That under the facts plaintiff could not impose a liability upon the retiring partner which the court did by its judgment against the copartnership; and, this, because the judgment is collectible not only out of partnership assets, but also out of the assets of the retiring partner, who in this instance was served with process and appeared in the case.

Respondent's contention is "that where a partnership enters into a written contract, and promises to pay a certain price for work which it orders done, it is absolutely bound by its promise the same as an individual or corporation would be," and that upon the dissolution of the partnership with or without notice to the other party its liability as a partnership continues, unless terminated in some recognized legal manner—citing Gilmore on Partnership, § 80, where it is said:

"The liability on all partnership obligations which have been properly created during the continuance of the relationship can be terminated only in one of the methods recognized by law for the termination of joint contracts in general, viz., payment, release, merger, novation."

[1] The general rule is stated in Cyc. as follows:

"The dissolution of a firm does not deprive a partner of the power to perform on behalf of the firm existing contracts, nor does it relieve him of the duty of having them performed. On the other hand, such dissolution does not ordinarily absolve third persons from their contractual obligations to the firm." 30 Cyc. 661.

There was evidence sufficient to support the findings. If the labor and material had been furnished upon separate orders given as required from time to time for different purposes, the liability thus arising would take the date of the order and defendant's contention, and the cases cited by it might have some application. Defendant copartnership contracted to pay to plaintiff a certain gross sum ($1,300) for certain specific materials and certain labor necessary to the completion of a certain specific job. The obligation to perform on plaintiff's part was to perform an entire and indivisible piece of work, and reciprocally, defendant's obligation was to pay a specified sum for such work. This obligation was a continuing obligation of the partnership as constituted when the obligation was entered into. The dissolution of a partnership by the withdrawal of a member will not affect its liability upon contracts made while he was a member, unless such member is relieved from liability by some act of the person dealing with the firm. In the case here plaintiff did no act that worked the release of the withdrawing member. The court found that neither prior nor subsequent to the dissolution of the firm did plaintiff accept any person as its debtor other than the partnership, nor did it at any time release the partnership. The fact that partners among themselves agree, upon a dissolution, that a remaining partner shall assume all partnership liabilities, cannot affect the rights of persons who before dissolution had contracted with the firm, unless such person does some act which the law will say manifests an intention to release the partnership.

[2] As to the small sum for extras, we see no reason why it should not be recovered, inasmuch as the materials were necessary to complete the work contracted for.

[3] The copartnership was a legal entity, and as such, could be sued, and judgment was properly entered against it. Code Civ. Proc. § 388; John Bollman Co. v. S. Bachman & Co., 16 Cal. App. 589, 117 Pac. 690, 122 Pac. 835; Goodlet v. St. Elmo Investment Co., 94 Cal. 297, 29 Pac. 505.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; H. C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by the Town of St. Helena against Fred S. Ewer and the St. Helena Water Company. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

James A. Nowland, of St. Helena, for appellant. T. C. Coogan, of San Francisco, and Percy S. King, of Napa, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiff brings the action to recover from defendants $7\frac{7}{8}$ per cent. of the gross annual receipts collected by defendants for water supplied to the plaintiff and its inhabitants for the five years commencing 1907 and ending 1911, stated in seven separate counts. The amended complaint was filed August 5, 1912. It does not appear when the original complaint was filed. A general and special demurrer to the amended complaint was sustained, without leave to amend, and judgment passed for defendants that plaintiff take nothing by its action and that the action be dismissed.

It appears, from the amended complaint that on September 19, 1899, plaintiff passed a resolution directing the town clerk to advertise for bids for the sale of a franchise for supplying said town and its inhabitants with water, for domestic and general purposes, for a term of 50 years. The form of ordinance to be used in granting the franchise was adopted, and it was ordered:

"That no bids, proposals, or tenders will be received for a single amount stated, but that all bids, tenders, or proposals must be for the payment in lawful money of the United States of a stated per centum of the gross annual receipts of the grantee, arising from its use, operation, or possession, and further stating that no percentage will be paid for the first five years succeeding the publication of such franchise, but that thereafter such percentage will be payable annually, and shall in no case be less than three per centum per annum upon the said gross annual receipts."

The clerk, on September 22, 1899, gave notice, pursuant to said resolution and orders, inviting sealed proposals and, among other things, stated:

"That the character of such franchise or privilege proposed to be granted, the conditions, limitations, and provisos under which the same will be granted, and the term of its continuance is more fully set out and will appear by reference to the said resolution, hereinabove referred to, to which said resolution reference is hereby expressly made for further and fuller particulars.

"No bid or tender will be received of a single sum or amount stated, but all bids must be for the payment, in lawful money of the United States, of a stated per cent. of the gross annual receipts of the person, partnership, or corporation or other authority to whom the franchise or privilege is awarded, arising from its use, operation, or possession.

"That no percentage shall be paid for the first five years succeeding the date of the franchise, but thereafter such percentage shall be paid annually, and shall be in no case less than three per cent. per annum upon such gross annual receipts, the franchise to be forfeited by failure to make the payments stated, in the bid upon which the award is made.

"Bidders must file with each bid, tender, or proposal, a bond to the town of St. Helena, with at least two good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the board of trustees of the said town, in a penal amount of $5,000, conditioned that such bidder shall well and truly observe, fulfill, and perform each and all of the terms, conditions and obligations of such franchise, in case the same be awarded to him."

Pursuant to this notice, which was duly advertised in a newspaper, defendant Ewer submitted the following to the board of trustees:

"The undersigned hereby bids and tenders seven and seven-eighths ($7\frac{7}{8}$) per cent. of the gross annual receipts arising from the use, operation, or possession of the franchise offered for sale by your honorable board in accordance with the inclosed and attached advertisement 'Inviting Bids or Tenders for Sale of a Franchise,' dated September 22, 1899, which is hereby referred to for fuller particulars and which advertisement is made a part hereof.

"[Signed] F. S. Ewer."

On December 12, 1899, the board of trustees duly passed ordinance No. 129, granting said franchise, and on December 21, 1899, defendant Ewer notified the trustees, in writing, as follows:

"I hereby accept the franchise granted to me by your honorable board under Ordinance No. 129, and published in the St. Helena Sentinel, under date of December 21st, 1899.

"Yours truly, [Signed] Fred S. Ewer."

Ordinance 129 grants "to Fred S. Ewer, his heirs and assigns, the right, privilege and franchise to construct, establish, maintain and operate a system of waterworks for the purpose of supplying to the town of St. Helena and its inhabitants," etc. Then follow provisions granting right of way over streets, alleys, etc.; the right to lay pipes, maintain reservoirs, and the like. The term of the franchise is 50 years. Rates to be charged and the manner of laying down pipes, etc., are subject at all times to be regulated by the town. Other provisions follow which need not be given. It was provided, also, that "nothing herein contained shall be construed in any manner as granting an exclusive franchise." It is alleged in the amended complaint that Ewer assigned all of his interest in said franchise to defendant St. Helena Water Company in 1901.

[1] Appellant says in its brief:

"That while the general structure (of the ordinance) follows the statute (Stats. 1897, p. 135), there is a clause inserted therein which places it entirely without the statute."

The clause referred to reads, "Nothing herein contained shall be construed in any manner as granting an exclusive franchise," and hence, it is claimed, takes the case out of the operation of the decision in Pereria v. Wallace, 129 Cal. 397, 62 Pac. 61, in which the act of 1897 was held to be unconstitutional. It is further contended that, while that decision so decided, the bidder for a franchise has the right, independently of the statute, to enter into a private contract with the trustees of the town on terms proposed by or agreeable to him.

Appellant still further contends that, conceding the contract to pay the claim here made to be invalid, it is not illegal or unlawful, and hence defendant is estopped to dispute its validity.

It was held, in Pereria v. Wallace, supra, that the act of 1897, in so far as it attempted to provide a method of sale of franchises for the purpose of supplying municipalities with light or water, was unconstitutional, and that the Legislature cannot modify or change the provisions of section 19, article 11 of the Constitution, as to the privileges therein granted.

The case of People v. Stephens, 62 Cal. 209, decided that the section and article of the Constitution just referred to granted the privileges therein specified without legislative action, and in Pereria v. Wallace, supra, the court said:

"The Constitution intended that there should be no restriction upon competition in supplying those prime necessities, as would necessarily result if the privilege would only be granted to the highest bidder, for such bidder would necessarily secure an exclusive right to the exercise of the franchise, the only condition imposed by the Constitution being the right of the municipality to 'regulate the charges thereof.'"

The question is discussed in more recent cases, among them In re Johnston, 137 Cal. 115, 69 Pac. 973; Stockton Gas, etc., Co. v. San Joaquin County, 148 Cal. 313, 83 Pac. 54, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174, 7 Ann. Cas. 511; Clark v. Los Angeles, 160 Cal. 30, 39, 116 Pac. 722; Matter of Russell, 163 Cal. 668, 126 Pac. 875, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 152. Speaking of the constitutional provision above referred to, the court said, in Re Johnston, supra:

"When the sovereign authority of the state, either in its Constitution or through its Legislature, has created a right and expressed and defined the conditions under which it may be enjoyed, it is not within the province of a municipality where such right is sought to be exercised or enjoyed to impose additional burdens as a condition to its exercise."

[2] It is urged that in declaring in the ordinance that "nothing herein contained shall be construed in any manner as granting an exclusive franchise" relieves it from any constitutional inhibition and differentiates it from the acts of municipalities brought under review in the cases cited. We cannot so regard the effect of the ordinance. The town authorities had no power to impose the condition to granting the franchise that the successful bidder should pay a per cent. of the "gross annual receipts, the franchise to be forfeited by failure to make the payments stated in the bid on which the award is made." This, we think, was a burden placed upon the bidder unauthorized by the Constitution. The declaration that the franchise should not be regarded as exclusive did no more than to announce what would have been true without it, for the Constitution gives to every person the right to use the public streets of a municipality for the purposes indicated, and, as the cases cited hold, it deprives not only the municipality from granting but the Legislature from authorizing the granting of franchises upon conditions other than those specified in the Constitution. Clark v. Los Angeles, supra.

[3] The contention that the claim may be enforced as the subject of private contract between Ewer and the town cannot be maintained. The facts alleged show beyond dispute that in dealing with the public, as respondent points out, the municipality was acting in its legislative capacity, and that its action is not referable, for its support, to the power of making contracts. In City of South Pasadena v. Los Angeles, etc., Co., 109 Cal. 315, 41 Pac. 1093, the court said:

"The streets of a city are not held as corporate or municipal property, and are not subject to the power of contractual disposition, like the property of an individual."

[4] Plaintiff cannot avoid the restraining effect of the Constitution by attempting to convert its legislative acts into contracts. The essence of the ordinance is found in the grant of a franchise for the use of the streets of St. Helena to supply the town and its inhabitants with water, which is purely a legislative act. We cannot escape the fact that the grant was made on condition that the grantee pay for the privilege granted—a condition, as we have seen, which is beyond the power of the municipality to impose. It is no answer that defendant voluntarily entered into the engagement. In its legal sense his acceptance was not voluntary for the reason that his bid would not, nor could that of any other person, have been received without agreeing that he would pay at least three per cent. of his gross annual receipts. In fact, probably under the spur of competition, defendant Ewer bid 7 $\frac{7}{8}$ per cent. In the Arcata Case, which was an action to recover on a bond given in connection with a grant to build an exclusive railroad, the court said:

"We do not overlook the allegation that the bond was voluntarily given by the appellants. But, reading the allegation in connection with the averments showing that the giving of such bond was a condition upon which the trustees, by their ordinance, made the grant of the franchise depend, it means no more than that the grantees accepted the franchise upon the only terms available. They consented to furnish the undertaking, but their consent was required in order to enable them to take any benefit under the grant."

[5] Nor do we think the plea of estoppel available to plaintiff. The town had no power to impose the condition that the bidder should pay a per cent. of his gross annual earnings.

In the case of City of Arcata v. Green, 156 Cal. 759, 764, 106 Pac. 86, 88, the court said:

"A party contracting with a city regarding a subject-matter within the scope of the city's powers may, where he has received the benefit of the contract, be precluded from asserting that the contract was not, on the part of the city, executed in the manner required by law. The doctrine, however, cannot be made to cover contracts entirely beyond the range of municipal authority."

The town of St. Helena had no authority to require the grantee of a franchise to pay any part of the gross proceeds of the franchise as a condition to its enjoyment. "There is no room for the application of the doctrine of estoppel." Foxen v. City of Santa Barbara, 166 Cal. 77, 83, 134 Pac. 1142, 1145.

We do not find it necessary to consider the special demurrer. We are satisfied that the amended complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

The judgment is affirmed.

SCHIRMER v. UNION BREWING & MALTING CO. (Civ. 1302.)

1. REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS ⚡44—PAROL EVIDENCE.

Under Civ. Code, § 3399, providing for reformation when, through fraud or mutual mistake, or a mistake of one party, known or suspected by the other, a contract does not express the intention of the parties, and section 3401, providing that in revising a written instrument the court may inquire what it was intended to mean, and is not confined to what the language of the instrument was intended to be, parol evidence is admissible to correct a contract which, through mistake, did not express the intention of the parties.

2. PLEADING ⚡428—SUFFICIENCY—WAIVER OF OBJECTION.

Civ. Code, § 3399, provides for the reformation of instruments which, through mutual mistake, or mistake of one of the parties, known or suspected by the other, do not express the parties' intention. Defendant's cross-complaint alleged that the contract, through mistake, did not express the intention of the parties. Held that, while the failure of the cross-complaint to allege the nature of the mistake might have been ground for special demurrer, defendant was not precluded from giving evidence of the mistake where plaintiff answered without objection.

3. REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS ⚡11—MISTAKE—MATERIAL MISTAKE.

Where a purchaser made the seller's guaranty that the freight rate on the goods bought which were to be delivered to the carrier at the point of sale a condition of the contract, such provision was material, and, having been omitted by mistake, the instrument would be reformed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Reformation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 24-27, 32-41; Dec. Dig. ⚡11.]

4. REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS ⚡11 — RIGHT TO—LATENT AMBIGUITY—"F. O. B."

A contract of sale provided for delivery of the article f. o. b. at place of sale, and the seller agreed to guarantee that the freight rate from the place of sale to the point of destination should not exceed a fixed sum. Held that, as the term "f. o. b." means free on board, or that the goods should be delivered to the carrier free from drayage charges, the reformation of the contract to include the guaranty of the freight rate would not create a latent ambiguity; there being no conflict between the provisions (citing Words and Phrases, Free on Board).

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; B. V. Sargent, Judge.

Action by O. H. Schirmer against the Union Brewing & Malting Company. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

G. Gunzendorfer, for San Francisco, for appellant. H. G. W. Dinkelspiel and John R. Jones, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiff brings the action as assignee of the Loew Manufacturing Company, a corporation, for the sum of $481, which, plaintiff alleges in his complaint, is the balance due on a written contract, entered into on January 22, 1907, whereby defendant agreed to purchase from plaintiff's assignor "one No. 4 New Era pasteurizer, having a capacity of one hundred barrels, together with trucks, beams, regulators, thermostats and thermometer, centrifugal pump and pulley, for the agreed sum of $3,800.00." It is alleged that said corporation delivered said merchandise to defendant, and that defendant has paid therefor the sum of $3,319, and no more, leaving $481 due and unpaid.

Defendant demurred generally and specially, which being overruled, it answered; admitted the execution of a written contract on the day claimed, which is attached to the complaint as part thereof, for the purchase of said articles at the price named, "but it was agreed by said Loew Manufacturing Company and this defendant that the railroad rate for transportation of the said pasteurizer would be $1.40 per 100 pounds, which said rate said Loew Manufacturing Company guaranteed to defendant, and that said rate was the sole consideration for the execution of said agreement and the purchase by defendant from said Loew Manufacturing Company of the said pasteurizer and appurtenants"; that, when said merchandise was received by defendant, the transportation company demanded $3 per 100 pounds, being $1.60 per 100 pounds in excess of the agreement and guarantee made by said Loew Company; that defendant was obliged to pay such excess, amounting to $481, and immediately thereafter so notified said Loew Company, and demanded credit for the same.

By way of affirmative relief and cross-complaint, defendant sets forth the said written contract; alleges that plaintiff "at all times hereinafter mentioned has been and now is the agent of said Loew Manufacturing Company, and that plaintiff has at all times hereinafter mentioned had actual and personal knowledge of all the facts hereinafter alleged." Defendant, further answering, alleges: That defendant entered into a written agreement with said Loew Manufacturing Company, "acting through its agent, the plaintiff above named, as its resident agent, whereby this defendant agreed to buy from said Loew Manufacturing Company, and said company agreed to sell to this defendant [describing the property], but conditioned nevertheless and subject to a freight rate from said city of Cleveland, Ohio, to the city of San Francisco at $1.40 per 100 pounds"; that but for said agreement and guarantee defendant would not have made the purchase, "and this defendant at all times believed that the said contract and agreement with the said Loew Manufacturing Company contained the said agreement and guaranty that the freight rate of said pasteurizer and appurtenants would be $1.40 per 100 pounds"; that "it was the agreement and intention of this defendant and of said the Loew Manufacturing Company that the said written agreement should truly express and set forth all the terms and conditions of the aforesaid agreement between them, particularly that portion of the agreement by which said Loew Manufacturing Company agreed and guaranteed that the freight rate of said pasteurizer and appurtenants should be at the rate of $1.40 per 100 pounds"; that "by mistake and inadvertence said written agreement did not truly represent nor fully and truly express the agreement and particulars thereof with reference to the said freight rate"; that "defendant believed that the said contract and agreement and guarantee with respect to the said freight rate was contained in and formed part of said written agreement, and this defendant did not discover that the same was omitted therefrom until after the commencement of this action"; that, unless said contract is reformed and corrected so as to express the true intention of defendant and of the said Loew Manufacturing Company as alleged, defendant will be damaged in the sum of $481. Defendant prays that said contract be reformed to express the true intention of the parties thereto and as in the cross-complaint alleged, and, when so corrected, it be adjudged that neither plaintiff nor said Loew Manufacturing Company has any claim against defendant.

The contract is of considerable length, and need not be set forth in its entirety. Among other provisions are the following:

"Said party of the second part [defendant] hereby agrees to pay said party of the first part as the purchase price, the sum of $3,800.00 f. o. b. Cleveland, Ohio. * * * Party of the first part retains title of the property until fully paid in cash. This agreement is not binding on the party of the first part until approved by its own officers at Cleveland, Ohio."

It was signed, "The Loew Manufacturing Company, per Otto H. Schirmer, Party of the First Part" (plaintiff in the action), and by defendant.

Plaintiff admits the execution of the contract, but denies all the averments of the answer and cross-complaint relating to the alleged mistake; alleges that said contract was entered into without any guarantee whatever as to freight rate or any guarantee other than as set out in the contract; on information and belief alleges that defendant knew at all times that said contract did not contain any agreement "as to the amount of freight rate or as to freight rate at all," and that said agreement did fully and truthfully express all the terms and conditions agreed upon by the parties thereto.

The court found that the agreement pleaded was entered into as written, and the goods delivered as agreed upon, and that defendant had paid therefor in full except $481; that said agreement, as written, expresses all the agreement entered into with reference to the purchase of said goods, and there was no other consideration save as expressed in said written agreement; that defendant is not entitled to have the agreement reformed and corrected. Judgment accordingly passed in plaintiff's favor for $481. Defendant appealed from the judgment and from the order denying its motion for a new trial. As we understand, the appeal now pending is from the order; the appeal from the judgment having been dismissed.

[1] It is not disputed that defendant paid for the goods, except the amount now claimed of $481, which it withholds for reasons fully set forth in its answer and cross-complaint. At the trial defendant's counsel, by numerous appropriate questions to witnesses, endeavored to show the facts upon which defendant based its alleged mistake. The objection to the questions was that they were immaterial and irrelevant, "and as seeking to vary a written contract." Defendant's offer of proof was full and specific, and embraced facts from which an inference might be drawn that the agreement was as alleged by defendant, and that by the mistake of the parties it failed to include the alleged provision concerning the freight rate. A letter to defendant, written by plaintiff, who was, as defendant offered to prove, the agent of the Loew Manufacturing Company and signed the contract for it, was offered in evidence, in which letter he stated, among other things:

"I have written Cleveland about how you feel on the frt. rate, and that thru my saying $1.40 to you [defendant], you gave me the order."

All the offers of proof were refused, and objections to all questions tending to show that there was an agreement such as defendant alleged and a mistake in its not so showing, and that defendant did not discover the omission of the particular covenant relied upon until the commencement of the action, were sustained, on the ground that "it was seeking to vary the terms of a written contract." As a result of these rulings, the findings were necessarily for plaintiff, and it is because of these findings and of these rulings defendant now urges that the trial court erred.

The question here is whether the evidence was offered and had the effect to vary the terms of the contract, or whether the writing itself, through mistake, did not express the intention of the parties who entered into it, and does not, therefore, contain the real contract between the parties. If the latter, defendant was entitled to reformation. Kee v. Davis, 137 Cal. 456, 458, 70 Pac. 294, 671.

"When, through fraud or a mutual mistake of the parties, or a mistake of one party, which the other at the time knew or suspected, a written contract does not truly express the intention of the parties, it may be revised upon the application of a party aggrieved, so as to express that intention, so far as it can be done without prejudice to rights acquired by third persons, in good faith and for value." Civ. Code, § 3399. "In revising a written instrument, the court may inquire what the instrument was intended to mean, and what were intended to be its legal consequences, and is not confined to the inquiry what the language of the instrument was intended to be." Id. § 3401.

Mr. Pomeroy says:

"The general doctrine is firmly settled as one of the elementary principles of the equitable jurisdiction that a court of equity will grant its affirmative or defensive relief, as may be required by the circumstances, from the consequences of any mistake of fact which is a material element of the transaction, and which is not the result of the mistaken party's own violation of some legal duty, provided that no adequate remedy can be had at law" (2 Pom. Eq. Juris. [3d Ed.] § 852), and "the mistake may arise after the parties have verbally concluded their agreement, and may occur in reducing that agreement to writing, by erroneously adding, omitting, or altering some term." Id. § 853.

If the contract is such as to admit of reformation, parol evidence may be resorted to to prove the mistake. Id. § 862.

[2, 3] Respondent does not seriously question the soundness of these principles. He contends, among other things, that only mutual mistakes may be corrected; that the defendant did not plead the mistake as mutual, and hence defendant is not entitled to reformation. Had plaintiff demurred specially, the court may have compelled the defendant to state specifically whether the mistake was mutual or the mistake of one party which the other at the time knew or suspected. Civ. Code, § 3399. He answered the averments in the pleading, and we know of no rule that would preclude defendant from proving the mistake, such as it was, if entitled to reform the contract. Peasley v. McFadden, 68 Cal. 616, 10 Pac. 179. Respondent contends that the order should stand because the alleged mistake was not material to the contract, and hence the cross-complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action for reformation. The contract provided that defendant was to pay for the goods "the sum of $3,800.00 f. o. b. cars Cleveland, Ohio," which, it is alleged, was "conditioned nevertheless, and subject to a freight rate from the said city of Cleveland to the city of San Francisco of $1.40 per 100 pounds."

The argument is that the writing is silent upon the subject, and expressly provides for delivery of the goods f. o. b. at a price fixed; that the matter of freight rate was a matter incidental to, and not a material part of, the contract. Quoting from Mr. Pomeroy, it is said:

"The fact concerning which the mistake is made must be material to the transaction affecting its substance, and not merely its incidents; and the mistake itself must be so important that it determines the conduct of the mistaken party or parties. If a mistake is made by one or both parties in reference to some fact which, though connected with the transaction, is merely incidental, and not a part of the very subject-matter, or essence of its terms, * * * the mistake will not be ground for any relief affirmative or defensive." 2 Pom. Eq. Juris. (3d Ed.) § 856.

Defendant alleged that but for the guarantee that the freight rate would not exceed $1.40 per 100 pounds defendant would not have made the purchase. The allegations make this matter something more than an incident. To defendant it was of the essence of the agreement, as we must assume from the averments of the cross-complaint. The transportation cost was "a material element of the transaction." The difference in the freight rate alleged to have been agreed upon and the rate defendant was compelled to pay was more than 12 per cent. of the cost of the goods, and more than double the guaranteed rate.

It would be an exceptional case where the court would be justified in refusing evidence of mistake because upon the face of the pleadings, in the opinion of the court, the asserted mistake was not material. Ordinarily, this fact should be developed and determined by the evidence at the trial. It would seem but reasonable that what the parties in fact have agreed to should be treated as by them intended to be material.

"The written instrument is not required to be certain and complete in any respect. The only condition is that there shall be an honest endeavor to reduce the contract to writing where the statute of frauds requires it, and that the mistake shall be such as is recognized in this branch of equitable jurisdiction." House v. McMullen, 9 Cal. App. 670, 100 Pac. 347.

"The reformation of the contract by the insertion of the added term would create a latent ambiguity; it would be contradictory of the term 'f. o. b. Cleveland, Ohio.'"

It is understood in mercantile parlance that these letters thus used stand for "free on board"—that is, when used in an agreement that goods are to be delivered at a certain place f. o. b. means that they will be delivered to a carrier at that place free of drayage charges, etc. (Muskegon Curtain Roll Co. v. Keystone Mfg. Co., 135 Pa. 132, 19 Atl. 1008), and the phrase is only evidence, and not conclusive, that the goods were to be so delivered to the purchaser (Dannenmiller v. Kirkpatrick, 201 Pa. 218, 50 Atl. 928)—cited in "Words and Phrases."

Respondent also contends that the reformation would not only create a latent ambiguity, but would leave the instrument in such condition as "would require the aid of equity to construe and harmonize." We cannot see that the introduction in the contract of the simple statement that "first party guarantees that the freight rate from Cleveland to San Francisco shall not exceed $1.40 per hundred" would have conflicted with the provision "f. o. b. Cleveland," which only meant that the goods were to be delivered to the carrier at the place (Cleveland) free of drayage charges, etc. The phrase had no reference to the freight rate between the two cities, and hence the additional clause would not vary the terms expressed. There may have been an implication that the buyer was to pay this freight, but there would have been no contradiction of terms had the contract guaranteed a freight rate of $1.40 per 100 pounds. In fact, evidence was offered to show that this had been the rate, and respondent's assignor might well have assumed that this rate was in force at the time it entered into the contract, and hence made the guaranty, as is alleged it did. The parties, had they so intended, might have provided that the goods should be delivered f. o. b. San Francisco. No ambiguity would have existed in that case, nor can we see that there would be by making the delivery at Cleveland f. o. b. with a guarantee that the freight rate to San Francisco would not exceed $1.40 per 100 pounds. The parties were free to make any contract they saw fit as to the carriage charges after delivery f. o. b., either that the seller or the buyer should pay them, and they had the equal right to agree, should the buyer pay them, that they should not exceed a certain cost. The contract provided that title should remain in the seller until the property was fully paid for and the seller was to send an expert to San Francisco to set up the machine, besides agreeing to do certain stipulated things after it had reached appellant's premises. It seems to us that the guarantee pleaded was such as equity should enforce by giving the defendant the opportunity to make good its averments of fact, if it can, and that it is entitled to have the contract reformed, and to have the defensive relief given him as prayed for, if the facts should warrant it.

The order is reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; W. H. Waste, Judge.

Action by Henry Kurze against Jessie M. Douglas. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John Yule, of Oakland, for appellant. II. L. Breed, of Oakland, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiff commenced the action to quiet title in him to certain premises situated in the town of Emeryville, alleging that he "for more than five years last past has been in the actual, exclusive, and adverse possession" thereof (describing the premises) and "has paid all taxes of every kind and nature levied and assessed on or against said premises for more than five years continuously next preceding the filing of the complaint herein," which was filed October 17, 1911. Defendant denies the averments of the complaint and alleges ownership in herself by virtue of a deed from plaintiff to her, "executed and delivered by plaintiff to defendant on or about the 15th day of September, 1909"; that said deed was duly recorded on January 10, 1910; "alleges that the Jessie M. Kurze referred to in said deed is the same person as Jessie M. Douglas; that this defendant is an unmarried person." Claiming ownership in fee, she asks to have her title quieted and that it be decreed that plaintiff has no right, title, or interest in said premises. The court found that plaintiff had paid all taxes levied or assessed on the premises for more than 25 years continuously next preceding the filing of the complaint. No further finding was made on the subject of plaintiff's alleged adverse possession, and there was no evidence supporting such averment of the complaint. Plaintiff's ownership, however, prior to the alleged conveyance to defendant, is not disputed. The court found that plaintiff executed and delivered to defendant a deed conveying said property, on the 15th day of September, 1909, and "thereupon defendant became and ever since has been the owner of all said real property, land, and premises by virtue of said deed"; that said deed was duly recorded on January 10, 1910; that, "at the date of the execution and delivery of said deed and of the recording thereof, this defendant, Jessie M. Douglas, was sometimes called and known as Jessie M. Kurze; that the Jessie M. Kurze named in said deed as the grantee and party of the second part is the same person as said defendant Jessie M. Douglas; that this defendant, Jessie M. Douglas, is an unmarried person." "As conclusions of law from the above findings and the admissions of the pleadings, the court finds that defendant is entitled to a judgment of this court as prayed for in her answer." Judgment was accordingly duly made and entered. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff's motion for a new trial purports to have been made on the following grounds: (1) Newly discovered evidence; (2) insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision of the court; (3) that the decision of the court is against law; (4) errors of law occurring at the trial and excepted to by the plaintiff. It was stated in the notice that the motion "would be made upon affidavits and upon a statement of the case hereafter to be prepared."

[1] In his brief, appellant does not seriously urge the ground of newly discovered evidence, and he makes no mention of errors of law committed at the trial. Upon the alleged insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision, appellant so mixes up the testimony given at the trial with statements made in affidavits taken after the judgment was entered, that we find it difficult to separate the one from the other. Clearly, these affidavits have no place in considering the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision which was necessarily based upon the evidence taken at the trial. Subsequent affidavits cannot be used to attack findings. Affidavits may not be used for any such purpose. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 658, 2009; Eddy v. American Amusement Co., 21 Cal. App. 487, 132 Pac. 83. The essence of appellant's contention as to the deed made by him to respondent is that there was no delivery.

It appeared that defendant went to work for plaintiff as his housekeeper for wages. After about two months plaintiff asked defendant to marry him. She was then a married woman and explained why she could not marry him then. The story of their relations may better be told by defendant. She testified:

"I was left in poverty with two children to support myself, and I went there to work in the first place to make an honest living. And when he saw I could not marry him in the condition I was in and under the circumstances, he proposed to live together. I refused him and kept refusing him and told him I did not want to live with him, and I threatened to leave. He kept after me and after me until finally it did happen, and I lived with him. I assumed the name of Kurze when I began to live with him as his wife. I began living with him as his wife about two months after I was there. I lived with him as his wife about four months before he gave me the deed. When I first went there, I told him how I was situated. I told him then if I got free, and nothing happened, 'I will marry you when I am free.' (She was then a married woman.) That is the only time I promised to marry him. * * * After I was there about two months, we were talking one day about wills, and he had made his will out to me. We were talking about people trying to make trouble over wills. He had had some trouble with the place next door—it belonged to his first wife—and he said: 'Jessie, I will give you one of those places. Whichever one you want I will make a gift deed and give it to you.' That is what he said. I never asked him for the place. He gave it.

There was no consideration for the deed. He gave it willingly, and he gave it to me. I did not ask him for it. The deed was not given in consideration of marrying him. There was no consideration for the deed. He gave me the place willingly. When I first went there I promised to marry him, as I told you. Three or four months before the deed was given. * * * When I first went there I intended to marry him. I changed my mind after he commenced to abuse me the way he did, treating me so. The last year I was there I lived in continual fear. I was afraid of the man. I felt that I could not stay with him no longer, and, when I got a place to work, I left. That is why I left. * * * The deed was recorded January 10, 1910. In the intervening months after recording the deed, he did not again refer to recording the deed. On one occasion after recording the deed, the children were out in the yard picking flowers, and he came in, and he says: 'I think you could make your children behave themselves and let the flowers alone. The place is yours, and, if you do not want to take care of it, I don't.' There was another time after that we had some words, and he says: 'I will beat you out of the place if you leave.' One day at the table, before my mother, we were speaking about the street work, and I says, 'I guess I will have to mortgage my place to pay the street work.' He said, 'You will have to mortgage your place to pay the street work.' Q. Why was it you recorded the deed? A. Because he told me a couple of times it did not need to be recorded, so finally my brother George asked me if the deed was recorded, and I said, 'No.' He said: 'You better have it recorded. It is no good if you do not. He can turn it to somebody else.' And even then I took Mr. Kurze's word for it. I said, 'Haden't I better have it recorded?' He said, 'No, it don't need to be recorded.' My brother and my mother talked together, and he said, 'You better have it recorded to make sure.' I got suspicious the way he acted and treated me, so I had it recorded."

[2] Plaintiff testified that he did not believe the deed to defendant, but that after its execution he placed it in a bookcase where he kept his papers, and that defendant took it from there without his knowledge and had it recorded, and that the first he knew about its recordation he learned from seeing it stated in a local paper. On this question of delivery (no question of want of consideration or failure of consideration is raised) there was a conflict which it was the province of the court to resolve. There was evidence tending to corroborate defendant's testimony.

[3] The facts brought out in the affidavits used on the hearing of the motion for a new trial are in hopeless conflict. The point relied upon was that plaintiff did not know until the day of the trial that defendant claimed a delivery of the deed, and hence he could not produce George Larabee, the witness by whom he expected to show that the deed was not delivered. This claim does not appear to us as having merit. He knew from the answer of defendant that she claimed both the execution and delivery of the deed. He knew within a week after it was recorded that defendant claimed the property under the deed. Plaintiff and Larabee were friends and had been partners in business. At the trial several members of the Larabee family (defendant was George Larabee's sister) were witnesses, including George Larabee's wife. Slight diligence would have enabled plaintiff to produce Larabee at the trial. In fact, he showed no diligence, relying on his ignorance or forgetfulness that the delivery of the deed was an important issue in the case. Furthermore, counter affidavits were introduced by defendant which brought about an irreconcilable conflict between the facts stated by George Larabee in his affidavit and those controverting it. The court might well have concluded, from the facts shown by these affidavits at the hearing of the motion, that but little credence should be given the statements of George Larabee. The deed was recorded in January, 1910, and plaintiff knew the fact a week later. Defendant did not leave the premises or cease living with plaintiff until in October, 1911, and plaintiff commenced the action a few days thereafter. For nearly two years he knew that defendant claimed the property by virtue of his deed to her. It does not seem reasonable that during all that time he believed the deed to be invalid for want of delivery.

We are unable to discover any ground for reversing the order. There is sufficient evidence to support the findings, and the latter support the judgment.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1011—TRIAL WITHOUT JURY—EFFECT OF INCONSISTENCY ON WEIGHT OF TESTIMONY.

The effect and weight, as impeaching its integrity, of inconsistency in the testimony of a witness is wholly for the trier of the facts, and, where such inconsistency marks the testimony of an alleged agent as to his authority, the trial court sitting without a jury, can give what effect it chooses, within the limits of reason, to the testimony of the witness tending to establish agency, although, besides being somewhat inconsistent, it was contradicted by the alleged principal.

5. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⇨173—AGENCY—RATIFICATION AND ESTOPPEL—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

7. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⇨137—AUTHORITY BY ESTOPPEL—DUTY OF PRINCIPAL TO QUALIFY REPRESENTATIONS.

Where defendant principal employed defendant agent to run his ranch, and the agent ordered various ranch supplies, such as seeds, which were charged to the so-called "Ranch Account," and groceries, charged to "Groceries Account," such separation of the accounts being directed by agent for the convenience of himself and principal, and the principal, in paying the "Ranch Account," made such statements as to partnership existing between himself and agent as to give rise to an agency by estoppel to purchase in the future, to restrict the agent's authority to the purchase of seeds, excluding groceries, the principal was under duty to limit his representations as to authority at time of payment of the "Ranch Account" by express notice to that effect at time of payment of the ranch account; the failure to object to the ordering of the groceries under the circumstances being acquiescence therein.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨931—PRESUMPTIONS—DISREGARD OF INCOMPETENT EVIDENCE.

Where the trial court sits without a jury, the court on appeal will assume that, if incompetent testimony was admitted, it was disregarded by the court in reaching its findings, if there was ample admissible testimony to support the conclusion reached.

9. TRIAL ⇨56—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—REPETITION OF IMPEACHING QUESTION.

Where the action was against two defendants for the price of goods purchased by one as agent of the other, it was not error for the court to exclude a question to the plaintiff whether he was suing both defendants for the full amount, where the question had been repeatedly put and answered, and the only purpose it could serve was to impeach the witness.

Appeal from Superior Court, Placer County; J. E. Prewett, Judge.

Action by A. F. Ford against Lou Kum Shu and E. G. Covey. Judgment for plaintiff, and first-named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. B. Lardner, of Auburn, and Sterling Carr, of San Francisco, for appellant. Meredith & Landis, of Sacramento, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an action by the plaintiff to recover from the defendants the sum of $534.19, alleged to be the reasonable value of goods, wares, merchandise, materials, and supplies sold and delivered to the defendants by A. F. Ford & Co., a copartnership.

Prior to the commencement of the action, the complaint alleges, said copartnership sold, assigned, and transferred to the plaintiff all its claim and demand against the defendants on account of the sale and delivery of the goods, wares, etc., referred to. The complaint does not proceed upon the theory of a copartnership existing between the defendants, nor was the trial had upon that theory, but it is the claim that the goods, wares, merchandise, etc., to recover the reasonable value of which is the object of this action, were procured from the plaintiff by the defendant Covey, as the agent of the defendant Lou Kum Shu. The defendant Covey did not answer the complaint, but default for such omission was not entered until the trial was had. The defendant Lou Kum Shu answered the complaint, specifically traversing the material averments thereof, claiming that the goods, etc., in question were not purchased by or for him. The judgment was in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant Lou Kum Shu in the sum of $331, and against the defendant Covey in the sum of $223.19.

This appeal is prosecuted by the defendant Lou Kum Shu from the judgment rendered and entered against him, supported by a transcript of the testimony prepared pursuant to the provisions of sections 953a, 953b, and 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure. The assignments are: That the evidence does not support the findings, and that the court committed prejudicial error in admitting and excluding certain evidence.

The real point in controversy is whether the defendant Covey in the transactions from which this action arises, was or was not the agent, ostensible or real, of the defendant Lou Kum Shu.

The facts developed by the evidence from which the court manifestly made its findings are, briefly, these: The Lou Kum Shu Company, of which the defendant of that name was the head, was the owner of some 1,300 acres of land in Placer county adapted to farming and stock-raising purposes. In the early part of the year 1911 Lou Kum Shu, acting for his company, and the defendant Covey, entered into an agreement, which was not committed to writing, or, at any rate, not so executed, by the terms of which said Covey entered into the possession and occupation of said land as the agent of said company for the purpose of carrying on the business of farming and stock raising thereon. The agreement was that Covey should so remain in possession of and manage said business for a period of five years from the date of the making of the agreement, and was to receive for his services rendered in that capacity the sum of $50 per month, and, in addition thereto, 20 per cent. of the net proceeds derived from the farm during that period. Covey was to employ such labor as he might find necessary to carry on the farming and stock-raising business. Lou Kum Shu was to furnish the financial means with which to carry on the business for the first year, in which, presumably, the work would practically be of a preparatory character, and the farm and the business conducted thereon incapable of producing returns in any considerable amount. Under this arrangement, Covey, as stated, took possession of the farm and charge of the business thereof. He employed the necessary labor to assist in carrying on the farm, and, according to his testimony, under the authority vested in him by the said agreement with Lou Kum Shu, opened an account for such goods, wares, merchandise, and farming supplies as might, in his judgment, be required, with the plaintiff's assignor, a firm engaged in the general merchandising business in Placer county. At the request of Covey, the plaintiff's assignor kept two separate accounts of the dealings of the former with the latter—the one designated on the books of account as the "Ranch Account," under which were noted and charged all goods or supplies furnished by the firm to Covey and used by him for strictly farming purposes, such as wheat, barley, seeds, etc., and the other designated as the "Groceries Account," under which were charged all the groceries purchased by Covey for use on the farm.

The hired laborers were to board at Covey's home on the farm, and Covey, in paying them their wages each month, was to, and did, deduct therefrom the amount which they were to pay for their board, varying, during the period of time Covey was in charge of the farm before the misunderstanding leading to this action transpired, from $16 to $25 per month. At no time, testified Covey (and in this statement we find no contradiction), did he actually receive any money for boarding the hired help. The agreement was, as before intimated, that Lou Kum Shu would pay all bills contracted by Covey on account of the farm and the business thereof during the latter's management of said farm and business, or, as Covey himself stated it, "all provisions and all bills that I contracted were agreed upon by Lou Kum Shu to be paid by him on the ordering of those supplies by me." The accounts against the farm were always submitted by Covey to Lou Kum Shu and the latter always approved them when he found no mistakes or errors therein. During the time that the firm of Ford & Co. was furnishing supplies to Covey, Lou Kum Shu called at the firm's store and paid that part of the account designated in the firm's books as the "Ranch Account." On that occasion the plaintiff said to him: "This [referring to the whole account] is a large account, and what arrangements have you and Covey made?" And further said to him that the firm could not continue to furnish groceries unless he (Lou Kum Shu) acquainted the firm with knowledge of the nature of the business relations existing between him and Covey. To this Lou Kum Shu replied that he and Covey were partners, and were to sustain that relation for five years, and upon the faith of that statement by Lou Kum Shu the assignor of plaintiff "continued the account right along," so testified the plaintiff.

Ford declared that there was no difference, so far as the understanding the firm had of the transactions, between the "Ranch" and the "Groceries" accounts; that they were, as before stated, kept separately at the request of Covey, who said, in effect, that thus keeping the accounts would amount only to a matter of convenience to him in dealing with Lou Kum Shu.

After making the payment on the account, as above explained, and on the 30th day of May, 1912, Lou Kum Shu notified Ford & Co. to cease furnishing Covey any more goods unless he (Lou Kum Shu) gave Covey an order for the same. Covey, however, continued to procure groceries from Ford & Co. after the latter was notified by Lou Kum Shu not to supply him with goods, etc., and this accounts for the judgment herein against Covey for the sum of $223.19, said amount being the difference between the amount for which the plaintiff obtained judgment against Lou Kum Shu and the amount sued for.

Upon the facts above briefly narrated, although in many important particulars flatly contradicted by Lou Kum Shu, the court was amply warranted in finding and in concluding, as a matter of law, that Lou Kum Shu was liable for the groceries sold by the plaintiff's assignor to Covey, up to May 30, 1912, at which time, as seen, Lou Kum Shu notified Ford & Co. that he would no longer be responsible for supplies furnished Covey by said firm in the absence of an order therefor from him.

[1] While it is a well-settled rule that agency cannot be established by the extrajudicial statements or declarations in pairs of one pretending to act as agent and that such statements or declarations are incompetent, and therefore inadmissible as in proof of agency, it is equally well established that the fact of agency, when it rests in parol, may be established on the trial by the testimony of the agent himself. In other words, "the testimony of an agent sworn as a witness in a case, when the question of his agency is involved, is competent to establish it and its extent and nature." Kast v. Miller & Lux, 159 Cal. 723, 727, 728, 115 Pac. 932. See, also, Mechem on Agency, § 101; Parker v. Bond, 121 Ala. 529, 25 South. 898; O'Leary v. German A. Ins. Co., 100 Iowa, 390, 69 N. W. 686; Brown v. Cone, 80 App. Div. 413, 81 N. Y. Supp. 89; Lawall v. Groman, 180 Pa. 532, 37 Atl. 98, 57 Am. St. Rep. 662; Garber v. Blatchley, 51 W. Va. 147, 41 S. E. 222; New Home S. M. Co. v. Leago, 128 N. C. 158, 38 S. E. 805; Union Hosiery Co. v. Hodgson, 72 N. H. 427, 57 Atl. 384; Nostrum v. Halliday, 39 Neb. 829, 58 N. W. 429; Hubback v. Ross, 96 Cal. 426, 31 Pac. 353; Bergtholdt v. Porter Bros., 114 Cal. 681, 46 Pac. 738; Feris v. Baker, 127 Cal. 520, 59 Pac. 937; Peterson v. Stockton, etc., Co., 134 Cal. 244, 66 Pac. 304.

[3] From the testimony of Covey the fact is fairly deducible that express authority was conferred upon him by Lou Kum Shu to purchase groceries for him, to be consumed on the farm. Covey not only so declared in so many words, but he testified that the hired help were to be fed by him; that, while he deducted from their wages each month the amount of their board, he actually received no money from Lou Kum Shu for such board; and that the latter always inspected the "Groceries" as well as the "Ranch" account, and invariably approved the same when correct. Thus it clearly enough appears from the testimony of Covey that, as manager of the farm and the business thereof, and in all transactions connected therewith, he was, at all times, subject to the superior authority and his transactions to the supervisory control of Lou Kum Shu.

[4] It may be conceded that in certain parts of his testimony Covey made what appear to be statements inconsistent with the theory that included within his powers as agent of Lou Kum Shu was the authority to purchase groceries for consumption on the farm. Whether these inconsistencies were real or only the result of the inaptitude of the witness to express himself clearly it is difficult for this court to say. But it is quite apparent, from the general character of his answers to direct and cross questions, that the trial court could reasonably have accounted for the seeming inconsistencies in his answers upon the hypothesis that, while at all times he intended to convey the idea that he was the agent of Lou Kum Shu, with authority to purchase for the latter supplies of all kinds required on the farm, he was not at all times, while testifying, happy in the selection of the precise words or phrases essential to a clear expression of that idea. But, however that may be, the effect of inconsistent statements in the testimony of a witness is merely to impeach the integrity of the entire testimony of such witness or impair its evidentiary force, but whether it has such effect or to what extent, if any, is a proposition whose determination is wholly with the trier of the facts. Hence, in this case the trial court, in the exercise of the discretion vested in it as the trier and arbiter of the questions of fact, was at liberty to accept parts of Covey's testimony and reject other parts thereof, if such a course was not inherently unreasonable, and, if it believed certain parts thereof which covered the salient points in issue, it had the right to accept the parts so credited as the bases of its findings, even though such parts, besides being inconsistent with other parts of the witness' testimony, were directly opposed by adversary testimony presented by Lou Kum Shu.

[5] But, granting that the testimony was not sufficient to justify a finding of express antecedent authority in Covey to purchase the groceries in question for Lou Kum Shu, it cannot be doubted that the latter's statements and conduct, long after the "Groceries Account" had been running, and while it was still running, were sufficient to warrant the inference and therefrom a finding that Lou Kum Shu acquiesced in and ratified the transactions of Covey as to groceries, and the authority in Covey to buy the groceries already charged in the account and to continue so to purchase groceries thereafter, until otherwise ordered by Lou Kum Shu, as heretofore explained.

It will be recalled that, while Covey was yet buying groceries at the store of the assignor of plaintiff, the latter asked Lou Kum Shu to explain to him the nature of the business relations then and theretofore subsisting between him and Covey, and, at the same time, said to him that the existing account was large, and that the firm did not propose to continue to furnish groceries to Covey unless it was apprised of the nature of the business agreement with respect to the farm into which the two men had entered, and that Lou Kum Shu replied that they were partners, and would, under their agreement, remain so for a period of five years. On the occasion thus referred to there was no repudiation by Lou Kum Shu of Covey's authority to buy groceries for the farm for the former, nor did Lou Kum Shu state to the plaintiff that the scope of Covey's authority as his agent was limited to the purchasing of "ranch supplies," so-called.

[6] Ratification of a contract made by an agent need not be in express terms in order to bind the principal. "If it is fairly inferable from the words or conduct of the party, it is sufficient. Like the act of conferring antecedent authority upon an agent, it may be express or implied." Pope v. Armsby Co., 111 Cal. 159, 163, 43 Pac. 589, 590; Ralphs v. Hensler, 97 Cal. 296, 32 Pac. 243; Puget Sound Lumber Co. v. Krug, 89 Cal. 237, 26 Pac. 902.

"It may be said, as to the character of proof from which ratification may be inferred, that it is most frequently established by implication from the conduct and acts of the party in whose behalf the unauthorized agency was assumed, inconsistent with any reasonable intention on his part, other than that he intended approving and adopting it." Ballard v. Nye, 138 Cal. 588, 597, 72 Pac. 156, 159.

[7] Lou Kum Shu was sufficiently made to understand by the plaintiff that the firm of Ford & Co. looked to him as the responsible party for the whole account opened by Covey at its store—the "Groceries" as well as the "Ranch" account. If Covey's authority, under the agreement between him and Lou Kum Shu, was, so far as purchasing supplies was concerned, restricted to the purchasing of wheat, barley, and other seeds, as is the contention of the appellant, it was his duty to have so notified Ford & Co. at the time the above conversation was had between him and the plaintiff, and to have expressly repudiated the account for groceries as one not within the rightful power of Covey as his agent to cause to be opened. Upon this proposition, however, he was silent and passive, and thus he led the firm to believe that the purchase of the groceries, like that of the other supplies, was within the scope of Covey's authority, as his agent, or, in other words, the effect of such conduct, taken in connection with his payment of part of the whole account, may and should be construed as an acquiescence in or ratification of Covey's transactions as to the groceries. Pacific Vinegar, etc., Works v. Smith, 152 Cal. 507, 511, 93 Pac. 85. "Quiescence is tantamount to acquiescence," as some of the law writers have phrased the proposition, and therefore the law forbids the principal denying an authority the existence of which is implied from his own conduct, where such authority concerns and affects the rights of third parties. This rule is not alone applicable to the doctrine of ostensible agency, but is equally applicable to the doctrine of ratification.

[8, 9] We have carefully examined all the points involving attacks upon the rulings allowing answers to certain questions propounded to the witness. We do not conceive it to be necessary to give those assignments specific notice in this opinion. Even if it be conceded that some of said rulings were technically wrong, we see nothing in them which could have affected the substantial rights of the appellant, since it is manifest that a different conclusion would not have been reached upon the ultimate facts if the testimony allowed as the effect of said rulings had been viewed by the court, so far as the question of its admissibility was concerned, in harmony with the theory of the appellant with respect thereto, and, consequently, different rulings touching said testimony had been made. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and we have the right to assume that, if incompetent testimony crept into the record, the court disregarded it in deciding the questions at issue, there being ample competent testimony to support the conclusion reached. The only ruling of those complained of excluding evidence was the one by which the court foreclosed an answer to a certain cross-question propounded to the plaintiff, and which had reference to the averment of the complaint that Lou Kum Shu was severally liable for the full sum of $554.19, the total amount sued for; the appellant thus attempting to show that when verifying the complaint the plaintiff knew that he was "swearing to something that was incorrect," since it appeared from the evidence that Lou Kum Shu was liable, if at all, for a part only of the sum sued for. The question, which could have served no other purpose than to impeach the witness, was repeatedly put to the witness, who as often answered it by saying, in effect, that he understood that he was suing both defendants for the full amount, etc. Finally, the court said that it understood what the witness intended to say, and refused to allow counsel to proceed further on that line of cross-examination. This action of the court was not, under the circumstances, erroneous.

All the points calling for special consideration have now been disposed of.

The judgment is affirmed.

ARNOLD v. KRIGBAUM et al. (S. F. 6921.)

Rehearing Denied Feb. 18, 1915.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT ¶290—UNLAWFUL DETAINER—SET-OFF OR COUNTERCLAIM.

In an action in unlawful detainer against a tenant, neither a counterclaim nor a cross-complaint of any kind is permissible, whether the subject-matter arises out of a violation of the terms of the lease or not.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1207-1215; Dec. Dig. ¶290.]

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT ¶188—RENT—FAILURE TO REPAIR.

A lessor's covenant to repair and the lessee's covenant to pay rent are usually considered as independent covenants, and unless the covenant to repair is expressly or impliedly made a condition precedent to the covenant to ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is an action in unlawful detainer and to recover the amount of rent due. The defendants in their answer set up by way of defense an alleged violation by the lessor of a covenant on her part to make certain repairs, whereby they had been damaged in the sum of $10,000, and also had been compelled to make expenditures to the extent of $900 in making certain necessary repairs. They also pleaded the same matters by way of counterclaim and also by cross-complaint. On motion the court struck out the counterclaim and cross-complaint, and at the trial refused them permission to introduce evidence in support of their defense on this ground and entered judgment for the plaintiff for the sum of $875 and costs. By stipulation of the parties said judgment contained no provision for the forfeiture of the lease. We have before us an appeal by defendants from said judgment.

[1, 2] It appears to be thoroughly established both in this state and in other jurisdictions having substantially similar statutes to our unlawful detainer statutes, that neither a counterclaim nor cross-complaint of any kind is permissible in an action in unlawful detainer. This question was discussed by the District Court of Appeal of the First District in the recent case of Knight v. Black, 19 Cal. App. 518, 126 Pac. 512, where many authorities are cited. There is no distinction in the authorities between cases where the subject-matter of the attempted counterclaim or cross-complaint arises out of a violation of the terms of the lease upon which the action is brought and other cases. It is said in 24 Cyc. 1424, that the interposition of a set-off or counterclaim is usually not permissible in an action for unlawful detainer, or summary proceeding. A covenant to repair on the part of the lessor and a covenant to pay rent on the part of the lessee are usually considered as independent covenants, and unless the covenant to repair is expressly or impliedly made a condition precedent to the covenant to pay rent, the breach of the former does not justify the refusal on the part of the lessee to perform the latter. In Peterson v. Kreuger, 67 Minn. 450, 70 N. W. 568, the precise question here involved was presented, and the court said:

"A tenant against whom an action is brought under this statute is not permitted to counterclaim for damages arising from a breach of any covenant in the lease which is independent of the covenant to pay rent. He cannot justify an unlawful detainer by alleging a violation of a covenant to repair prior to the commencement of the proceedings (citing cases). There is no difference of opinion upon this question. All of the cases cited to the contrary by defendants' counsel simply bear upon the right of a tenant to counterclaim for damages in an action brought to recover rent."

In Phillips v. Port Townsend Lodge, 8 Wash. 529 [36 Pac. 476], the answer set up a counterclaim on account of repairs made by the tenant which it was the duty of the landlord to make, and it was held that this was demurrable as not constituting a defense. The court said:

"The very object the Legislature had in view in enacting the statute under which the appellants were proceeding was to afford a summary and adequate remedy for obtaining possession of premises withheld by tenants in violation of the covenants of their lease, and this object would be entirely frustrated if tenants were permitted to interpose every defense usual or permissible in ordinary actions at law. * * * In such proceedings counterclaims and offsets are not available."

[3] The idea that such defenses are permissible in unlawful detainer is based on a misconception of the grounds on which that action rests. The Code (section 1161, Code Civ. Proc.), in effect, provides that, upon failure of a tenant to pay rent or perform other covenants of his lease before the expiration of the three days' notice, the lease becomes forfeited and his subsequent possession of the premises is unlawful; he is then "guilty of unlawful detainer." His possession, formerly lawful in virtue of his lease, has become unlawful because of the forfeiture. The statute has provided a special action for the recovery of possession by the landlord, because it was deemed that a more expeditious proceeding and more complete relief than was afforded by an ordinary action for possession was desirable. In order to provide for the collection of the rent in the same action, it provides that the court shall give judgment for the rent found due, which means the rent which accrued before the forfeiture. This, however, is a mere incident to the main object—the recovery of possession. It does not transform the action into an action on contract. The defendant may, if he can, show that there was no forfeiture, because there was no breach of the covenants of the lease on which to found such forfeiture. If, by reason of dealings between them prior to the alleged forfeiture, the rent was paid or discharged at that time, he may show that fact, and in that way questions of contractual relations may properly arise in such an action. But this is not to be allowed to extend to a right of set-off; it can only go to the question whether or not, when the notice to quit was given, the rent claimed therein was due; that is, the question whether or not, by some agreement, express or implied, between them, the claims due to the tenant from the landlord were to be applied on the rent.

[4] As we have said, it was alleged that some $900 had been expended by the defendants in the making of necessary repairs, which it was the duty of the plaintiff to make. If it be assumed that under ordinary circumstances the defendants should be credited with such an expenditure as a payment on account of the rent, provided such expenditure was not greater than one month's rent of the premises, in view of the provisions of section 1942 of the Civil Code, the complete answer to any such claim in this case is to be found in the provisions of the lease, whereby the lessee, "hereby waives all rights to make repairs of said premises at the expense of the lessor as provided in section 1942 of the Civil Code of the State of California."

If follows that the matters of the set-off, as above stated, by way of answer, counter-claim, and cross-complaint, were not entitled to consideration in this proceeding.

[5] Upon the other matters suggested upon behalf of appellants in their brief, the District Court of Appeal of the First District, in which this case was first decided, said as follows:

"Equally untenable is the claim that the details of the service of the three days' notice to quit were not sufficiently set forth in the complaint. A copy of the notice in full was pleaded, and service was alleged to have been made upon each of the defendants. This was all that was required. Cowell v. Linforth, 10 Cal. App. 3, 100 Pac. 1071.

[6] "The notice is also claimed to be insufficient for the reason that it fails to show whether the representative who signed it for the owner as 'her attorney' was the attorney in fact or at law. There is no merit in this contention. The precise question was decided adversely to defendants' contention in Felton v. Millard, 81 Cal. 540 [21 Pac. 533, 22 Pac. 750]."

We adopt these expressions of the District Court of Appeal as a part of our opinion.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐1002 — FINDINGS — CONCLUSIVENESS.

A finding on conflicting evidence and sustained by circumstantial evidence and the direct testimony of a witness will not be disturbed on appeal.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thos. F. Graham, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Ernest V. Cowell, deceased. Petition by J. Valente against S. H. Cowell. There was a judgment for petitioner, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Mastick & Partridge, of San Francisco, for appellant. Eugene D. Sullivan, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The record in this case presents an appeal by certain heirs of Ernest V. Cowell, deceased, from an order of partial distribution of the estate of Ernest V. Cowell, distributing to Valente $1,000 under the sixth clause of the will. That clause has been before this court heretofore in the Estate of Cowell on the Application of Minkel, reported in 167 Cal. 229, 139 Pac. 84. The legal questions arising under the will have all been settled in that case and in the case preceding it in the same volume. The only question presented here is whether or not Mr. Valente had been an employé of Cowell & Co. for three years or more preceding January 1, 1911, the date fixed in the will. It is a mere question of the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the finding, and, of course, the rule is too well known to require more than the statement that whenever the evidence is in conflict this court cannot interfere with the finding of the court below, if the conflict is substantial. Taking this evidence as a whole, there is ample circumstantial evidence in connection with the evidence of Mr. Valente to justify a finding that Mr. Valente was an employé of Cowell & Co. for more than three years preceding the date stated. While there is other evidence that might have justified a contrary decision, the court was not obliged to believe that evidence in the face of the facts established by the circumstantial evidence and the evidence of Valente. It is not necessary to state the evidence more fully. The conclusion of the court is that the evidence justified the conclusion of the court below on that ground.

The order is affirmed.

Judicial settlement of the estate of Orson L. Pickard, deceased. On appeal from an order setting apart the homestead to the widow. Affirmed.

Wilbur G. Zeigler, of San Francisco, for appellant. Edward J. Lynch, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from an order setting apart a homestead to the widow of the decedent.

So far as the character of the property and its suitability for a homestead are concerned, the case cannot be distinguished from the cases of Heathman v. Holmes, 94 Cal.

291, 29 Pac. 404, Estate of Levy, 141 Cal. 646, 75 Pac. 317, and McKay v. Gesford, 163 Cal. 243, 124 Pac. 1016, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 303, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1253. The decision of the lower court is sustained on that point on the authority of those cases.

In regard to the proposition that it is community property, that, of course, is a matter of evidence; the presumption being, to start with, that it was community property. Taking the evidence as a whole, there is enough to sustain the finding of the lower court that it was community property. That being the case, the court was justified in setting it apart in fee as a homestead.

The order is affirmed.

SAN JOAQUIN & KINGS RIVER CANAL & IRRIGATION CO., Inc., v. FRESNO FLUME & IRRIGATION CO. (S. F. 6477.)

JUDGMENT 586 — CONCLUSIVENESS — NEW ISSUES.

An irrigation company is not concluded by a former judgment in favor of a reservoir company in an action to prevent the diversion of water to its reservoir, which was entered upon the reservoir company's disclaimer of right to the natural flow of the stream and a finding that its diversion was only of the flood water, in a subsequent action against the same reservoir company for the diminution of the natural flow of the stream by the diversion from the reservoir of water which would otherwise naturally flow into the stream.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

Action by the San Joaquin & Kings River Canal & Irrigation Company, Incorporated, against the Fresno Flume & Irrigation Company. Judgment for the defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Frank H. Short, of Fresno, and Edward F. Treadwell, of San Francisco, for appellant. L. L. Cory, of Fresno, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment against it, rendered upon an order sustaining a general demurrer to its complaint.

It appears from the allegations of the complaint that the defendant had built a dam across Stevinson creek, a tributary of the San Joaquin river, and had by means of said dam impounded a large quantity of the water falling upon the watershed tributary to said creek; that the plaintiff was the owner of the right to divert from said river, below the mouth of said creek, a large quantity of the water of the river; that theretofore plaintiff had brought suit against the defendant for alleged diversion of water from said creek; and that in that action it had been determined that plaintiff was entitled to said quantity of water of said river, and to that extent possessed the right to maintain the natural flow of said creek; that thereafter the defendant had diverted from said creek, of the natural flow thereof, quantities of water which otherwise would have continued down the creek into said river and into plaintiff's canal, whereby it had been deprived of the water of said creek and river to which it was entitled, to its damage; and, that defendant threatened to continue such diversions. Judgment was asked for damages and for an injunction to prevent future diversions.

The record sets forth the complaint, answer, findings, and judgment in the former action. Said judgment was affirmed and the findings construed on appeal to this court. See San Joaquin, etc., Co. v. Fresno Flume, etc., Co., 158 Cal. 626, 112 Pac. 182, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 832. It appears further that the defendant had built a dam at Stevinson meadows, across said creek, by which it formed a large reservoir in which it collected and retained the waters coming from the watershed thereto during times of unusual flood and rains and melting snows, and that the diversions which the defendant made, both before and since the former judgment, were of water taken directly from this reservoir. It is claimed in support of the demurrer that the former judgment establishes the right of the defendant to take water from the reservoir, although such taking decreases the amount of water naturally flowing in the creek below the reservoir and decreases the amount in the river so that the plaintiff cannot obtain therefrom the quantity to which it is entitled under that judgment.

The opinion of the court is that this complaint alleges a taking of water from this reservoir which, in its effect, diminishes the flow in Stevinson creek below the reservoir from which the water is taken, and that it further shows that that water, thus taken from the stream and from that reservoir, would, if not taken, naturally flow down the stream into the San Joaquin river and into the plaintiff's canal, and that plaintiff is thereby deprived of its rightful quantity. The former judgment was in favor of the defendants solely because of the fact found, that the taking there complained of, and there found to have occurred, was of flood waters, and did not prevent this flow of the natural water of the stream down the creek and into plaintiff's canal. For these reasons the former judgment is not an adjudication of the injury here complained of, nor is it an adjudication of rights which prevents a complaint of the injury here alleged. The theory of the court below seems to have been that because the same reservoir is there, and because the water is taken out by defendant at the same place as found upon the former trial, there can be no other cause of action arising from another taking at a different time and after the rendition of the former judgment. That we think is a fallacy. The former judgment was rendered upon a disclaimer by the defendant of all right or claim to the natural flow of the creek and upon a finding that the former diversion from the reservoir did not decrease the natural flow of the stream as it had been accustomed to flow. It merely determined that the defendant was entitled to take water from that reservoir so long as its taking did not diminish the natural flow of the stream in its bed below. For these reasons we think the court below erred in its order sustaining the demurrer.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James V. Coffey, Judge.

Petition by Mary J. Mayfield against Eugene F. McCarthy and others, for the revocation of the probate of the will of Caroline H. Bainbridge, deceased. From an order granting a new trial and setting aside a verdict in favor of contestant for insufficiency of the evidence, contestant appeals. Affirmed.

F. W. Sawyer, James A. Devoto, and Devoto, Richardson & Devoto, all of San Francisco, for appellant. Grant H. Smith, Lindley & Eickhoff, S. Bloom, Cullinan & Hickey, Grant H. Smith, A. G. Kazebeer, T. E. K. Cormac, Corbet & Selby, and Henry Ach, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

LAWLOR, J. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco setting aside the verdict of the jury and granting a new trial of the contest of the will of the deceased; the verdict having been in favor of contestant, on the grounds of undue influence, fraud, and unsoundness of mind. The will was admitted to probate, and thereafter Mary J. Mayfield, a niece of the testatrix and a legatee under the will, filed her petition for revocation of the probate thereof. After the verdict of the jury, a motion for a new trial was interposed on behalf of the proponents, and by the court ordered granted on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict.

[1, 2] The appellant relies for a reversal of the order solely on the ground that, under the provision of the Constitution—"the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all and remain inviolate" (section 7, art. 1)—the trial court was without power to set aside the verdict of the jury on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence. This point has been decided adversely to the contention of the appellant in many cases. The precise constitutional question was raised in Ingraham v. Weidler, 139 Cal. 589, 73 Pac. 415, where it is said:

"Appellant contends that section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure, so far at least as it provides for a new trial for the causes of 'insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict' and 'excessive damages, appearing,' etc., is void, because violative of section 7 of article 1 of the state Constitution, which declares that 'the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all'; but there is no ground for this contention. The courts in this country, and in England since long before the time of Blackstone, had always exercised the power of granting a new trial after verdict, and for the causes, among others, of insufficiency of evidence, or that the damages were either inadequate or excessive (3 Blackstone's Commentaries, 387 et seq.); and this power was a recognized part of the 'right of trial by jury,' as that phrase is used in the Constitution."

This case has been cited approvingly in Noxon v. Remington, 78 Conn. 299, 61 Atl. 963, to the proposition that where, in the opinion of the trial court, damages are awarded by the jury in an excessive amount, they may be reduced under penalty of having the verdict set aside and a new trial granted.

The identical question has been considered in a number of criminal cases in this state.

In People v. Knutte, 111 Cal. 453, 44 Pac. 166, the trial court, at the conclusion of the evidence in chief for the prosecution, advised the jury to acquit on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence. Section 1118, Pen. Code. The jury, notwithstanding the advice of the court, found the defendant guilty, and thereupon the court, of its own motion, made an order setting aside the verdict and granting the defendant a new trial. On an appeal from the order the trial court was upheld, and in the decision the following excerpt is quoted from People v. Lum Yit, 83 Cal. 130, 23 Pac. 228:

"While it is the exclusive province of the jury to find the facts, it is nevertheless one of the most important requirements of the trial judge to see to it that this function of the jury is intelligently and justly exercised. In this respect, while he cannot competently interfere with or control the jury in passing upon the evidence, he nevertheless exercises a very salutary supervisory power over their verdict. In the exercise of that power he should always satisfy himself that the evidence as a whole is sufficient to sustain the verdict found, and, if in his sound judgment it is not, he should unhesitatingly say so, and set the verdict aside."

People v. Knutte, supra, was cited to the same point in People v. Chew Wing Gow, 120 Cal. 299, 52 Pac. 657, and in People v. Tapia, 131 Cal. 647, 63 Pac. 1001. In the latter case the trial court, under a misapprehension of the law, denied the motion of the defendant for a new trial, although the record on appeal showed that the trial judge was not convinced that the evidence was sufficient to justify the verdict. The decision quotes the trial judge as saying, "Therefore, I say the evidence is unsatisfactory," and continues:

"But, after showing clearly that the evidence in his opinion was not sufficient to warrant the verdict, he questions whether 'my doubts amounted to such reasonable doubts as would warrant the court in setting aside the verdict on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence'; and he concludes as follows: 'I believe I shall deny the motion and let the Supreme Court pass on these questions.' But 'these questions' were questions of fact, over which the trial judge had full jurisdiction, while this court has appellate jurisdiction in criminal cases 'on questions of law alone.' As was said in People v. Lum Yit, 83 Cal. 130 [23 Pac. 228]: 'He [the trial judge], too, has to be satisfied that the evidence, as a whole, was sufficient to sustain the verdict; if he was not, it was not only the proper exercise of a legal discretion, but his duty, to grant a new trial.' See, also, People v. Knutte, 111 Cal. 453 [44 Pac. 166]; People v. Baker, 39 Cal. 686; People v. Flood, 102 Cal. 330 [36 Pac. 663]; People v. Chew Wing Gow, 120 Cal. 298 [52 Pac. 657]."

In U. S. v. Meldrum (D. C.) 146 Fed. 392, it is declared:

"* * * Of like character, as instanced by the foregoing cases, is the discretion reposed in the court to set aside a verdict, or to award a new trial through considerations of fact. It is not arbitrary, vague, or fanciful, nor is it to be controlled by humor or caprice, but to be governed by principle and regular procedure for the accomplishment of the ends of right and justice. If errors of law are relied upon, then the judgment of the court is required as to the right rule of law to be applied, and the questions are strictly of legal cognizance. Says Hammond, Circuit Judge, in Wright v. Southern Ex. Co. (C. C.) 80 Fed. 85, 93: 'It must and should be performed in every case with such conscientious intelligence as belongs to the judge, and that is the best that can be done in any case where he is called upon to discharge that duty.' The principle is applied in a criminal case (People v. Knutte, 111 Cal. 453, 44 Pac. 166), where the court says: * * *"

constitutional guaranty (section 7, art. 1) is fully observed when the verdict of the jury in the case is rendered and recorded. The remaining and different question—whether judgment shall be pronounced upon the verdict or the verdict set aside—is "strictly of legal cognizance," which must be determined by the trial court; and, unless a manifest abuse of discretion is shown, the decision will not be disturbed on appeal. In the determination of a motion for a new trial, the verdict should be set aside if, in the opinion of the trial court, it is not supported by sufficient evidence; and this is equally true whether there be an absence of evidence or that the evidence received, in the individual judgment of the trial judge, is lacking in probative force to establish the proposition of fact to which it is addressed. This is the meaning of the terms "insufficiency of evidence" (subdivision 6, § 657, C. C. P.), and "* * * contrary to * * * evidence" (subdivision 6, § 1181, Pen. Code).

Under the rule imposed by the Constitution, the duty of the trial court in reviewing verdicts on the score of insufficiency of evidence is all the more binding for the reason that on the trial the judge shall not charge the jury as to matters of fact. Section 19, art. 6. And if the verdict is not set aside where the evidence lacks sufficient probative force, the party may not thereafter be relieved from the injustice of the ruling. In criminal cases the appellate authority is limited to questions of law alone (section 4, art. 6, Const.), and under the rule of decision the judgment or order will not be reversed, if there is a substantial conflict in the evidence. And the same rule of decision is followed in civil cases. But where there is an absence of evidence to support a material allegation, and the trial court does not set the verdict aside, the hardship may not be so great, for this presents a pure question of law, of which full advantage may be taken on appeal. The order is affirmed.

John E. Bennett, of San Francisco (Charles A. Shurtleff, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant. Hoefler, Cook, Harwood & Morris, of San Francisco (William Rix, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff, American Surety Company of New York, became the surety on a bond in the sum of $10,000, given to release an attachment issued in an action brought by the City Street Improvement Company against the Edgemar Realty Syndicate to recover money claimed to be due under a contract for certain street improvements. While that action was pending, the Edgemar Realty Syndicate became insolvent and forfeited its charter for failure to pay the license tax. Subsequently the plaintiff in the former action, City Street Improvement Company, brought the case on for trial and took judgment without any one appearing in opposition. The surety company knew, of course, when it gave the bond, that the action was pending, and it had knowledge of the fact that the case was set for trial some days before it came on for hearing. It now comes in by a bill in equity and seeks to set aside the judgment and to be permitted to assert the defense of the Edgemar Realty Syndicate to the original action, it being alleged in the bill that there was a meritorious defense. The court below sustained a demurrer to the complaint, and gave judgment in favor of the defendants. The plaintiff appeals.

[1, 2] The ruling on the demurrer was properly made. The complaint is entirely devoid of any allegations tending to show fraud, mistake, or collusion, and, in the absence of a showing of one of these grounds for relief, a court of equity will not set aside a judgment regularly obtained and entered. The complaint is also subject to the objection that it shows upon its face that the plaintiff was guilty of laches. A period of over two years elapsed between the filing of the complaint in the former action and the taking of judgment, and during all of this time the surety company took no step to protect its interests. Furthermore, the surety company waited a period of almost six months after the entry of the judgment against the Edgemar Realty Syndicate before seeking the relief asked for in this action. During this interval, the situation of the property formerly owned by the syndicate had changed in such a manner that the creditor—the City Street Improvement Company—has lost all possible chance of recovery on its claim from any source other than the bond. The bill is without equity and does not state a cause of action.

The judgment is affirmed.

GOLDMAN v. PALMTAG. (S. F. 6408.)

DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT  60 — WANT OF PROSECUTION.

Defendant's amended answer was filed April 7, 1910, and nothing was thereafter done until April 17, 1912, when defendant moved to dismiss for want of prosecution. The only excuse for the delay was that plaintiff's counsel had been prevented from attending to business for four months by illness, and had been engaged in other affairs during the balance of the time. Held, that whether such excuse was sufficient was for the determination of the trial court in the first instance, and a determination of such question in the negative was not an abuse of discretion, though the time elapsed was but little more than the period provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 583, after which the court has a discretion to dismiss.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dismissal and Nonsuit, Cent. Dig. §§ 140-152; Dec. Dig.  60.]

Action by Joseph H. Goldman against William Palmtag. From a judgment dismissing the action for want of prosecution, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. H. Wilson, of San Francisco, and Geo. W. Jean, of Hollister, for appellant. F. H. Gould, of San Francisco, and H. W. Scott and Briggs & Hudner, all of Hollister, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment dismissing his action for want of prosecution.

The court is of the opinion that, while the case presents elements of hardship, it is one in which we cannot say, as an appellate court, that there was an abuse of discretion in granting the motion. It appears that the amended answer, if we look to that alone, was filed on the 7th of April, 1910, the notice of motion to dismiss for want of prosecution was filed on April 17, 1912, and the motion granted and the case dismissed on May 15, 1912. The notice was therefore given more than two years after the filing of the amended answer. The time was but little more than the statutory period after which the court has discretion to dismiss (Code of Civil Procedure, § 583), and there is an undisputed showing of facts which to some extent excuse the delay. But, if we analyze these facts, we find a period of four months during which Mr. Wilson's illness prevented his attending to business, while for the rest of the two years the only showing is that he was engaged with other business affairs. It was for the court below to determine, in the first instance, whether the other engagements of counsel afforded sufficient excuse for the failure to bring this action on for trial. I think furthermore that the court had the right to consider the history of the case prior to the filing of the amended answer, and that upon the entire record enough appears to protect the ruling of the trial court from successful attack here.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re MAGORTY'S ESTATE. (S. F. 7199.)
Rehearing Denied Feb. 23, 1915.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ☞277—
CLAIMS—PAYMENT—FUNERAL EXPENSES.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1643, relating to the payment of claims against decedents' estates, makes funeral expenses rank as a debt similar to other debts in many respects, but payable in preference to all other debts; the provision requiring that the administrator shall pay them as soon as he has sufficient funds in his hands, meaning as soon as he has funds applicable to that purpose, and the succeeding clause, that he may retain in his hands the necessary expenses of administration, qualifying the preceding provision so as to allow the administrator, subject to the discretion of the court, to retain enough to pay his expenses of administration until it becomes due under the order of the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1074, 1075, 1124; Dec. Dig. ☞277.]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ☞261—
CLAIMS—PAYMENT OF DEBTS—COMMISSIONS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1647, giving to the superior court in the administration of a decedent's estate control of the payment of claims, and authorizing it to order payment of debts as the circumstances of the estate may require, the court may direct the administrator to pay funeral and last sickness expenses, prior to allowance or payment of the administrator's commissions.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Judicial settlement of the estate of Walter Magorty, deceased. On appeal from an order directing a payment of claims. Reversed, with directions.

Maurice J. Rankin, of San Jose, for appellant. T. A. Perkins, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHAW, J. [1] It is the opinion of the court that, under section 1643 of the Code of Civil Procedure, funeral expenses rank as a debt of the estate similar in character to other debts in many respects, but payable in preference to all other debts, and that the provision of section 1646 that the executor or administrator, as soon as he has sufficient funds in his hands, must pay the funeral expenses, expenses of the last illness, and allowance made for the family of the decedent, means that as soon as he has funds in his hands applicable to that purpose he must pay these claims. The next sentence of that section, "He may retain in his hands the necessary expenses of administration," we think, qualifies the preceding part and allows the administrator, subject to the discretion and power of the court to order him to do otherwise, to retain enough to pay his expenses of administration until it becomes due under an order of the court.

[2] We do not mean that he may in all cases hold out enough to pay his commissions, because, under section 1647, the court has control of that matter, and may order payment of debts as the circumstances of the estate may require. This would give the court authority to direct the payment of money for funeral expenses prior to the allowance or payment of the commissions. In reversing the order we do not intend to approve, or direct the court to allow, the amount claimed as commissions. Whether the fact that this mortgaged property was lost to the estate without any real administration having taken place, if true, would authorize the court to reduce the commissions to the amount allowed on the balance of the estate we do not say.

The order is reversed, with directions to the lower court to proceed to retry the cause in accordance with this opinion, and allow the administrator to receive as commissions whatever amount it holds he is entitled to under the law, in preference to the funeral expenses.

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE ☞273—COMMUNITY
PROPERTY—RIGHTS OF WIDOW.

In the absence of contrary provision in the will, a widow takes one-half the community property by survivorship, plus whatever else the will may give her.

2. TAXATION ⚭866—WILLS ⚭525—INHERITANCE TAX—SHARE OF WIDOW IN COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

Where a testator wills half his estate, which is wholly community property, to his widow, she takes three-fourths of the whole as of the testator's death, and no subsequent waiver executed by her to the other heirs can defeat the state's right to an inheritance tax on such portion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. ⚭866; Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1129-1139; Dec. Dig. ⚭525.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Pietro Carlo Rossi, etc., deceased. From an order fixing the amount of the inheritance tax, the treasurer appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Albert H. Elliott, Asst. Inheritance Tax Atty., of San Francisco (Hartley F. Peart and U. S. Webb, both of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant. Ambrose Gherini, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. By his will the testator left one-half of his "property or possessions" to his wife and the other one-half to be distributed in equal shares among his sons and daughters. The estate was all community property. The court below charged the widow with inheritance tax on only one-half of the entire community property, and from this order the treasurer appeals.

[1, 2] There is nothing in this will to indicate an intention to make the testamentary gift to the widow stand in lieu of her community interest. The rule has been established by many cases that, in the absence of something in the will to indicate that intention, the widow will take one-half of the community property by virtue of survivorship and will take whatever is given her under the will in addition. This rests upon the presumption that the testator made his will in contemplation of the rule of law that his power of testamentary disposition extends to only one-half of the community property. As he cannot give away the widow's half of the community property by will, he is presumed to make his will with reference to the other half only. She therefore takes the one-half as survivor of the community and takes such portion of the other half as the husband has given her by the will. Where he gives her one-half of his estate, she takes three-fourths of the entire community property. This rule and the reasons for it are well stated in Estate of Gilmore, 81 Cal. 240, 22 Pac. 655. See, also, Estate of Prager, 166 Cal. 450, 137 Pac. 37, approving the rule laid down in the Gilmore Case, and citing many other cases. There is no ground of distinction between this case and those referred to. If, as is suggested in the record before us, the widow filed a "waiver" of her right to anything over one-half of the estate, it was a mere voluntary conveyance or transfer by her of property to which she was entitled under the will or as successor to the community. She had become the absolute owner of three-fourths of the estate upon the death of the testator and was not called upon to make an election or to waive anything. That being so, the right of the state to the inheritance tax, based upon three-fourths of the estate, vested upon the death of the testator (Estate of Stanford, 126 Cal. 112, 54 Pac. 259, 58 Pac. 462, 45 L. R. A. 788), and could not be affected by any subsequent arrangement that might be made by the heirs.

The order is reversed, with directions to the court below to fix the inheritance tax in accordance with the views here expressed.

1. CONSPIRACY ⚡38—CRIMINAL CONSPIRACY—OFFENSES.

Persons forming a conspiracy, within Pen. Code, § 182, punishing two or more persons conspiring to commit any crime, to cheat and defraud any person of any property by criminal means, to commit any act injurious to the public health, public morals, or for the perversion or obstruction of justice, are not relieved from liability for a conspiracy merely because they succeeded in perpetrating the acts of crime enumerated, which became crimes under other provisions of the Code punishing the specific offenses.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡829—INSTRUCTIONS—REFUSAL OF INSTRUCTION COVERED BY CHARGE GIVEN.

It is not error to refuse requested instructions covered in substance by instructions given, for accused, under the Code permitting the submission of his requests, is entitled only to have the substance of the law applicable to his case embodied in the instructions.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡423—CONSPIRACY—EVIDENCE OF CONSPIRATORS—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where the state produces evidence tending to establish the fact of a criminal conspiracy, every act and declaration of each member of the conspiracy, in pursuance of the original plan, and with reference to the common object, is original evidence against each, and it is immaterial at what time any one of the persons charged entered into the conspiracy.

4. CONSPIRACY ⚡41—CRIMINAL CONSPIRACY—LIABILITY OF CONSPIRATORS.

One entering into a criminal conspiracy is deemed in law a party to every act which had before been done by any of the conspirators, as well as a party to every act which may afterward be done in furtherance of the common design.

5. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡427—EVIDENCE—CONSPIRACY—DECLARATION OF CONSPIRATORS.

Before acts or declarations of one or more conspirators, done or made prior to the entering into the conspiracy of a particular person charged, can be used in evidence against him, the fact of a conspiracy at the time the acts were done or declarations made must be shown by some degree of proof sufficient to justify the court in admitting the evidence of the prior acts or declarations, and the evidence cannot consist merely of the acts and declarations of the alleged conspirators, but must be in the nature of an independent showing of the existence of the conspiracy at the very time when the acts were done or declarations made.

6. CRIMINAL LAW ☞ 1186—APPEAL—REVERSAL—PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

Where, on the trial of two police officers for conspiring with other officers and bunco men to permit bunco men to commit criminal acts and divide the proceeds with the officers, the evidence showed the commission, after defendants joined the conspiracy, of four overt acts of crime by the bunco men and a division of the profits, error in permitting the bunco men to testify to at least 20 specific cases of swindling and larceny prior to 1912, without first requiring the state to prove, by independent testimony, the existence of the conspiracy at that time, resulted in a miscarriage of justice, within Const. art. 6, § 4½, prohibiting the setting aside of a conviction for error, unless the error resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; William P. Lawlor, Judge.

Arthur F. MacPhee and another were convicted of conspiracy, and they appeal. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

A. L. O'Grady, Thos. V. Eddy, and Nathan C. Coghlan, all of San Francisco, for appellants. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from the judgment of conviction of the defendants upon the charge of having violated the provisions of section 182 of the Penal Code relating to conspiracy, and from an order denying a new trial.

The defendants herein, together with a number of other persons, members of the police force of San Francisco, were accused by an indictment of the grand jury of having entered into a conspiracy with one Mike Gallo, and a number of other persons, alleged to have been bunco men, by which the latter were to be given leeway for the perpetration of various frauds and crimes, out of which the police officers involved in the conspiracy were to receive a share of the ill-gotten gains as the reward of their lack of molestation. The two defendants herein demanded that they be tried separately from the rest of the alleged conspirators, and they were accordingly so tried, and, having been convicted, are now prosecuting this appeal.

[1] It is the first contention of the appellants that the indictment is defective in the fact that it charges the defendants with two crimes, viz., a conspiracy under section 182 of the Penal Code, and also the offense of receiving bribes under section 68 of the Penal Code. We cannot agree with this contention. The indictment is sufficient to charge the offense of a conspiracy to commit or connive at the commission of the several kinds of offenses enumerated in section 182 of the Penal Code. The language of that section is inclusive and elastic enough to permit the framing of an indictment charging a conspiracy to do or permit the doing of any or all of the illegal acts referred to therein; and the fact that the parties to the conspiracy succeeded in perpetrating the acts of crime or fraud specified in the section, which thus became crimes under those other sections of the Code forbidding these specific offenses, would not in any wise relieve the conspirators from their liability under section 182 of the Penal Code. To hold otherwise would be to practically nullify that section by making success in the consummation of its enumerated acts of fraud and crime a defense to the conspiracy by which that success was made possible.

[2] Appellants also find fault with the action of the court in refusing to give a number of instructions requested by the defendants. It is unnecessary for us to review these several refused instructions in detail, for the reason that, after a careful consideration of the entire body of the court's instructions which were given to the jury, we are satisfied that the substance of the several instructions requested by the defendants and refused by the court is to be found in the instructions which the court gave.

The defendant in any given case is not entitled, under the section of the Code which permits the submission to the court of the defendant's requested instructions, to have his own particular phrasing of the law adopted by the court and given to the jury. All that he is entitled to is to have the substance of the law applicable to his case set forth by the court correctly in its instructions; and this we think was done in this case and in respect of the particular matters at which the present objection to the action of the court is aimed.

The appellants further contend that the court committed numerous errors in the admission of certain testimony going to show that upon specific occasions prior to the time when the defendants are claimed to have entered into this alleged conspiracy, or to have had any knowledge of its existence, between the designated bunco men and their codefendants, other specific crimes had been committed by one or other of the bunco men with whom these defendants are charged with having afterward conspired with a view to the commission by the former of later and similar offenses; and in this same connection it is further contended by the appellants that the court erred in its instruction to the jury that:

"A person coming into a conspiracy after its formation is deemed in law a party to all acts done or declarations made by any of the other alleged conspirators either before or afterward in furtherance of the common design."

The particular facts to the admission of which in evidence objection was made, and respecting which the foregoing instruction was given, are these: The evidence offered by the prosecution showed that the defendants were first assigned to the bunco and pickpocket detail by their superior officers in charge of the police department on January 29, 1912, and there is no evidence of any knowledge of or connection with the alleged conspiracy on their part prior to that date. One of the main witnesses for the prosecution was Mike Gallo, a bunco man, and one of the alleged co-conspirators whose acts of crime and fraud were to be winked at by the police. Gallo was asked by the prosecution to testify to specific acts of swindling and crime committed by him prior to the time of the first connection of the defendants with the alleged conspiracy; as, for instance, to the swindling of one Bonacosi on April 23, 1911, of one Pennelli on June 19, 1911, and of one Nadotti on November 29, 1911. Several other bunco men were also called to testify to a number of other specific acts of fraud and crime committed by them during the years 1910 and 1911. The prosecution also, by these several witnesses, sought to introduce evidence of conversations had from time to time during a period prior to January, 1912, and dating as far back as the year 1910, between these several witnesses and members of the police force other than the defendants, who were asserted during this period to have been co-conspirators with these witnesses. To the testimony of each of these witnesses, and to the admission of each detail of the foregoing evidence, the defendants introduced the specific objection that as to them the matters sought to be elicited were incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial, hearsay, and not binding upon these defendants, for the reason that these alleged acts were committed and conversations held without the presence or knowledge of the defendants and before the time of their alleged entrance into the conspiracy in question, and that no foundation had been laid for the admission of such evidence by proof aliunde of the existence of the conspiracy at the time these several acts were done and declarations made. The justification of the prosecution for the offer and of the court for the admission of this line of proof is to be found in that portion of the transcript from which it appears that, after the people had presented some evidence tending to show that the connection of the defendants with the conspiracy began in January, 1912, the district attorney stated to the court that he proposed to go back to 1910, and trace the conspiracy down from that time, showing its then existence and the members who then were enlisted in it; and that he proposed to show that the same body of conspirators were in it before 1912, when the defendants joined themselves to it; that the same class of crimes were being committed and were being protected in the same way by the police officers who were indicted with these defendants, and that they were receiving the same percentages as their profits from the nefarious scheme. The court, in passing upon the admissibility of this proposed line of evidence, said:

"It is proper, when an individual is shown to have become a member of the conspiracy after the conspiracy was formed, to prove the acts and declarations of the conspirators prior to that time upon the doctrine of adoption; that is to say, when the latter member becomes identified with the conspiracy, by such connection he thereby assumes responsibility for all that has been done up to that time."

Acting upon this ruling the court admitted, over the specific and repeated objections of the defendant, all of the foregoing line of testimony, and later in its charge to the jury gave the above-quoted instruction.

[3, 4] It is a well-established principle of evidence in cases of conspiracy that, after the foundation has first been laid by proof tending to establish the fact of the conspiracy, every act and declaration of each member of the confederacy in pursuance of the original concerted plan and with reference to the common object is, in contemplation of law, the act and declaration of them all, and is therefore original evidence against each of them; and it makes no difference at what time any one of the persons charged entered into the conspiracy, for every one who does enter into such a common purpose and design is deemed in law a party to every act which had before been done by the others, as well as a party to every act which may afterward be done by any of the others in furtherance of such common design. 1 Greenl. on Ev. (16th Ed.) p. 305, and cases cited; 2 Whart. Crim. Law (10th Ed.) § 1399; Id., p. 1434, and cases cited.

[5] The statement of the foregoing principle of law, however, presupposes that before the acts or declarations of one or more of the co-conspirators, done or made at a time prior to the entering into the conspiracy by the particular person charged, can be used in evidence against him, the fact of the existence of the conspiracy at the time such acts were done or declarations made must have been shown by some degree of proof sufficient to justify the court in admitting the evidence of such prior acts or declarations; and that such proof cannot consist merely in the acts and declarations of the alleged co-conspirators, but must be in the nature of an independent showing as to the existence of the conspiracy at the very time when the acts were done or declarations made by which the persons alleged to have subsequently joined the conspiracy are sought to be bound.

That this is an equally well-settled principle of law relating to the proof essential in conspiracy cases will be found fully supported in 2 Whart. Crim. Ev. (2d Ed.) pp. 1430-1432, and cases cited. Let us seek to apply this principle to the case in hand. The defendants MacPhee and Taylor, according to the evidence and admissions of the prosecution, first joined the alleged conspiracy in January, 1912. It is claimed by the respondent that this conspiracy had then been in existence for a period of about two years, during which prior period a number of acts of fraud and crime had been perpetrated by the bunco men, and a number of incriminating talks and transactions been indulged in by the policemen then included in the conspiracy. These acts, talks, and transactions among the then alleged co-conspirators are offered and admitted on behalf of the prosecution against these particular defendants upon the theory that, having entered into a going conspiracy, they are bound by what had gone before. It is indispensable, however, that, before this evidence could have been rightfully admitted, some degree of proof aliunde must have been presented tending to prove the existence of the conspiracy among those then associated in it and whose acts and declarations are sought to be so used. The record in this case is voluminous, but a patient and careful examination of it fails to disclose any evidence whatever, either direct or circumstantial, outside of the statements of the co-conspirators themselves, tending in any degree to establish the existence of the conspiracy during the years 1910 and 1911 to which the defendants are alleged to have allied themselves in January, 1912. Not a single victim of any of the acts of fraud and crime to which the bunco men Gallo, Cordano, and others testify in detail as occurring during these former years is produced to support their story; nor is any evidence or record of any kind presented which tends in any degree to establish the commission of the offenses to which these admitted co-conspirators themselves testify with great particularity. In the entire absence of such proof aliunde tending to establish the existence of such conspiracy, during these prior years, the action of the court in admitting in evidence the acts and declarations of the alleged co-conspirators during those years against these defendants must be held to be prejudicial error; and it therefore necessarily follows that the giving of the instruction of the court above quoted, which would be correct in a proper case, but which is predicated upon the admissibility and existence of such evidence in the pending cause, must also be held to be error materially affecting the defendants' case.

There are certain other assignments of error on the part of the appellants, but as these chiefly refer to the rulings of the court upon matters involved in the taking of the testimony erroneously admitted, as above set forth, they do not require particular consideration.

[6] The foregoing conclusions require a consideration of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution as to its application to the case at bar. That the errors of the trial court above set forth were substantial and highly prejudicial to the defendants' case a brief reconsideration of the evidence will serve to demonstrate. The defendants are alleged to have become members of the conspiracy in question in the month of January, 1912. After that time there were four overt acts of the conspiring bunco men, largely, if not chiefly, supported by their own evidence, and in the knowledge, protection, and profits of which the defendants are claimed to have participated, but which participation each of the defendants under oath circumstantially denies. On the other hand, the reporter's transcript discloses that the court permitted a number of these same self-confessed bunco men to testify to at least 20 specific cases of swindling and larceny committed during the years 1910 and 1911, with much of circumstance and detail, and with numerous conversations with the policemen, other than the defendants, who were their alleged co-conspirators during this period, at which interviews percentages of division were agreed upon and a distribution had of ill-gotten gains. This mass of testimony, occupying several hundred pages of the transcript, was, as we have seen, erroneously admitted in evidence by the court. That its admission would have a highly prejudicial effect upon the minds and judgment of jurors there can be no doubt; and that its consideration, especially in view of the charge of the court, would contribute materially to their verdict we think to be a matter beyond dispute. After a most careful consideration of the entire cause, including the evidence, but without the presence of the actual witnesses before us, we are unable to determine whether the defendants would or would not have been convicted by the jury had this erroneously admitted testimony been withdrawn from their consideration. This being so, we do not feel that section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution can be given application to uphold the judgment in the case at bar. People v. O'Bryan, 165 Cal. 55, 130 Pac. 1042; People v. Fleming, 106 Cal. 357, 136 Pac. 291; People v. Wilson, 23 Cal. App. 513, 138 Pac. 971.

NEVADA COUNTY. (Civ. 1319.)

1. VENUE — 57 — CHANGE OF — ORDER.

Unless the parties apply for or consent to the transfer of a cause, a disqualified judge cannot, without notice to the parties or hearing, transfer a cause from one county to another.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. § 87; Dec. Dig. 57.]

2. JUDGES — 39 — DISQUALIFICATION — EFFECT.

Where a judge is disqualified, and there is no motion for a transfer, and the parties do not consent thereto, he may either call in a qualified judge to preside, or secure from the Governor a designation of an unbiased judge from another county for the particular case.

3. PROHIBITION — 5 — RIGHT TO REMEDY.

Where a disqualified judge, without notice to, or consent of, the parties, transferred the cause to another county, one objecting is entitled to prohibition unless some other remedy is available.

4. PROHIBITION — 3 — RIGHT TO REMEDY — OBJECTIONS.

Where the court, to which a cause was transferred by a disqualified judge without motion or notice to the parties, indicated that it erroneously deemed it had jurisdiction, prohibition will issue to restrain it from proceeding to trial; there being no inference that an appropriate objection would prevent the court from trying the cause.

Application by Lewis Schontz Keeley for a writ of prohibition against the Superior Court of the County of Nevada. Writ issued.

Tuttle & Tuttle, of Auburn, for petitioner. J. M. Walling, of Nevada City, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The application is for a writ of prohibition to restrain respondent from trying a certain proceeding growing out of the trial of the action of "Dora Alice Keeley, Plaintiff, v. Lewis Schontz Keeley, Defendant." From the petition it appears that said action was begun in the superior court of Placer county, having for its object a judgment of divorce and the custody of the minor child of said parties. An answer and cross-complaint was filed by defendant seeking similar relief for himself. One W. J. Prewett, the son of Hon. J. E. Prewett, judge of said superior court, appeared in said action as attorney for plaintiff.

Thereafter Hon. Wm. M. Finch, judge of the superior court of Glenn county, was requested by Judge Prewett to preside at the trial of said cause, and the latter set the time for said trial. The case was duly tried by Judge Finch, and judgment was rendered denying a divorce to each party, but granting to plaintiff the custody of said minor child, providing, however, that the child should be allowed to visit and remain with the mother of defendant four months in each year. The petition further alleges:

"That thereafter, on the 24th day of July, 1914, there was served and filed in said action by plaintiff a petition for an order modifying the above-mentioned judgment relative to the custody of said minor child, said petition being made by the plaintiff in said action of Keeley v. Keeley, and J. M. Walling appearing as sole attorney for petitioner therein, and the said W. J. Prewett did not appear in said petition as attorney or in any other manner, and never has appeared in said action after the entry of said judgment as aforesaid." That an order to show cause was made by Judge Finch and set for hearing on September 28th at 10 o'clock a. m., in the superior court of said Placer county, and said order was duly served and filed. On July 24, Judge Prewett also made an order setting said petition for hearing at the same time and place. Thereafter, on August 29th, he made the following order:

"Keeley v. Keeley.

"In this case it is made to appear to this court that the judge thereof is disqualified under the law from further acting herein.

"It is further made to appear to this court that a proceeding regarding the same subject-matter is now pending in the superior court of the county of Nevada, state of California.

"It is further made to appear to the court that the county seat of Nevada county is much nearer to the residences of the respective litigants than any county seat of any other county.

"It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the aforesaid cause be, and the same is hereby, transferred to the superior court of the county of Nevada, state of California; and the clerk of this court is hereby directed and requested to transmit to said superior court of said Nevada county all the records and files in said case."

Having alleged that the clerk obeyed said order, the petition proceeds:

"That no motion or any application whatever was made, or ever has been made, for or in respect to said last-mentioned order, nor was any motion made by either party to transfer said action to the superior court of Nevada county, or any other county; that no request was made by plaintiff to transfer said action to any court; that defendant is informed and believes, and therefore alleges it to be a fact, that said order was made without the knowledge of any of the parties or attorneys in said action, and that none of the said parties or attorneys in said action knew or had any intimation whatever that said order would be made, but, on the contrary, all of said parties were prepared to proceed with the hearing of said petition before said Hon. William M. Finch, judge as aforesaid, on September 28, 1914, at 10 o'clock a. m., in the superior court of Placer county; that neither defendant nor his attorneys ever at any time agreed or stipulated that said action should be transferred to the superior court of Nevada county, or any other county, nor was the said matter ever presented to their notice or consideration, nor was any opportunity afforded either party to agree or disagree to the transfer of said action to any court; * * * that there are not now, nor ever have been, proceedings regarding the same subject-matter pending in the superior court of Nevada county, and the matter of the custody of said minor child has never been presented to said superior court of Nevada county in any manner; * * * that said Hon. William M. Finch is now, and during all the times herein mentioned was qualified to preside in and try said cause, and all matters connected therewith, and your petitioner is informed and believes, and therefore alleges it to be a fact, that said Hon. William M. Finch is ready and willing to hear said petition at the time and place set for the same, and to proceed with the determination of all matters pending in said action."

A demurrer and an answer have been filed herein by respondent. None of the allegations of said petition is denied, however, except as to the disqualification of Judge Pre-wett, it being alleged that he was and is disqualified by reason of his son's connection with the case. The answer also sets forth "that said petitioner, Lewis Schontz Keeley, has not appeared in said superior court of Nevada county at any time, nor has any application been made to, or objection presented in, this court to the court proceeding to hear and determine the matter presented or questioning the jurisdiction of this court in said matter," and, furthermore, "that no application has at any time been made to the superior court of Placer county, or the judge thereof, asking for a revocation of the order of transfer set forth in the petition herein."

[1] There seems to be no question that the order transferring said cause to the superior court of Nevada county was without authority and entirely void. In Bohn v. Bohn, 164 Cal. 536, 129 Pac. 983, discussing a change of the place of trial, the Supreme Court said:

"The change can only be effected through an order of the court after its judicial action has been invoked, by bringing the matter on for hearing, where the right of the defendant to the transfer can be contested by the plaintiff. The court must be applied to for an order of transfer."

In the more recent case of Ex parte Burch (Sup.) 141 Pac. 813, it is said:

"It may be contended that section 398, Code of Civil Procedure, alone applies to the motion here considered, and that the notice contemplated by section 397 of that Code is not necessary. Subdivision 4 of the latter section indicates, however, that the Legislature intended such notice to be given. Livermore v. Brundage, supra (64 Cal. 299 [30 Pac. 848]), does not hold that such a motion need not be noticed at all. It merely decides that the judge who is disqualified need not be served."

[2] Of course, it does not follow that a disqualified judge is compelled to try the cause if no motion is made for a transfer or if the parties do not consent thereto. In such contingency the course for him to pursue is pointed out in said Burch decision in the following language:

"In Imperial Land Co. v. Imperial Irrigation District [166 Cal. 491], 137 Pac. 234, this court suggested two methods whereby a qualified judge may be secured to preside at a trial in a county in which the only resident judge of the superior court is disqualified; one by calling a judge to hold an extra session; another by securing from the Governor a designation of an unbiased judge from another county for the particular case."

In the present instance, as the petition shows, there was a qualified judge from another county ready and willing to proceed with the hearing. The order in question having been made without motion or notice was therefore in excess of jurisdiction and void, and it could, manifestly, confer upon the superior court of Nevada county no authority to hear the cause.

[3, 4] It is therefore a case for prohibition unless some other adequate remedy is clearly available.

There is force in the suggestion of respondent, in this connection, that petitioner should appear in the court below and object to any proceeding in the matter on the ground that the court has no jurisdiction of the cause; the inference being that the court would adopt petitioner's view and decline to proceed further. As to this, it is said, in Baughman v. Superior Court, 72 Cal. 576, 14 Pac. 208:

"It may be added that the petition does not distinctly show that objection was made to the proposed action of the superior court on the ground that it would be beyond its jurisdiction. It has been repeatedly held here that prohibition will not go from this court unless the attention of the court whose proceedings are sought to be arrested, has been called to the alleged excess of jurisdiction. Southern Pacific R. R. Co. v. Superior Court, 59 Cal. 475."

Ordinarily, no doubt, such course should be pursued, but in this proceeding an order to show cause was issued, and from the return of respondent contesting the sufficiency of the petition we think it is fairly inferable that the learned trial judge of Nevada county does not agree with petitioner, and that the course suggested would be un-availing.

At any rate, we have some discretion in the matter, and, believing as we do that respondent has no jurisdiction, we think the simplest and most satisfactory course is to issue the writ, assuming that respondent will direct the records to be returned to Placer county. The latter court, no doubt, upon the proper motion being made, will set aside its former order and set the cause down for trial.

It is ordered that the peremptory writ issue.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

BARRY v. SUTTER. (Civ. 1230.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California, Dec. 28, 1914. On Petition for Rehearing, Jan. 27, 1915.)

1. BOUNDARIES — 48 — ESTABLISHMENT — AGREEMENT OF PARTIES.

Where one of two adjoining owners, recognizing their boundary line as such, makes such valuable improvements as to work great injury to him if the line be disturbed, the other, with whose knowledge and acquiescence the improvement was made, will be estopped from afterwards alleging such mistake in the boundary as would deprive the first party of his improvements.

2. DEEDS ¶195, 196—EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTION AND BURDEN OF PROOF—INVALIDITY.

The presumption is in favor of the validity of a deed, and the party seeking to set it aside on the ground of fraud, mistake, failure of consideration, and misrepresentation, has the burden of proving those issues.

3. DEEDS ¶210, 211—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—VALIDITY.

Where plaintiff sought to set aside deed from his ancestor to defendant's grantor on the ground of fraud, mistake, failure of consideration, and misrepresentation, evidence held to sustain a finding that the deed was not invalid.

4. QUIETING TITLE ¶54—COSTS.

In an action to quiet title, wherein judgment for plaintiff was stipulated except as to the part described in the defendant's answer, and where the deed from plaintiff's ancestor to defendant's grantor was unsuccessfully assailed, defendant was entitled to his costs.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; B. V. Sargent, Judge.

Action by John Barry against William Sutter. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Samuel C. Wiel, of San Francisco, for appellant. Peter A. Breen, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The controversy is over a narrow strip of land, constituting a part of Mission block No. 84 in the city and county of San Francisco. There are three counts in the complaint. The first is in the usual form of an action to quiet title; the second and third counts seek to set aside a deed from John Barry, the original plaintiff, to William Lyons, respondent's grantor, on the ground of fraud, mistake, failure of consideration, and misrepresentation. Said instrument is in the form of a quitclaim deed and purports to convey by metes and bounds the land described in defendant's answer. The answer disclaims all interest in the property described in the amended complaint, except so much thereof as is embraced within that described in the answer, and specifically denies the allegations of the second and third counts of the complaint in reference to the execution of said deed, and alleges that it was freely and voluntarily made with full knowledge of the facts. After the commencement of the action, the original plaintiff died, and John Barry, his son, was substituted as plaintiff. On November 28, 1911, by stipulation, plaintiff had entered a "judgment in part," quieting his title to all of the property described in the amended complaint except the portion thereof embraced in the answer, "said judgment being without prejudice to any rights which the plaintiff or said defendant William Sutter may have in the land or premises in the answer described, as to which last mentioned land and premises the cause was adjudged to remain at issue to be tried upon the law and facts applicable thereto." The adjoining owners acquired their properties in 1873 from a common grantor. A year later they built their houses and occupied them without dispute or question from 1874 to 1910, over 35 years. In 1910, one of the adjoining owners sold his piece to William Sutter, defendant and respondent herein. He had the land surveyed, and found that the boundary line described in the deeds of 1873 was 3 feet and 7 inches from the line which had been recognized as such and upon which the houses had been built. Whereupon, possession was demanded by respondent of said strip, and this action was begun soon thereafter.

[1] Appellant, in addition to his attack upon said quitclaim deed, claims that the facts bring the case within the rule announced in Dundas v. Lankershim, 155 Cal. 692, 102 Pac. 925, and other cases, holding that the line actually located and marked on the ground must be accepted as the true boundary regardless of its accuracy as shown by subsequent measurements, but especially and emphatically is it declared that we have the condition pointed out in Helm v. Wilson, 76 Cal. 486, 18 Pac. 608, as follows:

"Beside, it appears that in 1884 the defendant, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the plaintiff, erected valuable improvements upon the disputed 'strip.' It has been held that, even without any agreement more than is implied from their acts, if two persons trace their dividing line, and, both recognizing it as such, one goes forward with the knowledge and acquiescence of the other, and makes valuable improvements, so valuable as to work great injury to the party making them if the line be disturbed, the other will be estopped from afterward alleging such mistake as shall deprive the builder of his improvements, and especially if the party seeking to disturb the line knew, at the time the improvements were made, all that he subsequently learned, or if he had the means of knowledge."

Therein is stated what is deemed to be a well-established principle, but we think it is not necessary to determine whether it has application to the case in hand, as we feel constrained to uphold the judgment on the other ground suggested.

After alleging that said deed was signed by John Barry, Sr., and that it purported to convey to W. H. Lyons a portion of the property in controversy, the complaint proceeds:

"That said signature was procured without the presence or advice of his attorney or of any other person upon whom plaintiff is or at any time herein was accustomed to rely for the transaction of his affairs. That the plaintiff was unable to read and did not read said deed, and did not know the contents thereof at the time he signed the same, and that said deed was not read over to him, and that he would have been unable by reason of the aforesaid to understand the purport or effect if it had been read over to him." Furthermore, that defendant falsely represented to him that he was not thereby conveying any of his property to said Lyons and that he would not be occasioned any loss thereby. That said deed was not acknowledged by him; that it was wholly without consideration, and "that plaintiff at the time of said deed was unconsciously ignorant of the fact that said deed conveyed to W. H. Lyons a portion of the real property first herein described, and of the fact that said deed conveyed to said W. H. Lyons property of which the plaintiff was the rightful owner."

[2, 3] It is not disputed, and indeed cannot be, that the presumptions are in favor of the validity of the deed, and the burden of proof was, of course, upon plaintiff as to the issues affecting the purported conveyance of the title. There is, however, no evidence from which a rational inference can be drawn that any misrepresentations were made to the grantor, that any undue influence was exercised, that he did not have the deed read to him or did not thoroughly understand its terms, that it was not, in other words, his entirely voluntary act made understandingly with the intention to convey to the grantee therein named whatever interest said grantor had in the premises included in the description. At most, we may infer that the grantor was somewhat advanced in years, not very strong physically, and that he acted without the advice of his attorney to whom he generally applied for assistance in matters of such moment. These circumstances, however, fall short of justifying an appellate court in reversing the finding in favor of a deed apparently and presumably executed with the formality and solemnity usually and naturally associated with such transactions, there being no confidential relation between the parties.

All the evidence upon the subject was offered by plaintiff, and is substantially as follows: Witness Lyons testified that, immediately after he discovered from the survey that there was an error in the Barry line, he informed Barry that there was a mistake, and that the latter did not say anything.

"He didn't have anything to say. I did not say anything to him about making a deed to me, or a quitclaim, or moving the line. I didn't at any time ask him for a deed of that property, and I do not know how he came to make the deed that he did make to me."

Augusta Barry, daughter of the grantor, testified that she could not say whether any money passed at the time of the execution of the deed, as she was not present when it was executed. She was asked whether her father was sick at the time, but an objection was sustained; the court, however, stating that plaintiff would be allowed to prove any fact bearing upon the incompetency of the grantor. Counsel for appellant thereafter stated:

"If your honor will give me a chance, I will prove the fact that he was an old man, who had been out of work for a long time. He was getting weak. He was of sound mind, as far as matters go. He left matters in my hands as an attorney when matters came up. In this instance, without having any consultation at all, he was induced to sign a deed signing away half of his house. That is what I am trying to prove in this connection."

The court then stated:

"You get at this properly, and perchance you can get this testimony before the court; that the plaintiff was unable to read, and did not read the said document; did not know the contents of said document; if you can prove that it was not read to him, and he didn't know anything about it; that he was signing a document he didn't believe he was signing; those are all material facts. But this witness does not seem to know anything about it."

Nothing, however, of importance was elicited, beyond the fact that her father was not able to read English, the witness stating that she did not know "anything about the manner in which the deed was drawn up, or whether he was advised by anybody at all on the subject." In response to the question:

"Did Mr. Sutter, the defendant in this action, in your presence, ever say anything to you or anything in your presence in reference to the matter in dispute?"

She replied:

"Yes, sir. He claimed my father was on his property, and he wanted it. That is about all. He claimed father was on his land. He did not say anything at all about the execution of a deed."

Mr. S. C. Wiel testified that Mr. Barry was accustomed in all matters to come to the former's office and ask advice on everything he did.

"He never did anything in connection with that property, or any other property, without first coming to see me. * * * And he never, independently of his own will, acted on anything at all. I know of my own knowledge, I think I can testify to that fact, that he received nothing for the deed."

Mr. Wiel's testimony is probably the most significant of the showing made in behalf of plaintiff, but it is apparent that he was largely stating conclusions. It does not appear whether he was present at the execution of the deed. If he was there, it is strange that he did not testify further concerning it. If he was not present, his declaration that Mr. Barry received nothing for the deed must have been the result of hearsay. But, according to his evidence the fullest credit, it amounts to nothing more than that no money was paid to the grantor of the deed. Not only did it fail to affect or touch the question whether there were other considerations for the conveyance, but there was not even any attempt on the part of appellant to show that Mr. Barry at the time of the execution of the deed was not of sound mind, that any misrepresentations were made, that he was unduly influenced or influenced at all in the transaction, or that, in other words, the deed was not the result of his free and spontaneous volition.

Such being the condition of the record, we can see no other course than to affirm the judgment. It would seem to be a matter of indifference whether the judgment be considered one of nonsuit or upon final submission.

As to this, the record is somewhat uncertain; it concluding as follows:

"Mr. Wiel: That is our case. I would like to argue my point of mistake, that these parties acted upon a mutual mistake, that the boundary line was according to a survey instead of according to their actual location. Mr. Breen: Is that your case, Mr. Wiel? Mr. Wiel: That is my case. The Court: I think you are out of court. Mr. Breen: If that is the plaintiff's case, I want to make a motion for nonsuit. Mr. Wiel (after discussion): I will submit the case and take your honor's ruling. Mr. Breen: I will submit it also. The Court: Judgment for defendant."

At any rate, the cause was submitted on the evidence offered by plaintiff, findings were made and filed, and we find no sufficient reason to disturb the judgment.

[4] Judgment having been entered, as we have seen, in favor of plaintiff as to all the property except the portion described in defendant's answer, the latter alone presenting the question at issue, and the said deed not having been successfully assailed and conveying from plaintiff's predecessor in interest the land described in said answer, defendant was certainly entitled to his costs. This is all that was awarded him, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. In response to appellant's petition for rehearing, we deem it sufficient to say that there is in the record no more evidence of mistake than of fraud. We cannot assume that because the grantor was occupying the property he did not intend to convey it to the grantee. That would be a dangerous and unauthorized principle of construction to apply to an instrument that is presumed to express the intention of the parties. In the absence of a clear showing that he intended otherwise, one must, of course, be held to the plain meaning of the words he uses in the conveyance of real property.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

LEONARD v. OSBURN. (Civ. 1380.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Sept. 24, 1914.)

1. DEEDS 42—VALIDITY—CERTAINTY OF DESCRIPTION.

A deed conveying a lot in Twin Lake Park in Santa Cruz county described as lot 10, block 2, subdivision No. 6, on map made by one B., and filed in county recorder's office, when there was no lot 10 in block 2 on the B. map, nor any subdivision 6, and the block was not divided into lots, but was reserved as a church site, on which a church was already built, but from which it appeared that the lot described could be easily located from the description, was not void for uncertainty of description.

2. DEEDS 38—DESCRIPTION—SUFFICIENCY.

It is not essential to the validity of a deed that the description should be by boundaries, Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Action by Thomas J. Leonard against Hugh R. Osburn. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Hugh R. Osburn, of King City, in pro. per. Charles M. Cassin, of San Jose, and Charles B. Younger, of Santa Cruz, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action to quiet title. Plaintiff recovered judgment as prayed for, from which defendant appeals.

The common source of title was in F. S. Lawrence and E. W. Darling. Plaintiff claims by mesne conveyances through a deed dated December 16, 1892, from the common grantors to Mrs. Linda M. Adams. This deed was filed for record in the office of the county recorder of Santa Cruz county on May 23, 1893. By its terms it conveyed a lot of land lying in Twin Lake Park, in Santa Cruz county, described as lot 10, block 2, subdivision No. 6, as the same is shown on the map of Twin Lake Park made by E. D. Perry, surveyor, filed August 22, 1891, in the office of the recorder of Santa Cruz county.

Defendant's claim is based on mesne conveyances through a deed dated August 4, 1892, from the common grantors to Mrs. Celia Higgins. The deed was filed for record August 27, 1892—some four months prior to the date of the deed to Linda M. Adams, under which plaintiff claims—and, according to its terms, conveyed a lot lying in Twin Lake Park in Santa Cruz county, described as lot 10, block 2, subdivision No. 6, as the same is shown on the map of Twin Lake Park made by N. E. Beckwith, surveyor, and filed May 29, 1890, in the office of the recorder of Santa Cruz county.

It thus appears that the deed through which defendant claims was executed and recorded prior to the one under which the plaintiff claims; and it also appears from the evidence that the reference to the map in the earlier deed was erroneous; the map intended to be referred to being the one made by Perry, and correctly described in the deed to plaintiff's predecessor. The questions for decision are: (1) Is the description in the earlier deed so vague or inaccurate as to be void for uncertainty; and (2) is such description, in a deed duly recorded, sufficient to charge subsequent purchasers with notice that lot 10 of block 2 in subdivision 6, according to a map made by E. D. Perry, had been conveyed?

N. K. Beckwith did make a plat of land lying in Twin Lake Park, but it was not of subdivision No. 6, but of subdivision No. 1. The only map made of subdivision 6 is the one made by E. D. Perry. These two subdivisions were separated by a small lake, and were over 1,000 feet apart. Apparently the lots in subdivision 1 were disposed of before subdivision 6 was platted, and, in selling lots in this last-named subdivision, the same printed form of deed was used as for the sale of lots in the former subdivision. This printed form of deed left blank spaces for the names of the parties, the date and description of the lots; the balance, including the description of the map with reference to which the lots were sold, and its date of filing, etc., being printed. The evidence shows that a number of mistakes were made in selling lots in subdivision 6; and it is the theory of the defendant that, when the common grantors conveyed the lot in controversy to his predecessor, the old printed form of deed was employed, without making any change in the name of the surveyor and the date of filing the plat. It was admitted that each party to this suit was a purchaser for value, and that their predecessors were purchasers of whatever they acquired, for value and without actual notice. It was also admitted that the only notice that the plaintiff or his predecessors had as to the condition of the title to the property was such constructive notice as was disclosed by the records in Santa Cruz county.

[1-3] It appears that there was no lot 10 in block 2 on the Beckwith map, nor any subdivision 6; that that block was not divided into lots, but was reserved as a site for a church, which church was already built in the year 1890. It was also shown by competent testimony that the lot described in the deed through which defendant derives title can, from the description therein, be easily located, notwithstanding the false reference to the map. The deed, therefore, it is plain, cannot be regarded as void for uncertainty. A deed is not void for uncertainty because of errors or inconsistency in some of the particulars of the description. Generally speaking, a deed will be sustained if it is possible from the whole description to ascertain and identify the land intended to be conveyed. It is not essential to the validity of a deed, says Devlin in his work on Real Estate, § 1012, that the description should be by boundaries, courses, or distances, or by reference to monuments. If the description is general the particular subject-matter to which the description applies may be ascertained by parol evidence. Nor will the deed be void for uncertainty from the fact that the description in part is false or incorrect, if there are sufficient particulars given to enable the premises intended to be conveyed to be identified. Devlin on Real Estate (3d Ed.) § 1016.

[4] The deed not being void for uncertainty, we come now to the second question arising—and which we think is the principal one for decision—viz.: Is the record of such a deed, containing, though it does, an inaccurate description of the property conveyed, sufficient to put subsequent purchasers upon inquiry so as to charge them with notice of what that inquiry, if duly prosecuted, would have disclosed?

In the work by Devlin, already referred to, the author at section 629a says:

"It is the duty of the purchaser to examine the records, and, whether he performs this duty or not, notice will be imputed to him of every fact which an examination of the records would disclose."

And in section 650 the author says:

"In many cases the description is so inaccurate or misleading that the courts have no hesitation in declaring it insufficient to charge purchasers with constructive notice. In others, while the description is erroneous, yet it may be expressed in such a manner, or may be connected with such attendant circumstances, that a purchaser is deemed to be put upon inquiry; and if he fails to prosecute this inquiry he is chargeable with all the notice he might have obtained had he done so."

In the case of Rogers v. McCartney, 3 Cal. App. 34, 84 Pac. 215, this same question of whether the record of a deed, containing an incorrect reference to a map was sufficient to charge with notice a subsequent purchaser, was considered. There the description of the lot conveyed was "lot No. 5 in block 42, at Garvanza, according to a map recorded in book No. 9, pages 45 and 46, Miscellaneous Records." This map did not contain any block numbered 42. There was, however, recorded in book 15, p. 54, of such records, a map containing a block and lot described as "lot 5, block 42, Ralph Rogers' subdivision of blocks 41 and 42 of the Garvanza addition No. 1." Block 42 adjoined the town of Garvanza, and was generally known and treated as a part thereof. The court held that the record containing the erroneous description was sufficient to give constructive notice to an innocent purchaser for a valuable consideration.

We think in the present case that, had the plaintiff's predecessor before purchasing the lot examined the record of the deed of defendant's predecessor, including the map therein referred to, she would undoubtedly have been put upon inquiry, and could not have failed to discover the true facts. She would have discovered that there was no subdivision 6 delineated upon said map, and that in the only subdivision platted thereon, viz., subdivision 1, there was no lot 10 in block 2. Inquiry upon the ground would have quickly brought to light that the lot described in said record was no other than the one she was negotiating to purchase.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is reversed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

PARENT AND CHILD — 17 — "ABANDON" — STATUTE.

Under Civ. Code, § 224, providing that any child left in the care of another by its parents without provision for its support for one year may, after such notice to the parents as the court may require, be determined to be an abandoned child, "abandon," means to relinquish or give up with the intent of never again resuming or claiming one's rights or interest in; to give up absolutely; to forsake entirely; to renounce utterly; to relinquish all connection with or concern in; to desert; to quit; to forsake. And a deserted and destitute mother, who undertook to, but was unable to, pay for the care and support of her child about a year old, and then gave it to one who without her knowledge found it a comfortable home, and thereafter the mother searched for it, found it, and visited it, and refused to consent to its adoption, and demanded it, being then financially able to care for it, she had not abandoned it, but was entitled to her natural right to its care and custody.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Petition by one Thurston and wife to have Florence Cordy declared to be an abandoned child. Order determining her to be an abandoned child, and her mother, Mrs. Annie Cordy, appeals. Reversed. Judgment affirmed 146 Pac. 534.

R. B. Tappan, of Alameda, and F. A. Berlin, of Oakland, for appellant. West & De Journal, of San Francisco (T. C. West, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from an order of the juvenile court of the county of Alameda determining Florence Cordy to be an abandoned child within the meaning of section 224 of the Civil Code. The appeal is prosecuted by the mother of the child.

The practically undisputed facts in the case are these: In the early part of the month of April, 1906, the appellant, Mrs. Annie Cordy, who was then living in San Francisco with her husband and their three children, who were respectively four years, two years, and ten months old, was deserted by her husband, who disappeared, and has not been seen or heard of since. He left his family entirely destitute, and the mother was obliged to turn the children over to the care of a charitable institution and go out to work. This was about three weeks before the earthquake and fire of that year. In that disaster the youngest child, Florence, was badly injured, and was found by its mother in the county hospital. She took the child and nursed it back to health, and then gave it to a Mrs. Zane to keep for her, promising to pay $10 a month for its board. The child was soon returned, and was then placed with another friend, who cared for it a few weeks, and it was then transferred by its mother to Mrs. Condiff, because, as the mother says, she was herself poor and destitute. The latter kept the child for a brief period, when a certain Miss Smith became interested in the welfare of the child, and proposed to Mrs. Condiff to find a home for it. This she did with a family without children named Thurston, who are the respondents here, but upon the understanding apparently that the mother was not to know the whereabouts of the child. When the mother next came to Mrs. Condiff to see her child, she was directed to Miss Smith, who declined to tell her where it was, but agreed to have it brought to her rooms occasionally, where the mother might visit it. This arrangement was carried out for some time, until Miss Smith became lax in sending for the child, and finally refused to let the mother come there to visit it, and also refused to inform her where the child could be seen. The mother finally located the child at the home of the Thurstons, which was then in San Francisco, and went there, but was denied permission to see the child. Shortly thereafter the Thurstons removed from the city, and the mother again lost track of her daughter; until, persisting in her search, she finally learned indirectly that the Thurstons were in Berkeley; and going over there and searching through the directory she at length found their address, and went to their home in her endeavor to see the child. Her request was at first refused, but was at length yielded to, and the mother for the first time in several years saw her little girl; and also saw that she was in a good home and was being cared for and nurtured in comfort and even luxury. The child did not know her as its mother, and Mrs. Thurston says that after seeing the state of the child she requested that it should never be told that she was its mother. This Mrs. Cordy denies; but, even if true, it is only to be taken as another example of the self-effacement of mother love. She was presently asked to consent to the Thurstons' adoption of the child, and at first did so, but on the next day retracted her consent and refused to sign the adoption papers; however, finding that the Thurstons were willing and anxious to keep the little girl, and that it would wring their hearts, as Mrs. Thurston said, to let it go away, and being herself still very poor and sick and destitute and without a home, she left the child with the Thurstons, with the understanding that she could occasionally come and see it. This she did for about three years, when, her financial state improving through her own labors and those of her two elder children, whom she had managed to reclaim, she concluded that she would reunite her family; and hence went to the Thurstons with the request that they deliver her the child. This they refused to do, and a legal struggle for the possession of the child was begun on both sides, the mother applying for a writ of habeas corpus, and the Thurstons instituting adoption proceedings, and in aid thereof petitioning the juvenile court to have Florence Cordy declared to be an abandoned child. It is from the order therein made in their favor that this appeal has been taken.

In none of the proceedings instituted in relation to this matter has the moral or maternal quality and fitness of the mother to have the present custody and control of her child restored to her been called into question; nor has her present financial ability to care for the child in a measure, though probably not to the extent or degree of comfort and luxury to which it has been accustomed, been disputed. The sole question presented upon this appeal is as to the construction to be placed on section 224 of the Civil Code, which, in so far as it relates to the matter before us, reads as follows:

"Any child left in the care and custody of another by its parent or parents, without any provision for its support, for the period of one year, may after such notice to the parent or parents residing within the state and to such other relatives of said child residing within the county as the court shall require, be determined by order of the juvenile court of the county in which said child was so left, to be an abandoned child within the terms of this section." Civ. Code, § 224.

The first and most pertinent question raised by a reading of this section is the question as to whether it contemplates that a child, left in the care and custody of another without provision for its support, may be declared by the court to be "an abandoned child," without an intent on the part of the parent to abandon it having been shown. The word "abandon," as defined by Webster, means:

"To relinquish or give up with the intent of never again resuming or claiming one's rights or interests in; to give up absolutely; to forsake entirely; to renounce utterly; to relinquish all connection with or concern in; to desert, as a person to whom one is bound by a special relation of allegiance or fidelity; to quit; to forsake." Webster's New International Dictionary.

If this is the usual and ordinary meaning of the word "abandon," then it is not to be construed as having a different signification in the section of the Code above quoted, unless the intent of the Legislature to give it another and narrower meaning is to be clearly discerned in the context and from the whole language of the section. This rule of construction should have an especial application to cases of this character, where the natural relation existing between a parent and child is sought to be severed by law. It is the respondent's contention in this case that the language of the section is plain; and that the mere fact of a parent's leaving her child in the care and custody of another for a space of a year without provision for its support is sufficient in itself to warrant a court in determining that the child is an abandoned child. But this cannot have been the legislative intent, for instances will at once occur to the right-thinking and sympathetic mind of the monstrous injustice of the rigid application of such a rule. We think rather that the meaning of the word "abandoned," as above given, was intended by the makers of the law to dominate the section, and to cause to be read into every part and provision of it the idea that the acts of the parent in relation to the child enumerated in the statute must have been done with an intent to abandon the child. She must have left it to the care and custody of others with that intention, and a like intent must be shown to underlie her failure, if she has failed, to make provision for its support.

In the case of Guardianship of Snowball, 156 Cal. 240, 104 Pac. 444, the Supreme Court declared that the term "abandon" was to be given the foregoing meaning in construing section 246 of the Civil Code; and in the later case of Matter of Cozza, 163 Cal. 514, 126 Pac. 161, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 214, the same court declared that this word should be given the same meaning in the construction of section 224 of the Civil Code; and further held in the latter case that the power of the court in adoption proceedings to deprive a parent of her child, being in derogation of her natural right to it, and being a special power conferred by the statute, such statute should be strictly construed; that "the law is solicitous toward maintaining the integrity of the natural relation of parent and child; and in adversary proceedings in adoption, where the absolute severance of that relation is sought, without the consent and against the protest of the parent, the inclination of the courts, as the law contemplates it should be, is in favor of maintaining the natural relation. * * * Every intendment should have been in favor of the claim of the mother under the evidence, and if the statute was open to construction and interpretation it should be construed in support of the right of the natural parent." Matter of Cozza, supra, 163 Cal. 524, 126 Pac. 165, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 214.

No nicer illustration of the propriety and justice of applying this rule of construction to the section of the Code in question need be given than that which is afforded in the case at bar. The evidence shows that this mother, from the time when she was deserted and left destitute by her husband, has persisted in following the movements and watching over the welfare of her child with all the power of which she was capable in her deserted and desperate condition, and with a degree of maternal persistence and solicitude worthy of all commendation; that after years of loss and separation she finally found her child in the care of those who had originally been intrusted with it without her knowledge or consent; that she left her child in the comfortable home of the Thurstons; and that she did not expressly make provision for its support. But the undisputed evidence also shows that at the time she did so they were willing to continue in its care and custody without an agreement for its adoption, while she was unable to assume its care and custody because she was working out by the day, and was poor and destitute and sick and had no home. She thus did the only thing she could do, and she did the best thing that her intuitive mother love could have devised for the present welfare of her child. This being so, it is the more rational and humane interpretation of the law that such conduct on the part of a mother under such conditions and compulsion ought not to be construed as evidencing an intent to abandon her offspring, nor deemed to work a forfeiture of her natural right to the care, custody, and responsive affection of her child.

The order is reversed.

In re CORDY. (S. F. 7039.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 22, 1915.)

1. PARENT AND CHILD §17—ABANDONMENT OF CHILD—STATUTE.

Under Civ. Code, § 224, providing that any child left in the care and custody of another by its parent without provision for its support for one year may, after notice, etc., be determined to be an abandoned child, the intent to abandon the child is necessary to constitute abandonment.

2. PARENT AND CHILD §17—ABANDONMENT—DECLARATION—EFFECT.

In a proceeding to declare a child to be an abandoned child within Civ. Code, § 224, the lack of intent to abandon was not conclusively shown by the mother's declaration that she did not intend to abandon it, if the circumstances and facts showed that she did have such intention.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Petition by one Thurston and wife to have Florence Cordy declared to be an abandoned child. Order determining her to be an abandoned child reversed on hearing after judgment in the district court (146 Pac. 532).

R. B. Tappan, of Alameda, and F. A. Berlin, of Oakland, for appellant. West & De Journal, of San Francisco (T. C. West, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

SHAW, J. [1, 2] The court is of the opinion that the part of section 224 of the Civil Code upon which the respondent relies does not state all of the elements necessary to constitute abandonment, but only defines the circumstances under which the juvenile court can take charge of cases of that kind and determine whether or not there has been an abandonment, and that one of the things necessary to be shown to constitute abandonment is intent on the part of the parent to abandon the child. This evidence does not show such intent. It should be said that the lack of intent is not conclusively shown by the bald declaration of the parent—the mother—that she did not intend to abandon the child. If the circumstances and facts show that she did have such intent, her declaration would not be conclusive.

The opinion of the District Court of Appeal 146 Pac. 532, is satisfactory to the court, and, for the reasons therein given, in addition to those I have just stated, the judgment is reversed.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by the Wise Realty Company and others against Ashby O. Stewart and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Metson, Drew & Mackenzie, of San Francisco, and Albert Fink, of Chicago, Ill., for appellants. W. G. Deal and W. E. F. Deal, Wright & Wright & Stetson, and J. F. Bowie, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. The Wise Realty Company, plaintiff, was the owner of certain stock of the Lincoln Realty Company. J. T. Sullivan and Jafet Lindeberg, plaintiffs, assert a one-third interest in the stock of the Wise Realty Company, and, consequently, in the stock of the Lincoln Realty Company owned by the Wise Realty Company. Defendant Ashby O. Stewart, under claim and color of title to this stock of the Lincoln Realty Company so owned by the Wise Realty Company, sold and conveyed it to his codefendants Kohlberg and others. This action is brought by plaintiffs to have these defendants declared trustees of this stock for the corporation, and, in the event that it should be held that Stewart's fellow defendants are innocent purchasers, then to hold Stewart as involuntary trustee for the proceeds of the sale. This brief statement will aid in the marshaling of the facts, which are somewhat complicated, in their proper relations to the questions involved.

In February, 1908, the board of education of the city and county of San Francisco advertised for bids for the rental of a lot situated at Fifth and Market streets, and known as the Lincoln School property. The call for bids required that each bid be accompanied by a certified check for $10,000 payable to the order of the board. Upon the award the successful bidder was to give a good and sufficient undertaking in the penal sum of $25,000, conditioned upon the faithful performance of the terms and covenants of the lease to be executed. Defendant Stewart possessed moderate means, but much energy. He was worth about $10,000. He was deeply interested in securing the lease of the property. He could not engage in so large an undertaking alone. He enlisted Maurice Rosenthal as a partner or coventurer. Rosenthal, a man of wealth and of knowledge of real estate values in San Francisco, had organized the Wise Realty Company, all the stock of which (though most of it stood in the name of a trustee) was issued to and owned by him. Rosenthal agreed with Stewart to join him upon equal terms, and it was further agreed that for convenience the bid should be submitted in the name of the Wise Realty Company. This was done, and the Wise Realty Company proved to be the successful bidder. After this, and between the 1st and 5th of May, 1908, and before the execution of the lease, plaintiff Sullivan became interested in the venture. Sullivan did not know Stewart, but was a friend of Rosenthal, and under Rosenthal's representations and with the assent of Stewart, all under the belief that Sullivan was a man of large financial resources and could and would aid in carrying out the enterprise, the half interests of Stewart and Rosenthal were divided, Sullivan coming it for a one-third interest, and paying therefor one-third of the amount of the certified check for $10,000 which had been deposited by Rosenthal and Stewart with the bid of the Wise Realty Company. Sullivan, in turn, sold one-half of his one-third interest to Jafet Lindeberg, with the understanding between them that Lindeberg should not be expected to devote any of his personal time or attention to the matter, but that Sullivan should look out for, represent, and manage Lindeberg's interest, as well as his own. Over this there is no dispute, and Lindeberg may, therefore, be eliminated upon the understanding that whatever is said touching the Sullivan interest, for the reasons indicated, applies to the Lindeberg interest as well.

The lease, to the execution of which by the board of education the Wise Realty Company, as successful bidder, had acquired a right, covered a term of 35 years, with a rental of $3,780 per month, payable in advance, for the first 5 years, and $7,245 per month for the remaining 30 years, or a total rental of $2,836,000. In addition, the lessee was to covenant to pay all taxes and erect a four-story building upon the property within 18 months from the date of the execution of the lease, and to keep the building insured for at least $100,000, giving, as has been indicated, an approved undertaking in the sum of $25,000, conditioned upon the lessee's due performance of these terms and covenants. The Wise Realty Company at that time owned no property other than the right to this lease. The beneficial ownership of all of its stock was, and was understood to be, one-third each in Stewart, Rosenthal, and Sullivan. They believed it desirable to organize another corporation with a much larger capitalization and, therefore, with a much larger bonding capacity, to manage their undertaking. Therefore they organized the Lincoln Realty Company. It was understood between the three principals that the lease should be executed to and by the Wise Realty Company, and by it transferred to the Lincoln Realty Company, in consideration of the delivery by the Lincoln Realty Company to the Wise Realty Company of a certain amount of the stock of the Lincoln Realty Company. On May 28th, before the execution of the lease to the Wise Realty Company, Sullivan left for Alaska, after depositing with his friend Rosenthal sufficient securities to cover his one-third proportion of the $25,000 bond which was to accompany the lease.

Following the departure of Sullivan, the associates who remained in San Francisco, and particularly Stewart, were active in the matter of their venture. They sought various modifications of the lease submitted to them for their acceptance, and, in particular, a modification substituting $5,000 cash for the $25,000 bond. They interviewed financial men and institutions to secure money for their enterprise by the sale of bonds of the Lincoln Realty Company and by other methods. They sought to engage tenants and to secure from them advance payments of rent. They interviewed contractors to learn how much or how little of their payments for the erection of the building these contractors would take in bonds of their realty company. They wired Sullivan in Alaska asking him to advance $75,000 "as he had agreed," and again asking him if he could secure "another partner" to whom they would make over a one-sixth interest upon his advancement of $75,000. The replies were disappointing. Sullivan could or would advance no money, and could find no "other partner." Meantime the board of education, through its secretary, was urging and demanding the execution of the lease, and threatening to forfeit the $10,000 deposited by certified check for their failure so to do. On June 27th the secretary, in response to their inquiries whether a cash deposit of $5,000 could be substituted in lieu of the $25,000 bond, replied that he did not see how the terms could be modified. "In my estimation, the board would not be willing to consider the matter of a cash bond of smaller amount which would serve in lieu of the proposed surety bond." Rosenthal became alarmed, and was anxious to be quit of what he had come to regard as a bad and dangerous venture. Upon Sullivan's failure or refusal to advance funds further telegraphic correspondence was opened with him by his San Francisco associates. They first wired him to the effect that they could sell out all of their rights for $25,000, and would be accept. They followed this by another telegram on June 24th in this language:

"Party reduces offer to ten thousand. Are you still willing to invest seventy-five to end this thing if we can get time on balance or shall we sell? Wire."

Upon the same day they followed this dispatch with the following:

"Party refuses to buy at any price. Will forfeit deposit unless you come through as agreed with seventy-five thousand. Wire."

The refusal of Sullivan to advance money, the attitude of the board of education in demanding the $25,000 surety bond, the inability of the associates up to that time successfully to finance their venture, the payments of the monthly rent which were inevitably to be made if the lease was once entered into and the liability to loss, all worked to determine Rosenthal to draw out of the venture. Stewart, still sanguine, and of less financial responsibility, was willing to go ahead and "take a chance." Rosenthal thereupon agreed with Stewart to sell to the latter his and Sullivan's interest for $1,000, and to wait for the remainder of the $3,333 which each had put into the venture upon what was regarded as the remote contingency that Stewart might meet with success in the enterprise and be able out of its proceeds thus further to reimburse them. On July 1, 1908, therefore, the following telegram, signed by Rosenthal and Stewart, was sent to Sullivan in Alaska:

"Cannot make bond. Board will forfeit deposit today. Stewart offers to pay one month's rent, take all our rights, and try to save all or part of our deposit; shall we accept? Answer immediately."

No reply came to this until July 6th, when Sullivan wired as follows to Rosenthal personally:

"Accept any proposition that has any of our money."

The telegram to Sullivan of July 1st was in all essentials true. They could not give the bond because Rosenthal would not do it, and without Rosenthal Stewart was helpless. The board had declared its intention to forfeit the deposit. Later in the day, however, the board notified the Wise Realty Company that it agreed to a modification of the conditions of the lease as requested; namely, it would accept a $5,000 cash deposit in lieu of the $25,000 undertaking. Sullivan, in Alaska, was not notified of this change in the situation, and upon the failure of his associates so to notify him fraud is predicated. This fraud, however, is charged against Stewart, and not against Rosenthal. Yet it is to be remembered that, while the legal obligations of fair play and disclosure were imposed upon all three of the associates by virtue of their relationship, yet that the personal obligations of friendship and fidelity existed between Sullivan and Rosenthal, and not between Sullivan and Stewart. Sullivan and Rosenthal were trusted friends. Sullivan and Stewart were mere acquaintances engaged for purposes of profit in this single venture. Moreover, it is to be remembered that it is to his friend Rosenthal, and not to the two associates who had signed the telegram to him of July 1st, that Sullivan makes reply. In that reply he authorizes Rosenthal to accept any proposition that will return to him any of the money he has invested.

It here becomes necessary to digress for a moment and review the story of these transactions as they were carried out through the instrumentality of the corporations, the equitable ownership of the stock in both of which, as has been pointed out, was in the three associates; the corporations themselves being but convenient mediums for the transaction of their business. The Wise Realty Company executed the lease, and in turn assigned it to the Lincoln Realty Company with its right to the $10,000 deposit. Three shares of the Lincoln Realty Company had been issued standing in the names, one share to each, of the three associates. The Lincoln Realty Company, in consideration of the assignment to it by the Wise Realty Company of the lease, undertook to fulfill all its terms and covenants and to release the Wise Realty Company from all responsibility and liability under the lease, and, further, to deliver to the Wise Realty Company 1,000 shares of the Lincoln Realty Company's stock. All this was done; nominally by the corporations, in fact, however, by Stewart, to whom, prior to July 15th, and after the receipt of Sullivan's telegram of July 6th, Rosenthal had sold all of his and Sullivan's interest, wiring Sullivan to that effect on July 15th, saying:

"Corporation sold lease and deposit for one thousand dollars. What shall I do with your share?"

—and receiving in reply this answer:

"Metson represents us and has authority to collect our share of recovered deposit."

Because of the ostensible corporate ownership the form which the transactions took was the following: The Wise Realty Company sold its 1,000 shares of the Lincoln Realty Company's stock to Williams for $1,000; Williams being admittedly the dummy representative of Stewart, and the transaction taking this form to avoid the direct sale of this stock of the corporation to one who was a director in both. The $1,000 was paid to the Wise Realty Company, and the stock was delivered to Williams, who immediately assigned it to Stewart. Thus of the 1,003 issued shares of stock of the Lincoln Realty Company Williams acquired by this transaction 1,000 shares, Rosenthal's 1 share, and Sullivan's 1 share, to the extent that Rosenthal was authorized to represent Sullivan in making the sale. Stewart interviewed Mr. Metson, who was Sullivan's attorney at law, and Mr. Bernard, who, to a limited extent, was Mr. Sullivan's attorney in fact, and sought the physical indorsement and delivery to himself of the one share of the Lincoln Realty Company stock standing in Sullivan's name, upon the representation that he had purchased it with the Rosenthal interest in the manner above indicated. Mr. Metson refused to make this delivery unless Mr. Sullivan was paid the full amount which he had invested.

While, as has been said, no direct information was conveyed to Sullivan of the fact that the lease was modified, substituting a $5,000 cash deposit for the $25,000 undertaking, Sullivan, in Alaska, was not unaware that something of this kind must have been done, for he testifies that when he sent the telegram of July 6th, above quoted, authorizing Rosenthal to accept any proposition, "he realized that if the deposit bond was not forfeited, then the lease had been duly executed and the bond given, or time for doing these things had been obtained, or some substitute for the bond had been arranged."

The subsequent acts of Stewart here require brief presentation. He had purchased the Rosenthal interest, and over this there is not the slightest controversy. He believed that he had also purchased the Sullivan interest. He had left $5,000 of the $10,000 deposit as the cash deposit called for by the lease. He used the rest of the money, with other money which he borrowed, in payment of installments of rent as they came due, and he energetically endeavored to enlist upon satisfactory terms capital to aid him in his enterprise. He was unsuccessful in so doing. Finally, in September he received an offer for the outright purchase of the lease. Again, because of the corporate character of the ostensible ownership of the lease, that ownership being represented by the 1,003 shares of the Lincoln Realty Company, the purchase was to take the form of a sale by Stewart with good title of this 1,003 shares of stock. The purchase price was about $120,000. The net profit of Stewart, reduced by expenditures and obligations, was the difference between $120,000 and $35,000. An examination of the records of the corporations cast doubt upon the validity of the purchase by Stewart of the Sullivan share of stock, which doubt was increased by the fact that Stewart could not physically deliver possession of the stock. The associates who contemplated this purchase from Stewart declared that they would withhold $20,000 to meet any possible demand of Sullivan until Stewart could establish clear title to the Sullivan interest. These associates are the other defendants in this case. Mr. Stewart then went to Mr. Metson and Mr. Bernard and paid them in full the amount of their demand in behalf of Sullivan, the $3,333.33 which he had invested with interest thereon. This was on October 5th. Upon the next day Sullivan, who had returned from Alaska, ratified in writing the sale and transfer and assignment of his interest so made, and, having received in full the amount of his demand, relinquished any claim to any share of the $1,000 paid nominally by Williams, but actually by Stewart to the Wise Realty Company. This ratification by Sullivan was made in the presence of, and after a conversation with, Stewart in which conversation Stewart did tell Sullivan that he was disposing of all his (Stewart's) interest in the venture, that the burden was greater than he could carry, but did not tell Sullivan what price he was receiving for his interest. The second element of fraud is predicated upon Stewart's secrecy in this regard, and is, of course, based upon the contention that the relationship of associates or partners, with the consequent duty of full disclosure, still existed between the parties.

[1] It is because of this asserted continuing relationship and because of the notice of Sullivan's interest which it is charged was brought home to the other defendants that they in turn are charged as having purchased the stock with knowledge and with thus becoming trustees ex maleficio for Sullivan.

The trial court took the view, and made findings in accordance therewith, that the sale by Sullivan of his interest was authorized by his telegram of July 6th, was effectuated by Rosenthal under the power conferred by that telegram, and was accepted by Sullivan in his telegraphic answer to Rosenthal's telegram to him of July 15th. If the findings covering this matter are supported, that is the end of this controversy; for with the consummation of that sale the relationship of associates or partners between Sullivan and Stewart immediately ceased, and Stewart was perfectly justified in dealing thereafter with Sullivan at arm's length.

[2] Some of the attacks made upon these findings are in their nature indirect. Thus the validity of all of these corporate transactions is assailed upon various grounds, as for a failure to comply with the by-laws in calling the meetings, the failure to notify Sullivan, who was in Alaska, as the by-laws required, the participation by Rosenthal as director in the transactions after he had sold out to Stewart, and thus stripped himself of his actual ownership of the stock of the Wise Realty Company and the Lincoln Realty Company, and the sale by the Wise Realty Company of all its property, consisting of the 1,000 shares of the stock of the Lincoln Realty Company, without ratification by the stockholders. Mistakes and misrepresentations in the minutes of the meetings are also charged as having been incorporated therein with fraudulent design, though they could not have deceived Sullivan, who was in Alaska, and knew nothing of them. The complete answer to all of these matters is found in the familiar principle that equity will look through form to substance, and, so looking, it is beyond controversy that these corporations were but the mere instrumentalities through which the associates acted. If the transactions between the associates themselves were fair, then as there are no rights of independent and nonparticipating stockholders involved, the corporate irregularities, however serious, mean nothing. If it were necessary, equity, indeed, would compel the corporations themselves so to adjust, remodel, and reform their transactions as to give them a legal validity commensurate with their equitable validity.

For these reasons no force attaches to these corporate irregularities as between the associates themselves. If, in other words, Sullivan did authorize Rosenthal to sell his interest, and Rosenthal did do this thing, that the mere mechanism of the sale creaked, groaned, was faulty, or even broke down, would not impair the essential validity of the sale itself nor the fair dealing of the parties as between themselves. Only when third persons, such as the other defendant, undertook to buy the corporate stock would any substantial interest in the irregularities of the corporate transactions arise, and these irregularities become important; and it was against these irregularities, as we have seen, that these associates undertook to protect themselves by withholding $20,000 to meet the possible claims and demands of Sullivan. When Stewart produced to them the indorsed stock with Sullivan's ratification of the transaction, then they concluded their purchase from Stewart and paid him the full amount of money.

[3] We may now at last come to the consideration of the vital issue in this case. Are the court's findings to the effect that Sullivan was not defrauded by Stewart, and did not rely upon the statement in the telegram of July 1st that the deposit would be forfeited, supported by the evidence. That Sullivan in authorizing the sale of his interest did not rely upon this statement (which the associates believed was true when made) is manifest from his own testimony above quoted. Moreover, his answering telegram of July 6th is not an acceptance of the Stewart offer embodied in the telegram of July 1st, but, to the contrary, is a personal telegram to his friend Rosenthal authorizing the latter to sell his interest under "any proposition that has any of our money." It was thus a broad authority to Rosenthal to sell. Rosenthal sold, knowing all of the essential facts. The court so finds. He sold his own interest upon the same terms, $500 cash, and the balance of the amount of money he had invested payable in the event that Stewart should be able to make a sufficient profit out of the venture. If it be a fraud at all it is Rosenthal's fraud in selling out Sullivan; yet Rosenthal sold out Sullivan's interest upon the same terms as he sold his own, and promptly notified Sullivan by personal wire that he had done so, in response to which Sullivan notified Rosenthal that Mr. Metson had authority to collect his share of the proceeds of the sale.

In view of this record it may not be said that the findings of the court declaring that in July Sullivan had fully and fairly parted with his interest in the venture are not supported, and this vital fact, being absolutely determinative of the controversy, renders unnecessary the consideration of any other issues or arguments in the case.

The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Edward J. O'Rourke, administrator of Owen McCabe, deceased, and others, against Fred C. Skellenger. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. E. Barry and Edward Lande, both of San Francisco, for appellant. Brennan & Lane, of San Francisco, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal by the defendant from the judgment. The object of the action is to declare and enforce an alleged trust in certain parcels of land of which the decedent, Owen McCabe, died seised. By his will he devised the land to his wife, Ellen McCabe, for her natural life, with remainder to his children, Nellie McCabe Rosenberger, Margaret C. Skellenger, and Eugene McCabe. Ellen died on March 2, 1907. Eugene, on October 30, 1905, conveyed his interest in the land to the plaintiff, O'Rourke. Margaret C. Skellenger was the wife of the defendant. She died on November 3, 1909.

[1] The record on appeal was made up in the manner prescribed in section 953a. It is not printed. Section 953c provides that such transcripts need not be printed, but it adds that:

"In filing briefs on said appeal the parties must, however, print in their briefs, or in a supplement appended thereto, such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court."

The appellant has not complied with this requirement of the statute. Some short extracts from the record are printed in his briefs, but not enough to enable us to determine the issues or the questions presented for review. In this condition of the case we do not think we are required to make more than a cursory examination of the typewritten record on file. Indeed, we would

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐757 — REVIEW — STATUTE REGARDING PREPARATION OF PAPERS—EFFECT OF NONCOMPLIANCE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 953a, 953c, regarding the preparation of papers on appeal, and requiring that parties must print in their briefs such portions of the record as they desire to bring before the court, the court is justified in refusing to examine a typewritten record, and, at most, will only examine it cursorily, where short extracts only are printed in the brief, and those not adequate for the court to determine the issues upon.

be fully justified, under the provision above quoted, in refusing to examine it at all. From the examination we have made we find the case, as alleged, proven, and found by the court, is in substance and effect as follows:

[2] Owen McCabe, in his lifetime, had mortgaged the land to one Forster, and the mortgage remained unpaid at his death. Forster began a foreclosure suit thereon. Thereupon the defendant agreed with the heirs of McCabe that he would advance for them the money to buy the Forster mortgage; that he would buy said mortgage therewith; that he would then have himself substituted in the suit as plaintiff, obtain judgment by default against the estate and heirs for the foreclosure thereof, cause execution to issue thereon, buy the land in his own name at the foreclosure sale for the amount of the mortgage debt, interest and costs, obtain the foreclosure deed therefor to himself at the expiration of the period of redemption, and thereafter hold the said land in trust for the benefit of the estate of Owen McCabe and the heirs; it being agreed by them that they would repay him the amount advanced by him in the transaction in the purchase of the mortgage and payment of costs, together with legal interest thereon. In pursuance of this arrangement, he purchased the mortgage and, as arranged, acquired the title to the land under the foreclosure sale. The defendant denied the agreement, and denied that he held the land in trust as alleged. The court adjudged that he held the land in trust for the heirs subject to a lien for his advances and interest.

There were some additional allegations and findings tending to show fraud by the defendant and confidential relations between him and the heirs who made the agreement. We do not deem it necessary to state the facts in greater detail.

The decisions of this court establish the proposition that, under the circumstances stated, the defendant will be held bound as trustee of the land for the benefit of the heirs of McCabe, and that in equity he is entitled only to be reimbursed for his outlays, with interest, with a lien on the land to secure him in the repayment thereof. The consideration for the purchase of the mortgage from Forster, and of the land at the foreclosure sale, is, under the circumstances stated, deemed to have been paid by the heirs, and a resulting trust is created accordingly. The rule is stated in Brown v. Spencer, 163 Cal. 592, 593, 126 Pac. 493, and many of our decisions in which may be found illustrations of the applications of the rule are there cited. It is not necessary to consider the question at further length. The court below was correct in its conclusion that the defendant was chargeable as a trustee. Its judgment, in so far as it departed from the strict letter of the prayer for relief, was authorized by the allegations, under section 580 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[3] There was no misjoinder of parties plaintiff. The administrator with the will annexed of Owen McCabe's estate was a proper party plaintiff. The estate was interested in having the trust declared and enforced.

The judgment is affirmed.

Angellotti, C. J., and Lorigan, J., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, Judge.

Action by Evelina Remillard against the Blake & Bilger Company, which counterclaimed, impleading others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Johnson & Shaw and H. S. Craig, all of Oakland, and W. B. Rinehart, of Oakland, amici curiæ, for appellants. R. M. F. Soto, of San Francisco, and Reed, Black & Reed, of Oakland, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. After judgment on the appeals here presented had been rendered in the District Court of Appeal for the First Appellate District, an order was made transferring the cause to this court for hearing and determination.

Our further examination has led us to the conviction that the District Court of Appeal made a correct disposition of the cause. The opinion in that court, prepared by the late Mr. Justice Hall, was as follows:

"Plaintiff filed her complaint against Blake & Bilger Company, seeking to quiet her title to a piece of land situate in the town of Emeryville. Blake & Bilger Company filed its answer, setting up a claim of lien for an assessment made for street work done under the 'Vrooman Law,' so called, and its amendments, and also a cross-complaint in the usual form for a foreclosure of such lien. The other defendants were made parties to the proceeding under the cross-complaint, but according to the statement of counsel they now have no interest in or claim upon the property. Hereinafter when we refer to defendant we shall mean Blake & Bilger Company. Plaintiff made answer to the cross-complaint of defendant, and the action resolved itself into an action to foreclose the lien of defendant for the asserted assessment. The theory of plaintiff is that the street assessment is void, because it was based upon a single proceeding, order, and contract for the doing of street work of various kinds upon several different streets. In other words, the work was treated and carried out by the town authorities as one improvement, and not as several and distinct improvements. The trial court adopted as correct the theory of plaintiff, and made findings accordingly, and gave judgment for plaintiff, and denied defendant any relief upon its cross-complaint.

"The work called for by the resolution of intention consisted of various sorts of street work authorized by the statute, and to be done upon several distinct streets. The principal street embraced in said resolution was Adeline street. All the other streets intersect said Adeline street at various points, with the exception of Peralta street and Magnolia street, which are distant therefrom one block. Magnolia street is in fact but a prolongation and widening of Peralta street at its southern end. All the portions of the streets proposed to be improved are contained in a compact V-shaped district, about 3,000 feet long and about 1,500 feet wide at its widest end. The proceedings were under the plan calling for front-foot assessment, and the assessments were made for the several kinds of work according to this plan; the cost of each kind of work being charged only against such property as was liable therefor under this plan. All the work was done under one contract.

"The contention of plaintiff is that, under the general street law, under which this work was done, the municipal authorities have no power to cause several streets to be improved as one improvement, but that the work done upon each street must be done as a separate and distinct improvement. Upon the other hand, defendant insists that the extent of the work to be done as one improvement, and under one contract, lies within the discretion of the board of trustees. The trial court seems to have adopted as correct the theory of plaintiff, and made its findings and decree accordingly.

[1] "While there is some inharmony in the language used by the Supreme Court in different decisions bearing upon the question, we think the contention of defendant and appellant is correct, and that the municipal authorities have jurisdiction and power to order several streets improved in one proceeding and as one improvement, to be performed under one contract.

"Section 2 of the present street law (Gen. Laws 1909, Act 3930) is, as far as the present question is concerned, substantially the same as the street law of 1872 (Stat. 1871-72, p. 804), which the court had before it in Mahoney v. Braverman, 54 Cal. 565, where the power of the municipal authorities to cause a sewer to be laid in two streets in one proceeding and under one contract was sustained. It was there said: 'It is objected that the board of supervisors had no jurisdiction or power to order a sewer to be constructed in Willow avenue and Gough street in one and the same award and contract, inasmuch as they were two separate streets.' The court then refers to the statute and quotes the language thereof, which is substantially the same as that of the present statute, and then says: 'On the most cursory perusal of the sections cited, one must be struck with the broad and ample powers conferred by them on the board of supervisors in regard to street improvements. These powers seem to embrace every conceivable variety of street improvement, and they certainly embrace the whole or any portion of the streets to be improved. The language used is not of such a character as to confine the powers vested in the board to each street. If such had been the intention of the Legislature, language suitable to disclose that intention and warrant the interpretation that each several street was referred to, and that the powers granted were to be so confined, could have been readily found and would have been employed. Such an intention would have been clearly manifested by inserting the words "of each" before the words "of the said streets," * * * etc.' This decision was rendered in 1880, and the Vrooman Act was passed in 1885, and yet no change was made in the language of the statute in regard to the power of the board to improve streets.

"Section 8 of the present act, as enacted in 1885 and as it now stands, is that there shall be attached to the assessment 'a diagram exhibiting each street * * * on which any work has been done.' This language clearly indicated that the Legislature intended that several streets could be improved under one order and under one contract.

"In White v. Harris, 116 Cal. 470 [48 Pac. 382], the resolution of intention was for the construction of a sewer in eight different streets. Thereafter a contract was let doing the work as one improvement. The notices of the work posted along each street referred only to the work done on such street. It was held that the notices were insufficient upon the ground that the work upon the eight streets constituted but one improvement.

"The case principally relied upon by plaintiff to support the contention that the work upon each street must be treated as a distinct and separate improvement to be separately contracted for is Bates v. Twist, 138 Cal. 52 [70 Pac. 1023]. In this case the resolution of intention called for work upon widely separated streets. While the report of the case does not make it very clear, the fact was, as disclosed by the record of the case now before us, that the resolution of intention indicated that the work upon the different streets was to be treated as so many distinct pieces of work. It directed that the notice should require that persons objecting to the work should state in their protests the frontage of their property, and upon what street it was located, and also designated a paper for the publication of the notices 'in relation to the several pieces of work described aforesaid respectively.'

"Following the clearly indicated purpose of the resolution of intention, awards of contracts were subsequently made for the several pieces of work called for as distinct improvements. In the suit to foreclose, it was objected that only one contract could be let for all the work called for by the resolution of intention. The only point involved in that case was as to whether or not under such a resolution of intention all the work must be treated as one improvement to be done under one contract. In answering this question in the negative, the court did use language which lends support to the contention of plaintiff in the case at bar. But such language must be understood as limited to the facts then before the court. That the court did not intend to lay down the rule that work on several streets may not be done as one improvement under one contract is manifest from its analysis of White v. Harris, supra, in which it distinctly recognizes the power under the statute to cause work to be done on several streets as one improvement under one contract.

"In San Francisco Paving Co. v. Egan, 146 Cal. 636 [80 Pac. 1096], the resolution of intention, as disclosed by the record of the case, also clearly indicated the purpose to treat the work upon the different streets as distinct improvements, and they were so treated throughout the proceedings. In no case where the point was involved has it been decided that the city council has no power to order work upon different streets to be done as one improvement under one contract. On the contrary, such power has been distinctly upheld in Mahoney v. Braverman, supra.

"The trial court fell into error in holding that the proceeding is void because work on different streets was included in one award and contract, and for that reason the findings it made upon such theory are not supported by the evidence.

[2] "The court also erred in sustaining plaintiff's objections to certain evidence that defendant offered in support of its allegations that plaintiff had waived any defense to the assessment founded upon any illegality in the proceedings under the resolution of intention. Since the time of the trial of this case, it has been determined that such a defense may be waived to an action to enforce a lien for street work in Allen v. Hance, 161 Cal. 189 [118 Pac. 527], which overrules Heft v. Payne, 97

Cal. 108 [31 Pac. 844], upon which the ruling of the trial court was doubtless based."

The foregoing opinion, which contains a fair statement of the essential facts bearing on the questions discussed, has our complete approval, and is adopted as a part of the opinion of this court. It may be well, however, to add one or two observations concerning the points decided in said opinion, and to refer briefly to the contention of plaintiff and respondent that certain further points advanced by her were not noticed by the court of appeal.

The main question in the case is whether the assessment is void because "based upon a single proceeding, order and contract for the doing of street work of various kinds upon several different streets." The opinion of Mr. Justice Hall shows that the statute, as construed by this court, authorizes the city council to include in a single scheme of improvement work upon more than one street. Mahoney v. Braverman, 54 Cal. 565, and White v. Harris, 116 Cal. 470, 48 Pac. 382, in which this rule was declared, were cases of sewer improvements. We are unable to find in the statute any language which justifies the drawing of a distinction, in this respect, between the construction of a sewer and any other kind of street improvement authorized by the Vrooman Act. If the various streets, or, rather, the portions thereof to be improved, are so related that the improvement of them as a whole may fairly be deemed to be a benefit to all the property fronting upon such parts, the council does not exceed its jurisdiction by treating the work on the several streets as an entirety, and including it in a single proceeding. Whether one or more streets should form a unit for improvements is a question committed primarily to the discretion of the council. No abuse of discretion appears here.

[3] The fact that some of the streets are wider than others—a circumstance not particularly mentioned in the opinion of the court of appeal—does not affect the conclusion reached. It is true that an owner fronting on a street 60 feet in width will be required to pay the same amount per front foot for grading or paving as one who fronts upon a street 80 or 100 feet wide. But the front-foot method of assessment is not based upon the view that each owner shall pay the cost of so much of the improvement as is made on the portion of the street opposite his lot. The assessment is to be supported upon the ground that each owner is charged with an amount equal or proportionate to the benefit conferred upon his property by the entire improvement, and this benefit, in theory, at least, is regarded as measured by the number of feet of frontage upon the work. The assessment imposed upon an individual owner may be greater or less than the cost of doing the particular part of the work on the portion of the street opposite his lot. This is obviously so, even where only a part of a single street is improved. If the work be, for example, grading, the expense involved may be far greater on some parts of the street, or of a block, than on others. Yet the assessment per front foot must be equal and without regard to the varying difficulty or cost of the work at different points along the line of improvement.

If the grading or paving of two streets may be united in one proceeding, it is because the property on each of the streets is benefited by the improvement of the others. The work as a whole is a benefit to all of the property to be assessed. The extent of the benefit is not measured by the width of the street, but, under the statute, by the frontage. Property fronting on a narrow street may be benefited by an improvement of the several streets as much as property fronting on a wider street. These are matters to be considered by the council in fixing the extent of the improvement, and its decision is not to be overthrown except upon a showing of fraud or abuse of discretion. The mere fact that the streets are of varying widths, which is all that appears here, is not enough to invalidate the proceeding.

[4] There is no merit in the claim that the construction which we have given to the statute impairs the right of the majority of owners on any single street to bar the work, by protest, for six months. The Vrooman Act does not give this right to the owners of the majority of the frontage on a street, as is assumed in the argument, but to "the owners of a majority of the frontage of the property fronting on said proposed work or improvement." Section 3. If the "work or improvement" may cover more than one street, a majority of the frontage on all the streets covered by the proposed work must join to make the protest effectual.

On the subject of waiver or estoppel, little need be said beyond what is contained in the opinion quoted above. The respondent seeks to distinguish Allen v. Hance, 161 Cal. 189, 118 Pac. 527, on the ground that in that case there was a mere irregularity, which might be cured by estoppel or waived, whereas here the defect (i. e., the joinder of the improvement of the various streets in a single proceeding) went to the jurisdiction of the council and the want of power, as is claimed, could not be supplied by estoppel. But, if there be any difference in this respect between a want of power and an irregularity, the point is not applicable to the case at bar, since, as we have seen, the council did not exceed its jurisdiction in ordering the improvements by a single proceeding.

[5] The excluded writing, which was relied upon as creating an estoppel, declared that the signers waived any illegality or irregularity in the proceedings, "in consideration of a deduction of five per cent. from the total amount (providing the said amount is paid by us within ninety days from the date of the assessment roll) to be assessed to us under the contract. * * *". The payment was not made within the 90 days. This fact did not establish a mutual abandonment of the waiver agreement. If, as alleged in the cross-complaint, the appellant went on and completed the work in reliance upon the agreement, its right to stand upon the waiver was not lost by the failure of the owners to take advantage of the deduction of 5 per cent. which they might have claimed. Their right to this deduction was made conditional upon payment by them within 90 days. The option to obtain the rebate upon this condition was a good consideration for their waiver, and its sufficiency as a consideration was not impaired by the fact that they failed to exercise their option.

The District Court of Appeal did not notice the respondent's point that the assessment was void because "in the cost and expense assessed were included the cost and expense of work done on Adeline street on that portion thereof occupied by the tracks of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company." An inspection of the record discloses that the point has merely formal, rather than substantial, support in the evidence. The assessment named, at the outset, a total sum of $60,072.28, which included the amount payable by the railroad company. But when the apportionment to the various lots was made, credit was given for $2,150, the cost of work on the railroad right of way, and the balance, $57,921, was apportioned according to the statute to the various lots. The aforesaid sum of $2,150 was, as shown by the assessment, paid by the railroad company.

[6] The resolution of intention provided that "wooden bridges" be constructed at each end of crosswalks (i. e., over the gutter from the crosswalk to the sidewalk) at certain points. It is claimed that there was a fatal defect in the failure to describe the kind of wood to be used in these bridges. We think the description was sufficient. Harney v. Heller, 47 Cal. 15; Deady v. Townsend, 57 Cal. 298.

There are no other points requiring notice.

The judgment and the order appealed from are reversed.

SAMUELS v. OTTINGER et al. (S. F. 6202.)
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1915.
Rehearing Denied March 8, 1915.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⇨183—RENTS—OCCUPANCY.

An obligation to pay rent, without an express agreement thereto, arises from the mere occupancy of the premises as tenant.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⇨208—PERSONS LIABLE—LESSEE AND ASSIGNEE—"EXPRESS AGREEMENT."

A lessee, who has not agreed to pay rent on assignment with the landlord's consent, is relieved of further obligation to pay rent, which is thereafter due from the assignee who has come into privity of estate with the landlord, but the liability of a lessee who expressly agrees to pay rent remains, notwithstanding an assignment with the landlord's consent, since there is no privity of contract between the landlord and the assignee, and he is a surety for the assignee's payment of rent; the term "express agreement" meaning, not merely a promise in exact words to pay a given sum as rental, but language necessarily importing the lessee's undertaking to pay the rent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 737, 821-831; Dec. Dig. ⇨208.]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Express Agreement.]

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⇨208—RENT—LIABILITY OF LESSEE AFTER ASSIGNMENT.

Under a lease for the term of 10 years at a monthly rental payable in advance, providing that the lessee should pay all bills for water, gas, and electricity and all taxes on improvements, and requiring the lessee to insure for the joint benefit of himself and the lessor to secure payment of rent; that improvements should be security for rent, that the lessee holding over should be a tenant from month to month paying rent as under the lease and with the right to sublease, there was a contract or covenant to pay a stipulated rental from the obligation of which the lessee was not released by his assignment, so that he was liable for the rent with interest from the day it fell due.

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⇨238—ACTION FOR RENT—RIGHT TO ATTORNEY'S FEE.

Under a lease providing that, if the lessor prevailed in any suit for violation of any covenant of the lease, the lessee should be liable to a reasonable attorney fee in each suit not exceeding $75, the lessor, entitled to recover rent from the lessee after a sublease, was entitled to an attorney's fee of $75 in each of three suits for installments of rent, consolidated in one suit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Dec. Dig. ⇨238.]

5. PLEADING ⇨129—FAILURE TO DENY—ADMISSION.

In such suit, where there was no denial of the averment that a reasonable attorney's fee was in excess of $75, the question of reasonableness was settled by the admission of the pleadings.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by Louis T. Samuels against Adolph Ottinger and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions to enter judgment for plaintiff.

Charles W. Slack, H. U. Brandenstein, and Grover O'Connor, all of San Francisco, for appellant. Leon Samuels, of San Francisco, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of the defendant. The judgment disposed of three separate actions, which, with the consent of the parties, had been consolidated for trial. The appeal is on the judgment roll.

The actions were brought to recover installments of monthly rent accruing under a written lease of real property. The three proceedings differed only in the months for which rental was claimed.

A jury trial having been waived, the court made findings as follows: On December 20, 1906, D. Samuels Realty Company, a corporation, as lessor, leased to the defendants, as lessees, a certain lot in the city of San Francisco. A copy of the lease is set out in the answers and referred to by the findings. The term of the lease was ten years, commencing on the 20th day of December, 1906. The rent of the premises was $150 per month, payable in advance, for the first five years of the term, and $175 per month, payable in advance, for the next five years. Other provisions of the lease will be mentioned in the course of the discussion to follow.

The defendants went into possession of the premises under the lease, and paid the monthly installments of rent to and including the 19th day of May, 1908. On that day they sold and assigned the lease to one Altschular. The lessor was, at the same time, notified of the assignment. Altschular paid the rent for the month commencing May 20, 1908, and said payment was received and accepted by the lessor. The monthly installments of rent payable on the 20th days of the successive months from June, 1908, to March, 1910, have not been paid. D. Samuels Realty Company, the original lessor, has conveyed the premises, and assigned its claim against the defendants, to the plaintiff.

The single question presented for decision is whether the defendants, the original lessees, are absolved from liability to pay rent by their assignment to Altschular, and the payment by Altschular to the lessor of one month's rent. The general rule of law governing the controversy is settled beyond the possibility of dispute. A lease has a dual character—it presents the aspect of a contract and also that of a conveyance. Pollock on Contracts (3d Am. Ed.) p. 531.

"Consequently the lease has two sets of rights and obligations—one comprising those growing out of the relation of landlord and tenant, and said to be based on the 'privity of estate,' and the other comprising those growing out of the express stipulations of the lease, and so said to be based on 'privity of contract.'" Tiffany on Real Property, § 46.

[1, 2] An obligation to pay rent, without an express agreement to that end, arises from the mere occupancy, as tenant, of the premises. A lessee who has not agreed to pay rent is, by his transfer to an assignee, with the consent of the landlord, relieved of any further obligation to pay rent. Such obligation is thereafter upon the assignee who has come into "privity of estate" with the landlord. But where the lessee has expressly agreed to pay rent, his liability under his contract remains, notwithstanding an assignment with the consent of the lessor.

"The lessee cannot by assigning his lease rid himself of liability under the covenants." Brosnan v. Kramer, 135 Cal. 36, 39, 66 Pac. 979, 980. "The effect of the assignment is to make the lessee a surety to the lessor for the assignee, who, as between himself and the lessor, is the principal bound, whilst he is assignee, to pay the rent and perform the covenants." Id.; Wood on Landl. & Ten. (2d Ed.) § 347; Bonetti v. Treat, 91 Cal. 223, 27 Pac. 612, 14 L. R. A. 151; Sutliff v. Atwood, 15 Ohio St. 186; Sexton v. Chic. Storage Co., 129 Ill. 318, 21 N. E. 920, 16 Am. St. Rep. 274.

The test of the assigning lessee's liability is, then, whether he has, in the lease, agreed to pay rent during the term. The rule of law is sometimes phrased thus: The obligation to pay rent remains on the lessee, after his assignment, when the obligation was created by his express agreement. It does not survive an assignment with the lessor's consent when the obligation is implied. By "express agreement," in this connection, is meant, not merely a promise, in exact words, to pay a given sum as rental. Any language necessarily importing an undertaking on the part of the lessee to pay the rent will satisfy the requirement of the rule, for the distinction to which we have referred rests on the nature of the lessee's obligation. If that obligation arises solely from the fact that he occupies the premises as tenant, if, in other words, it is based on the "privity of estate" alone, the assignee who succeeds to that privity becomes the party to whom the landlord must look. But if the obligation be one arising from the tenant's contract to pay rent, it is not ended by the assignment. Whether there be a contract to pay rent must depend on whether such contract is to be found in the words of the lease, giving such words a fair and reasonable interpretation. Tiffany, Land & Ten. § 50.

[3] The lease in question was executed by the lessees, as well as by the lessor. It begins by stating that the lessor leases the premises to the lessees, for the term of 10 years, at the monthly rental above stated, "payable in advance on the twentieth day of each and every month." By subsequent clauses the lessees agree to pay all bills for water, gas, and electricity furnished to the premises, and all taxes on improvements to be erected by said lessees. The privilege of subleasing is expressly given, as is permission to erect buildings, which, if they comply with certain conditions, are to be purchased by the lessor at the expiration of the term. The lessees agree to insure the improvements, "and said insurance shall be made payable to the lessor and the lessees jointly, for the purpose of securing the said lessor in the payment of the rents herein stipulated. * * *" By another clause it is agreed that the improvements to be erected "shall be security for the rent herein stipulated to be paid. * * *" Finally, it is agreed that, if the lessees hold over beyond the term provided in the lease, such holding over shall be deemed merely a tenancy from month to month, "and at the same monthly rental that shall have been payable hereunder by said lessees immediately prior to such holding over."

If it is possible to express a contractual obligation to pay rent by any form of words other than a direct promise, in exact terms, to pay such rent, the language we have quoted from the lease before us imposes that obligation on the lessees. The lessor agrees to lease the premises to the lessees at a given rental, "payable" at stated times. The writing is signed by the lessees as well as by the lessor. Where both parties sign an agreement whereby one agrees to sell to the other a tract of land at a certain price, and to convey a good title upon payment of that price, the writing, as has been held in this court, imposes upon the vendee the obligation to buy and pay for the land, although he has not in words agreed to buy or to pay. Preamble v. Abrahams, 88 Cal. 245, 26 Pac. 99, 22 Am. St. Rep. 301. See, also, King Keystone Oil Co. v. S. F. Brick Co., 148 Cal. 87, 82 Pac. 849.

But, beyond this, there are various other provisions in the lease plainly indicating the intention and understanding of the parties that the lessees were bound to pay the rent. Insurance is to be taken out for the purpose of securing the lessor in the "payment of the rents herein stipulated." Improvements are to be security for the rent "herein stipulated to be paid." A holding over shall be deemed a tenancy from month to month at the same monthly rental as shall have been "payable hereunder by said lessees" prior to such holding over. We find, first, a reference to the payment of "rents herein stipulated," then a provision for security for "rent herein stipulated to be paid," and finally a clause which speaks of "rents payable hereunder by said lessees." These expressions afford a convincing showing that the parties to the lease believed and understood that the writing embodied a "stipulation" for the payment of rents, and that it made such rents payable by the lessees. The obligation to pay rent is not implied from the relation of landlord and tenant, but is expressed by the words used by the parties in their writing.

There are decisions to the effect that a lease which merely provides for a letting upon a certain rental, "payable at the expiration of each and every year of the lease" (Fanning v. Stimson, 13 Iowa, 42), or which demises the premises to the tenant, he "yielding and paying" certain rents (Kimpton v. Walker, 9 Vt. 191), creates only an implied obligation, which does not survive an assignment of the leasehold interest and acceptance of rent from the assignee. On the other hand, a contrary view has been declared in cases involving the liability of a lessee to pay rent notwithstanding the destruction of the buildings by fire. The obligation to pay rent in the event of such destruction rests upon the lessee where the lease contains a covenant on his part to pay rent during the term, and the underlying principle is therefore the same as that governing the case at bar. A covenant to pay rent was held to be expressed in a lease, signed by both parties, in which the lessor let the premises to the lessee for two years, "for $300.00 per annum, payable quarter-yearly." Linn v. Ross, 10 Ohio, 412, 36 Am. Dec. 95. So of a lease of land with a building, "at the rent of $600.00 per annum, until the first day of April, 1869, and thereafter, for the term of five years, at the rate of $800.00 per annum, the rent to be paid monthly." Bussman v. Ganster, 72 Pa. 285.

But if it be held that mere words of demise, "at" or "subject to" a given rental, "payable" at stated times, will not import an agreement by the lessee to pay rent, the other provisions of the lease are certainly sufficient to establish such agreement. In this aspect the case is very similar to Consumers' Ice Co. v. Bixler, 84 Md. 437, 35 Atl. 1086, where the court reached the conclusion just expressed by us.

[4] On the facts found, the plaintiff was therefore entitled to recover the amount claimed as rent, with interest at the legal rate on each monthly installment from the date upon which it fell due. The appellant asks, also, that judgment be entered in his favor for attorneys' fees in the three consolidated actions. The lease contained a provision that:

"In case the lessor prevails in any suit against the lessees for violation of any of the covenants of this lease, * * * the lessees shall be liable to the lessor for a reasonable attorney fee in such suit, not exceeding the sum of $75."

Each of the three complaints counts upon this clause, and alleges that "a reasonable attorney's fee in this action exceeds the said sum of $75." The answer in each of the actions denies, merely, that defendants "have violated any of the covenants of said lease, or that plaintiff is entitled to any attorney's fee in this action." The only finding on the subject is "that the plaintiff is not entitled to any attorney's fee in this action."

[5] As we have seen, the plaintiff was entitled to recover for a violation of the covenant to pay rent. This being so, his right to a reasonable attorney's fee, not exceeding $75 in each suit, necessarily followed from the express agreement of the lessees to pay such fee, in case the lessor should prevail in a suit for violation of any covenant of the lease. The only question of fact in this connection was the amount which would constitute a reasonable fee. Since there was no denial of the averment that a reasonable fee was in excess of $75, this question was settled by the admission of the pleadings. The finding that plaintiff is not entitled to an attorney's fee is no more than a conclusion of law, and it is a conclusion that must be held to be erroneous in view of the finding of facts showing that plaintiff was entitled to recover for a breach of the covenant of the lessees to pay rent. There can therefore be no obstacle to a direction, on this appeal taken on the judgment roll alone, that judgment be entered in favor of the plaintiff for the attorney's fees demanded.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the court below to enter judgment in favor of the plaintiff as prayed in the three several complaints.

LUKRAWKA et al. v. SPRING VALLEY
WATER CO. (S. F. 6297.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 13, 1915.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⇨ 194—MUNICIPAL WATER SUPPLY—DUTY TO MAKE EXTENSIONS—CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

A waterworks company, defendant's predecessor, was organized under St. 1858, p. 218, providing that all corporations formed or claiming any privileges thereunder should furnish pure, fresh water to the inhabitants of the city and county for family use so long as the supply permitted, at reasonable rates and without distinction of persons, on proper demand therefor, vesting it with the right of eminent domain, and granting an irrevocable easement in the streets of the city for laying its pipes, etc. Civ. Code, § 549, imposed the obligations expressly enumerated in the act of 1858, and Const. § 19, art. 11, as amended February 12, 1885 (St. 1885, p. 228), provided that any duly incorporated company engaged in municipal water supply might use the public streets for its pipes and connections, so far as necessary. Held that, when the company accepted the franchise offered by the state, it assumed a contractual duty to be discharged for the public benefit; a community service commensurate with the privileges of its franchise requiring it to provide a system reasonably adequate to meet the wants of the inhabitants at its commencement, and also to extend its system as the reasonable wants of the growing community might require, so that, when in a position to make reasonable extensions of its mains bounding a populous part of the city, it was bound to and might be compelled to do so.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 280; Dec. Dig. ⇨ 194.]

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⇐194—WATER SUPPLY COMPANY—DUTY TO MAKE EXTENSIONS—REASONABLENESS.

Such right to compel an extension to serve inhabitants of a particular section was not an absolute and unqualified right, but only to do so where there was a reasonable demand and a reasonable extension of service could be made to meet the demand, depending on the particular facts of the case; but the expenditure in extending the service was not controlling in determining the reasonableness of a demand for it, because the water rates established by the municipality must be sufficient to yield a fair and reasonable income on the property devoted to the public use, which would include such necessary expenses.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 280; Dec. Dig. ⇐194.]

3. MANDAMUS ⇐23—WATER SUPPLY COMPANY—DUTY TO MAKE EXTENSIONS—PERSONS ENTITLED TO RELIEF.

Where defendant's predecessor accepted a franchise requiring it to supply the inhabitants of a city and county with water, and, in the absence of any showing that the primary and exclusive right to initiate proceedings to compel it to extend its water mains to a growing part of the community was conferred on the board of supervisors or the State Railroad Commission, mandamus was the proper remedy of the inhabitants of the part of the city clearly entitled to compel the company to extend its pipes and furnish water service to them.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Mandamus by August Lukrawka and others against the Spring Valley Water Company. Judgment for defendant was affirmed by the District Court of Appeal. On hearing after such judgment. Reversed.

Daniel O'Connell, of San Francisco (L. Horwitz, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants. McCutchen, Olney & Willard and Page, McCutchen, Knight & Olney, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. Petitioners brought this proceeding in mandamus in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco to compel the respondent to extend its water mains and supply petitioners with water. The superior court sustained a demurrer to an amended petition of petitioners without leave to them to further amend, and entered judgment in favor of respondent. Petitioners appealed from that judgment, and it was affirmed by the District Court of Appeal. A further hearing was granted in this court.

The following are the principal facts alleged and relied on in the petition: The petitioners are all residents of and property owners in that portion of the city and county of San Francisco bounded on the north by Geary street, on the south by Fulton street, on the east by Fifteenth avenue, and on the west by Nineteenth avenue. Within this area is embraced a district of approximately eight blocks square intersected by Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth avenues, running northerly and southerly, and by Anza, Balboa, and Cabrillo streets, running easterly and westerly therethrough. Within this described district there are more than 100 buildings occupied by some 100 families, the value of said buildings aggregating an amount in excess of $500,000. The respondent is a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the state of California, and the grantee and successor of the rights, franchises, duties, and responsibilities of the Spring Valley Waterworks, a corporation organized about June 19, 1858, under the act of April, 1858, for the purpose of supplying the city and county of San Francisco and the inhabitants thereof with a sufficient supply of water for domestic use and other purposes. The respondent has been for a long time, and is now, engaged in the business of furnishing and distributing water to the greater portion of the inhabitants of the said city and county through a system of mains and lateral water pipes which are laid in, through and along various streets, avenues, alleys, and highways of said municipality; that a large main of the respondent more than 16 inches in diameter extends along Geary street on the northerly line of the district heretofore described within which petitioners reside and on the avenues and streets of which they own property, and a smaller main extends along Fulton street on the southerly line of said district; that some extensions of smaller mains or laterals have been made by respondent northerly from its main on Fulton street along Sixteenth, Eighteenth, and Nineteenth avenues in said district for a block, and southerly from the main on Geary street about two blocks along Fifteenth, Sixteenth, and Nineteenth avenues in said district, but no mains or lateral water pipes have been yet extended to the streets in said district on which the petitioners reside and own property; that, in order to supply some of the petitioners with water, it would only be necessary for the respondent to extend its mains by lateral connections 50 feet southerly from the Geary street main along the avenues on which such petitioners reside, and, in order to supply all the petitioners with water, respondent will be required to install lateral connections with said Geary street main extending some 2,000 feet southerly along the avenues upon which the greater number of the petitioners reside. Respondent has in its various reservoirs far more than enough water to furnish a sufficient and adequate supply of water regularly each day to each and every part of said city and county of San Francisco and to all the inhabitants and residents thereof, and could, if its water mains and laterals were extended some 2,000 feet, as above set forth, along the avenues and streets of said district, readily and easily supply water to all the petitioners for all proper uses and purposes without depriving the inhabitants of any portion of said city and county of their accustomed and necessary daily supply of water. The petitioners have demanded of respondent repeatedly that it extend its water mains into and through said streets and avenues upon which petitioners reside, and that they be served with water sufficient for domestic purposes and for protection against fire, and have offered to pay all lawful rates and charges of respondent therefor, but respondent has refused to comply with the demand of petitioners in whole or in part, and refuses to do so.

The attack of respondent upon this petition by demurrer was based upon a large number of grounds, but the principal one presented and relied on is that the facts alleged in the petition do not sustain any right in petitioners to be granted the relief they seek.

The predecessor and grantor of respondent, the Spring Valley Waterworks, was organized under the act of 1858 which provided that:

"All corporations formed under the provisions of this act, or claiming any of the privileges of the same, shall furnish pure, fresh water to the inhabitants of such city and county, or city or town, for family uses, so long as the supply permits, at reasonable rates and without distinction of persons, upon proper demand therefor, and shall furnish water, to the extent of their means, to such city and county, or city or town, in case of fire, or other great necessity, free of charge." Stats. 1858, p. 218.

It is further provided by section 549 of the Civil Code:

"That all corporations formed to supply water to cities or towns must furnish pure, fresh water to the inhabitants thereof, for family uses so long as the supply permits, at reasonable rates and without distinction of persons upon proper demand therefor; and must furnish water to the extent of their means, in case of fire or other great necessity, free of charge. The board of supervisors, or proper city or town authorities, may prescribe proper rules relating to the delivery of water, not inconsistent with the laws of the state."

The Constitution of the state of California (section 19, art. 11, as amended on February 12, 1885 [St. 1885, p. 228]) provided as follows:

"In any city where there are no public works owned and controlled by the municipality for supplying the same with water or artificial light, any individual, or any company duly incorporated for such purpose, under and by authority of the laws of this state, shall, under the direction of the superintendent of streets, or other officer in control thereof, and under such general regulations as the municipality may prescribe, for damages, and indemnity for damages, have the privilege of using the public streets and thoroughfares thereof, and of laying down pipes and conduits, therein, and connections therewith, so far as may be necessary for introducing into and supplying such city, and its inhabitants, either with gas light, or other illuminating light, or with fresh water for domestic and all other purposes, upon the condition that the municipal government shall have the right to regulate the charges thereof."

The contention of the petitioners is, and the petition was drafted upon that theory, that under the terms of the franchise by which its right to operate in the city and county of San Francisco was granted to and accepted by the respondent, as well as under the statute and constitutional provision, the duty was assumed by the company and the implied obligation was cast upon it of taking all reasonable measures to supply the entire city and its inhabitants with water, and, in the discharge of that obligation, to lay its pipes in the streets thereof so as to make the supply accessible to such inhabitants.

The claim of respondent is that neither its franchise nor the provisions relied on by petitioner requires it to make any extensions of its system by the addition of water mains to districts within the city other than it may deem proper to do; that the only legal duty which it owes to such inhabitants is that when it had laid its mains or laterals along the streets of the city it must allow service connections to be made therewith for the benefit of property owners along the line of said mains and laterals.

Having stated the contentions of the respective parties, we proceed to examine their merits.

The predecessor of respondent and respondent itself was not organized and is not engaged in a private enterprise, the conduct of which is within its own control. It was organized for, and is engaged in, a public enterprise, and its rights, duties, and responsibilities are to be determined from a consideration of the provisions of the franchise which it acquired under the act of 1858 and the obligations which it assumed when it accepted it. By incorporating under that act it unquestionably assumed the public duty of supplying the city and county of San Francisco and its inhabitants with water, which was the specific purpose for which the franchise was extended to it. Under the franchise the corporation was invested with a right of eminent domain to effect the public duty which it had undertaken and in the municipality where it undertook to carry out its assumption of this duty, and, for the purpose of effectively doing so, it was granted an irrevocable easement in the streets of the entire city for the purpose of laying its pipes therein and discharging the duty it had assumed. The act of 1858 in express terms confers on corporations accepting the franchise extended under it the privilege of using the streets of the municipality in which it has undertaken to operate for laying its pipes and conduits. The respondent could acquire no right to engage in the business of supplying water to the city and county of San Francisco, with an easement over all the streets of the municipality, unless under a franchise granted by the state for that purpose and with such a right. It was for the benefit of the public that the franchise was extended; to secure to the municipality of the city and county of San Francisco and its inhabitants an adequate supply of water as the reasonable and necessary wants of the community in that respect might require. This was the purpose and this the condition upon which the franchise was offered, and when it was accepted by the respondent it constituted a contract between the state and the respondent under which the rights, duties, and responsibilities of each were fixed, and by which they were bound. The franchise was offered by the state as an entirety, and, where a corporation organizing under the act offering it undertook the public duty which such franchise contemplated of supplying water to a municipality and its inhabitants, it accepts the franchise in its entirety. It was a community service which was contemplated by the extension of the franchise, and which was intended should be assumed by a corporation accepting it, and it was solely that this assumed duty might be properly and entirely discharged that an easement over all the streets of the municipality was granted with the franchise. The franchise was not offered, nor could it be accepted, with any limitation as to the area to be fixed by the corporation organized under the act within which in the municipality it would furnish water to its inhabitants. It was intended that the public duty assumed should be discharged for the benefit of the municipality and its inhabitants as a community; that when a water company organized under the act undertook to furnish water to the inhabitants of a city it should be charged with the obligation of taking adequate measures to supply the reasonable needs and wants of all the inhabitants as they arose. The proper discharge of this public duty required not only that the company should provide a supply of water and establish a system for its distribution to meet the reasonable needs of the municipal community as it then existed, but it was under the obligation to keep in view the prospective and probable increase in population of the municipality and the necessarily increasing demand for a water supply which would be consequent therefrom; to anticipate the natural growth of the municipality it had undertaken to serve as a whole; and to take reasonable measures to have under its control a sufficient supply of water and make gradual extensions of its distributive system to meet the reasonable demands for water by the growing community. This duty the respondent assumed by accepting its franchise under the act of 1858, and, as it appears from the petition that it has in its possession and under its control more than an adequate supply of water whereby all the inhabitants of the city and county of San Francisco may be served without at all disturbing the claims of existing consumers, and that only a reasonable extension of its existing mains is required to supply the petitioners, who are inhabitants of the city, with the water service they have demanded, it was the legal duty of the respondent to have complied with the demand and made the extension.

We are not cited to any authority by petitioners where the precise question now under consideration was involved—the extension of a water system into new territory in a city—and to none by respondent where it is held that a corporation operating under the terms of a franchise such as is involved here is not required to do so. Our own investigation of the subject has disclosed some authorities which support the right to have such extensions made within reasonable limits. In fact, in one of them (decided after this appeal was determined by the District Court of Appeal) there was under consideration the rights and obligations of a public service corporation organized under the constitutional provision (section 19, art. 11, as amended in 1885) which we have quoted above, and which, as far as the franchise thereby granted is concerned, is in no respect different from the franchise acquired by the respondent under the act of 1858, and the benefit of which constitutional amendment is available to respondent. That case is Russell v. Sebastian, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, 233 U. S. 195, 34 Sup. Ct. 517, 58 L. Ed. 912, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1282. It involved the right of gas and water companies to excavate streets in municipalities for their mains under the constitutional amendment of 1885 above referred to. The Economic Gas Company had organized in 1909 for the purpose of manufacturing and delivering gas in the city of Los Angeles. It had established its works for that purpose, and prior to October 10, 1911, had extended its distributing system along the streets of that city into a portion of its territory. On October 10, 1911, said section 19, art. 11, of the Constitution of this state was further amended to provide, among other things, that:

"Persons or corporations may establish and operate works for supplying the inhabitants with such services (gas, water, etc.) upon such conditions and under such regulations as the municipality may prescribe under its organic law. * * *"

Subsequent to this constitutional amendment, and in 1911, the city of Los Angeles passed an ordinance providing that no one should exercise any franchise or privilege to lay or maintain pipes or conduits in the streets of the city for conveying gas, water, etc., without having obtained a grant from the city in accordance with the city charter, unless entitled to do so by direct and unlimited authority of the Constitution of the state of California, and making it unlawful to make any excavation in a street for any purpose whatever without permission from the city, to be granted on a showing by the applicant therefor of legal authority to use the streets for the purposes specified. In 1912 the Economic Gas Company was proceeding to open trenches in the streets of the city of Los Angeles for the purpose of extending its mains into territory in that city which it was not theretofore serving, and its employé Russell was arrested at the instance of the city. The question in the case—in reality one between the gas company and the city, and so presented before the Supreme Court—was as to the nature and extent of the right acquired by the gas company by the establishment of its works and extension of its distributing system into a portion of the city under the amendment of 1885 to the constitutional provision, and how far, having undertaken its public service prior to the amendment of 1911, it could be affected by the attempt of the city under this last amendment to the Constitution to prohibit further extensions of its system through all the streets of the city without a grant or franchise from the city and permission so to do. It was held that the establishment of its plant by the gas company and the undertaking by it under the constitutional amendment of 1885 to perform the service incident to a public utility constituted a contract between the state and the company; that the actual usage of certain streets by the company did not measure the range of its acceptance of the public franchise as to streets of the city or define the limits of the operation of the company; that the offer was of a privilege to lay pipes as far as they might be required in order to effect the adequate distribution of gas, and was commensurate with the requirement of the undertaking which was assumed by a public service company, namely, of supplying such city and its inhabitants either with light or water, as the case might be; that the constitutional offer of the privilege of supplying a municipality with gas or water was intended to be extended by the state in an entirety, and to be accepted as an entirety by the company undertaking to do so, and hence granted to the Economic Gas Company the right to continue to lay its pipes in the streets of the city wherever necessary to extend its service and perform the duty of supplying the service which it had undertaken by such acceptance; and that the company could not be prevented or interfered with in doing so by subsequent legislation impairing the grant.

The court, after discussing the policy of the state in making the constitutional offer of such a franchise, declared:

"That there was no ambiguity in the scope of the [constitutional] offer. It was not simply a privilege to maintain pipes actually laid, but to lay pipes as far as they might be required in order to effect an adequate distribution. * * * The breadth of the offer was commensurate with the requirements of the undertaking which was invoked. The service to which the provision refers was a community service. It was the supplying of a municipality—which had no municipal works—with water or light. * * * In view of the nature of the undertaking in contemplation, and of the terms of the offer, we find no ground for the conclusion that each act of laying pipe was to constitute an acceptance pro tanto. We think that the offer was intended to be accepted in its entirety as made, and that acceptance lay in conduct committing the person accepting to the described service. * * * This construction of the constitutional provision is the only one that is compatible with the existence of the duty which it was intended, as it seems to us, that the recipient of the state's grant should assume. The service, as has been said, was a community service. Incident to the undertaking in response to the state's offer was the obligation to provide facilities that were reasonably adequate. * * * It would not be said that either a water company or a gas company, establishing its service under the constitutional grant, could stop its mains at its pleasure and withhold its supply by refusing to extend its distributing conduits so as to meet the reasonable requirements of the community. But this duty and the right to serve, embracing the right under the granted privilege to install the means of service, were correlative."

In this connection the said Supreme Court quoted with approval from People ex rel. Woodhaven Gas Co. v. Deeham, 153 N. Y. 528, 47 N. E. 787, as follows:

"It is well known that business enterprises such as the relator is engaged in are based upon calculations of future growth and expansion. A franchise for supplying gas not only confers a privilege, but imposes an obligation, upon the corporation to serve the public in a reasonable way. The relator is bound to supply gas to the people of the town upon certain conditions and under certain circumstances, and it would be most unjust to give such a construction to the consent as to disable it from performing its obligations. It cannot reasonably be contended that the relator is obliged to apply for a new grant whenever a new street is opened or an old one extended, as would be the case if the consent applied only to the situation existing when made. When the right to use the streets has been once granted in general terms to a corporation engaged in supplying gas for public and private use, such grant necessarily contemplates that new streets are to be opened and old ones extended from time to time, and so the privilege may be exercised in the new streets as well as in the old."

And in the conclusion of its opinion the Supreme Court said, with respect to the acceptance by the gas company of the franchise offered by the constitutional amendment of 1885 to supply gas to the inhabitants of the city of Los Angeles:

"The company, by its investment, had irrevocably committed itself to the understanding and its acceptance of the offer of the right to lay its pipes, so far as necessary to serve the municipality, was complete."

In a comparatively recent work (Wyman on Public Service Corporations) the author says (vol. 1, § 797):

"In most of the public employments of the modern type what is undertaken is not merely the devoting of particular equipment to public use, but rather the rendering of a certain service to the community with which it professes to deal. * * * All this is particularly true of the municipal services, such as waterworks, gas plants, electric plants, and telephone systems. * * * Such companies are held to undertake the service of their communities; and they must, to speak in general, be prepared to extend this system throughout their district to meet the reasonable demands of the growing community. If this involves the acquisition of new sources of supply, or a laying of pipes in new streets, or extension of wires to other streets or the construction of new exchanges, all these new facilities must be provided to meet the expansion of the business within the community to the service of which the company has committed itself. But it is true of such supply, as it is of other public service, that the duty to give adequate service to those to whom it owes this primary duty is relative, not absolute. The service company will be held to the exercise of due foresight in anticipating the progress of the demand for its supply accompanying the growth of the community."

Elsewhere, in discussing this same subject, the same author declares (section 281):

"It is obvious that the problems raised in this topic have not been disposed of as yet. It is plain that the existing facilities must in many instances be further developed in readiness to give service to those beyond the present lines, since what has really been undertaken is the proper service of the whole community dependent upon the established company. This at least involves the well-settled central territory within which service is plainly demanded, whether mains have been laid in all the streets or not. Certainly all premises situated within the network of the existing mains and within convenient connecting distance of their lines should be served. All of these premises come within the sphere of influence, already established, differing slightly from premises abutting. But the law will soon require, if it does not already, that the existing mains must be gradually extended as the growth of population in the community which the corporation has undertaken to serve demands the expansion."

See, also, 2 Morawetz on Corporations, § 1129; Haugen v. Albina Light & Water Co., 21 Or. 418, 28 Pac. 244, 14 L. R. A. 424; Pocatello Water Co. v. Standley, 7 Idaho, 155, 61 Pac. 518.

In the case of Bothwell v. Consumers' Co., 13 Idaho, 568, 92 Pac. 533, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 495, the action was brought to compel the water company to attach its mains and connect with the water pipe of the plaintiff on the line of his property. The court, reversing a judgment entered on an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, in the course of its opinion said, as to the extent of the implied obligation of a water company under a franchise similar in terms to that of respondent here:

"The franchise for laying pipes in the streets and alleys and maintaining and operating a water system is granted by the municipality to the water company. The property owner has no right or franchise to dig in the streets and alleys and lay pipes, and if he should do so he would acquire no property right therein. The main and all laterals, fixtures, and connections within the franchise limits belong to the water company, and all together constitute the water system. It is not the business of the citizen or consumer to construct any part of the company's system. * * * The company, in the enjoyment of its franchise privileges, is placed by the Constitution under a public duty to supply water to all living within the franchise limits on payment of the rental rates. It owes this duty to every one so long as it has water to sell, whether it be on the line of its main or at a great distance therefrom."

In addition to these cases which deal with or discuss the duty of a public service corporation to reasonably extend its service to meet the necessary wants of a community which under its franchise it has undertaken generally to serve, we are cited by counsel for petitioners to a number of cases, all of which involved directly the refusal of a water company to make service connections for the benefit of property owners whose property abutted upon streets through which the supply mains of the company were already laid, and which sustain the right to have the service connections made. Counsel for respondent contends that these cases are distinguishable in principle from the case at bar. But the only difference we perceive is that the petitioners here do not reside directly on the streets through which the respondent has laid its mains. It is true that in none of the cases cited was there the question involved, nor do they declare anything as to the duty of a water company organized and chartered for the purpose of supplying all the inhabitants of a community with water to reasonably extend its mains so that all residing therein may be served. But, in our judgment, there is no difference in the principle applied in the cited cases and that which governs in the case at bar, which is that, where a public service water company has obligated itself under its franchise to supply the inhabitants of a community with water, and has the water with which to do so, it is under legal compulsion to discharge its assumed obligations on a reasonable demand. In the cited cases the water company had actually extended its mains along the streets of a city to a point where the water supply was accessible to the property owners fronting on the mains, and, in the discharge of its franchise obligation, was compelled to give them water service connections as inhabitants of the community it had undertaken to serve. In the case at bar the respondent company, having under the terms of its franchise undertaken to furnish water to the inhabitants of the city and county of San Francisco, of whom petitioners are a part, and having a water supply more than sufficient for that purpose, which by a reasonable extension of its mains may be served to petitioners, is equally legally required to make the extension in discharge of its franchise obligation.

[1] We are of the opinion, therefore, for the reasons given and under the authorities we have referred to, that when the respondent accepted the franchise offered by the state, and undertook to supply the municipality of San Francisco and its inhabitants with water, it assumed a public duty to be discharged for the public benefit; a community service commensurate with the offer of the franchise which involved the duty of providing a service system which would be reasonably adequate to meet the wants of the municipality, not only at the time it began its service, but likewise to keep pace with the growth of the municipality, and to gradually extend its system as the reasonable wants of the growing community might require, and, as it appears from the petition in this case that respondent is in a position to discharge this duty towards petitioners by a reasonable extension of its mains, it should have done so on their demand, and, having refused, may be compelled to do it.

[2] In reaching this conclusion it is, of course, to be borne in mind that the right of an inhabitant of the municipality or the inhabitants of a particular portion of it to compel the service to them by the water company through the extension of its system is not an absolute and unqualified right. The fact that the water company has undertaken to serve the entire municipality, and that it would be of advantage to an inhabitant thereof, or a number of them, to have the water system extended to supply them, would not of itself be sufficient to require or compel the company to make the extension. The duty which the water company has undertaken is of a public nature and to meet a public necessity for the supplying of water to the community. The obligation of the company is not to supply each or any number of inhabitants of the municipality on demand as an absolute right on their part, but it has only assumed and become charged with the public duty of furnishing it where there is a reasonable demand for it and a reasonable extension of the service can be made to meet the demand. The right to require the service and the duty of furnishing it by an extension of the water system is to be determined from a consideration of the reasonableness of the demand therefor. It would hardly be claimed that the obligation of a water company exercising a public service franchise would require it on the demand of an inhabitant of the city, or even a number of them, residing at a long distance from a point in the city to which its mains are already extended, to further excavate the streets of the municipality at its own expense and extend its mains to them, where the rates to be charged for the water to be delivered would but to a slight extent compensate the company for the expenditures entailed in doing so; in fact, without any certainty that there would be a continuous consumption of water or a continuous payment of rates even after it was brought to them. On the other hand, where the extension of an existing main, if made only for a few feet, would supply the water service, the demand for making such an extension would obviously be a reasonable one, as the rates to be charged would ordinarily compensate for the expenditure made by the company. Between these particular cases suggested there is a wide field for the play of the rule of reasonableness of demand for service, and whether it does or does not exist must be determined by a court as a fact in each particular case where it is sought to compel an extension of service. Of course, the matter of expenditure to be entailed by the public service company in extending its service is not a controlling feature in determining the reasonableness of a demand for it, because the water rates established as a whole between the public service corporation and the city by the public body to which that duty is committed must be sufficient to yield a fair, just, and reasonable income on the property of the company devoted to public use, which would include such necessary expenditures. But additional expenditure by the company or an additional burden on the water rate payers as a whole should not be imposed for the benefit of a particular portion of the community unless a reasonable necessity for it exists. Whether it does or not is to be determined by a consideration of the facts in each particular case, and, among other things, by a consideration of the duties of the company, the rights of its stockholders, the supply of water which the company may control for distribution, the facilities for making extensions to a locality beyond its present point of service, the rights of existing customers, the wants and necessities of the locality demanding it, and how far the right of the community as a whole may be affected by the demanded extension. We refer to this matter of reasonableness of demand to be considered in determining the right to require the extension of service on account of the general language used in the authorities cited in sustaining the implied obligation of a public service corporation under its charter to supply all the inhabitants of a municipality with water. While this is the obligation it undertakes, the right of the inhabitants of the municipality to have it discharged is, as we have said, not an absolute, but a relative, one, which may be enforced only when conditions are such that there exists a reasonable demand for the fulfillment of the obligation. In the case at bar the facts charged in the petition show that there is such a reasonable demand for such an extension, and, as there is a liability on the respondent under such circumstances to comply with it, it may be compelled to do so.

[3] The special point is made by respondent, for the first time in this case, in a supplemental brief filed by it on the hearing in this court, that the petitioners, as private individuals, may not maintain this action in mandamus; that the primary right to compel respondent to extend its mains (if it exists anywhere, which respondent does not admit), rests with either the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco or with the State Railroad Commission, and that one or the other of these bodies can alone invoke by mandamus the aid of this court to compel the extension of existing mains in compliance with the order of either requiring respondent to do so. Hence respondent asserts that the demurrer was properly sustained by the superior court because the amended petition itself does not show a cause of action which the petitioners could assert. Counsel do not point out in which of the public bodies referred to the alleged primary or exclusive right to compel the extension of its mains is vested. It asserts, after simply quoting provisions of the charter of the city and county of San Francisco, general provisions of the Constitution, and the special constitutional provision respecting the powers of the State Railroad Commission, that the right of compulsion exists in either the one or the other of these public bodies to the exclusion of any right in these petitioners to maintain this action.

We perceive nothing in the charter provisions nor the constitutional provision respecting the power of the board of supervisors or the State Railroad Commission which confers upon either of these public bodies primary and exclusive right to initiate proceedings compelling respondent to extend its water system to meet the present wants of particular inhabitants of the municipality, or anything which precludes the inhabitants of a city, or any portion thereof, which a public service corporation exercising such a franchise has obligated itself to serve with water, from applying directly to the courts to enforce the obligation to them which the corporation has undertaken to discharge. It may be assumed in the same general way that respondent asserts it (though we decline to express any opinion on the subject) that one or the other of the public bodies referred to also has the power to compel the respondent, as a public service corporation, to discharge the public duty assumed under its franchise to meet the public wants and necessities as they arise in the municipality. But the legislation under which these bodies are created does not pretend to interfere with the personal right of the inhabitant of a city to invoke the aid of the court to compel the respondent to enforce toward him the obligation which it has assumed for his personal benefit. It is not pretended that mandamus as invoked here is not the proper remedy, if the petitioners have a remedy. The only insistence is that it is not available to them because, as asserted, the relief which they ask can only be afforded them through the medium of the public bodies referred to. But, as no primary or exclusive control of this subject is vested in these bodies, the right of the petitioners to compel the discharge of its duty to them by respondent cannot be doubted. The franchise of 1858 accepted by respondent constituted, as we have said, a contract between it and the state under which the respondent undertook a public use of which the inhabitants of the city of San Francisco are the beneficiaries. The right of such inhabitants as beneficiaries of such public use was created under the franchise so accepted, and the duty was then assumed by respondent of furnishing and supplying water for their personal use as their reasonable demands for it might arise. The right which this acceptance legally secured to each inhabitant of the municipality was in the nature of a public right accruing to him from his status as a person of the class for whose benefit the respondent obligated itself to furnish a water supply. The right was extended to, and the obligation of the respondent included, each and every person who might become an inhabitant of the municipality while respondent was exercising the public use that it had assumed. By such acceptance a clear and perfect legal right was created in favor of the inhabitants of the municipality to compel a water service to them, and imposed the clear and legal obligation upon the respondent to do so. Under such circumstances, when the right and the public duty are clear, mandamus is the proper remedy. Price v. Riverside L. & I. Co., 56 Cal. 431; *Hildreth v. KENNEDY v. KENNEDY et al. (S. F. 6600.)

1. BANKS AND BANKING ⇨129—DEPOSITS—JOINT OWNERSHIP.

A joint ownership, with the incident of survivorship attaching as a matter of law, may be created in a bank deposit by agreement between donor and donee.

2. BANKS AND BANKING ⇨129—DEPOSITS—AGREEMENT CREATING JOINT OWNERSHIP—EFFECT.

Where deceased deposited funds in bank under an instrument signed by himself and defendant, his daughter, declaring that such funds and those thereafter to be deposited were and should be joint between the parties as to time, title, and possession, that they were the separate property of neither, and were payable to either, and that the receipt of either therefor should be an acquittance of the bank as to the other, on deceased's death, defendant was entitled to the fund on deposit as against his personal representative; such a written instrument being conclusive of deceased's intention to create a joint ownership, the right of survivorship following as a legal incident, and so not needing to be expressed.

3. BANKS AND BANKING ⇨129—DEPOSITS—JOINT OWNERSHIP.

The mere fact that a bank deposit is made by one person in the name of himself and another is not conclusive as to his intention thereby to create such a joint ownership in the fund that the incident of survivorship will attach thereto as a matter of law, the absence of a declaration of intention leaving the matter for judicial determination.

4. BANKS AND BANKING —129—DEPOSITS—CONSTRUCTION OF AGREEMENT.

In view of the fact that joint savings accounts are largely opened by near relatives so that the survivor shall take the fund, where such an account was opened by father and daughter, an agreement as to the nature of their interests, executed by them on a form provided by the bank for its own protection, was presumed a valid agreement between the parties furnished by the bank at their request, creating a joint ownership to which the legal incident of survivorship attached.

5. BANKS AND BANKING —129—DEPOSITS—JOINT OWNERSHIP—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to show that a father, in executing an instrument prepared by his savings bank, intended to create a joint tenancy in the deposit with his daughter to which the right of survivorship should attach.

6. BANKS AND BANKING —154—DEPOSITS—ACTION—GENERAL FINDING OF COURT AS CONTROLLED BY SPECIAL FINDING.

A general finding that one of the alleged owners of a bank deposit was sole owner at his death was controlled by special findings as to the execution of an agreement between the parties constituting them joint owners of the deposit, with the incident of survivorship attaching as a matter of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 502-512, 515, 516, 518-533; Dec. Dig. —154.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by William J. Kennedy, administrator, against Mary E. Kennedy and others. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Guy C. Earl and W. H. Spaulding, both of San Francisco, for appellant. Rufus H. Kimball, J. C. McKinstry, and D. C. Murphy, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

LORIGAN, C. J. This action was brought to determine diverse claims to $3,240 and interest on deposit with the defendant bank.

The complaint averred that this deposit consisted of moneys of which the deceased, Bartholomew Kennedy, was the sole owner in his lifetime, and which from time to time he deposited personally in the defendant bank, and that such deposit was at the time of his death a part of his estate; that the defendant Mary E. McMurray asserted a claim to said deposit as her separate property which asserted claim was without right; that both plaintiff and said defendant Mary E. McMurray had demanded payment thereof from the bank separately, and that by reason of said different and conflicting claims thereto the bank had refused to pay the deposit to either. Plaintiff asked for a judgment determining that said Mary E. McMurray had no right or interest in said deposit and against the bank requiring it to pay over said deposit to plaintiff.

The defendant Mary E. McMurray filed an answer and cross-complaint. In her answer she denied that her claim to said deposit was without right and asserted that it was her sole and separate property. In her cross-complaint she averred that prior to her marriage to the defendant William J. McMurray (and as he filed a disclaimer of any interest in the deposit he may therefore be eliminated from this action) her name was Mary E. Kennedy, also called May E. Kennedy; that on July 26, 1902, said Bartholomew Kennedy, who was her father, and herself opened an account with the defendant in the names of "Bartholomew Kennedy or May E. Kennedy," and then and there said Bartholomew Kennedy deposited with said bank $3,000, which sum was deposited by him in the names of "Bartholomew Kennedy or May E. Kennedy"; that thereafter during his lifetime other moneys were deposited by said Bartholomew Kennedy and certain moneys were withdrawn from said account by him, and at the death of said Bartholomew Kennedy there was on deposit in said bank in the names of said "Bartholomew Kennedy or May E. Kennedy" the sum of money mentioned in the complaint. The cross-complaint then proceeded to aver: That said account was so opened and said original deposit of $3,000 and all moneys thereafter deposited therein on the understanding and agreement made and entered into between said defendant bank and said Bartholomew Kennedy and the defendant Mary E. Kennedy that any and all moneys deposited in said account should be held by said defendant bank in trust upon the following terms:

"That all moneys * * * at any time deposited or on deposit * * * in said account were to be paid by said bank upon the order at any time of either said Bartholomew Kennedy or this defendant and upon the death of either said Bartholomew Kennedy or this defendant any and all moneys then at the time of such death on deposit in said account * * * should be the sole and separate property of the survivor of said two persons, to wit, said Bartholomew Kennedy and this defendant and to be payable by said Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco to such survivor as his or her, as the case might be, sole and separate property."

And that as the survivor of said two persons defendant is the owner of said deposit. It is then alleged that the claim made by the plaintiff as administrator of the estate of said Bartholomew Kennedy, deceased, to the money on deposit is invalid, that the estate of said deceased has no interest therein, but that said money is the sole and separate property of the defendant and cross-complainant. Her prayer was that it be decreed that said property is the sole and separate property of the defendant and for a judgment against the bank requiring it to pay over to her said deposit.

Plaintiff by answer denied the averments of the cross-complaint. The defendant bank filed an answer to both the complaint and cross-complaint, and on information and belief denied that the deceased, Kennedy, was the sole owner in his lifetime of the moneys deposited with it, or that they were the sole and separate property of the cross-complainant. It was conceded by both sides on the trial that the bank was a mere stakeholder in this matter.

The trial court made general and special findings. It found generally that the allegations of the complaint were true, and that the denials in the answer of the defendant Mary E. McMurray were untrue. It found specially that the cross-complainant did not at any time open an account with the defendant bank as alleged by her, but that the account referred to by her in said pleading was opened by said Bartholomew Kennedy and the title of said account opened on the books and records of the bank was "Bartholomew Kennedy or May E. Kennedy," and that none of the moneys deposited in said account were ever deposited upon any trust agreement or understanding as set up in the paragraph of the cross-complaint averring that fact. The court then proceeding made what will be designated as special finding No. 6, in which it found:

"That the only agreement which the defendant bank ever made with said Bartholomew Kennedy in respect to said deposits of money was reduced to writing and was signed by him and said Mary E. McMurray, then May E. Kennedy, and that said agreement so reduced to writing consisted of two separate documents as follows:

"Conditions of deposit account No. 11233:

"San Francisco, Jul. 26, 1902.

"We, the undersigned, each for himself and not one for the other, declare that the sums deposited to this account are, and those sums hereafter to be deposited shall be, joint as to time, title and possession, and further declare that they are not and have never been the separate property of either, and said sums are hereby made payable to either of us; and we hereby agree that the receipt of either of us shall be a full acquittance and discharge to the Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco therefor.

"Bartholomew Kennedy.

"Mary E. Kennedy.

"Witness: W. H. Cameron."

"Depositors subscriptions to conditions of agreement with the Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco:

"No. 11233.

Jul. 26, 1912.

"We hereby agree to be governed by the by-laws, copy of which is in our passbook, in regard to all deposits we may have with the Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco.

"Payable to the individual order of either.

"Signature: Bartholomew Kennedy.

"Signature: May E. Kennedy."

As conclusions of law from the facts found the trial court held that the defendant and cross-complainant Mary E. McMurray had no right to or interest in said deposit and gave plaintiff judgment against the defendant bank for the sum of $3,240, with interest from January 1, 1910. Defendant and cross-complainant appeals from the judgment and an order denying her motion for a new trial.

[1, 2] On the appeal from the judgment the contention of the appellant is that special finding No. 6 is controlling in the case; that the trial court should have determined as matter of law therefrom that appellant was the owner of the deposit in controversy and given her judgment accordingly. In this regard her claim is that as a joint ownership or interest in personal property, including a deposit in a savings bank, may be created to which the incident of survivorship attaches (Denigan v. S. F. Sav. Union, 127 Cal. 142, 59 Pac. 390, 78 Am. St. Rep. 35), the clear legal effect of the instruments specially found by the court to have been executed by appellant and her father at the time the deposit was made was to create a joint ownership or interest in both as to the deposits then made by her father, and deposits thereafter to be made with the defendant bank; that as an incident to this joint ownership the right of survivorship attached, and appellant, being the survivor of the joint owners, was entitled to the deposit, and the court should, under the special finding referred to, have so held.

[3] We are satisfied that this contention of appellant must be sustained. We are cited by respective counsel to cases in our courts which it is claimed announce principles under which a proper construction of the instruments executed when the deposit here involved was made is to be reached, but we do not think that any of them have particular application to the subject. These cases are Booth v. Oakland Bank of Savings, 122 Cal. 19, 54 Pac. 370; Carr v. Carr, 15 Cal. App. 480, 115 Pac. 261; Drinkhouse v. German Sav. & Loan Soc., 17 Cal. App. 162, 118 Pac. 953; Denigan v. Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc., 127 Cal. 137, 59 Pac. 389; Robinson v. Mutual Sav. Bank, 7 Cal. App. 642, 95 Pac. 533; Estate of Hall, 154 Cal. 527, 98 Pac. 269. In those cases the question was presented, in one form or another, as to who was entitled to a deposit in a savings bank where a deposit account had been opened on the books of the bank by a depositor in his own name "or" that of another, or where the deposit was entered on the books of the bank to the "joint account" of the depositor and another person, or the question was whether the deposit was made in trust for the benefit of another. The actions were brought either by the survivors to the deposit account or the beneficiaries under the alleged trust. But on examination of those cases it will be observed that in none of them was there any written instrument executed by the parties in whose names the account stood in the bank declaring their rights or interests respecting the deposit, or the terms under which it was made and was to be held by the bank. In the cases referred to the terms of the deposit consisted simply of an entry in the passbook and an entry in the records of the bank. No written instrument was executed between the parties to the deposit and accompanying its making. So that in the mentioned cases the question was as to the intention of the depositor in making the deposit in the form he did; whether he intended to make a gift, or create a joint interest in the deposit with right of survivorship, or to establish a trust as to any balance on deposit at his death. In the absence of any written instrument clearly disclosing his intention in those respects, such intention was open to inquiry and to be determined from all the facts and circumstances connected with the deposit. The whole matter rested in parol, and whether, as asserted in the Denigan Case, supra, it was the intention of Mrs. Denigan, in having a deposit entered in the books of the bank and in her passbook in the names of "Frank Denigan or Ellen Denigan," to thereby create a joint interest or ownership in the deposit to which the incident of survivorship would attach, or in the Carr Case, supra, whether it was the intention of Michael Carr, by changing his deposit on the books of the bank to the names of Michael or M. K. Carr as "joint owners" payable to either or the survivor, thereby to create a trust in favor of M. K. Carr, the survivor, was a question open to determination from a consideration of all the facts surrounding the making of the deposit. In none of the cases cited could the mere fact of deposit and the entry in the books of the bank be conclusive of the matter of intention. It was accompanied by no written declaration of the depositor which could be taken as determining his intention respecting it, and hence, as the question was an open one, it was for the court to determine the intention from all the facts and circumstances proven in the case. But in the case at bar we have a written declaration signed by the father and his daughter relative to the deposit declaring the character of the property then deposited or which might thereafter be deposited, the interest which both have and are to have in it and fixing their rights respecting it. It is true that there was evidence in the case showing that prior to making this particular deposit the money constituting it was money which Mr. Kennedy had already on deposit with the bank in his own name. It was at that time his individual property. When the written instruments were executed by himself and his daughter and as part of the transaction he had this money transferred from his account on the books of the bank and deposited in the names of himself or the appellant. The prior ownership by the father of this money, however, is a circumstance of no importance if the written instruments declare and disclose a purpose and intent on his part in having the old deposit transferred to the new deposit account to thereby give his daughter a joint interest with him in it. It was his property, and he could do with it as he pleased. We are not aware of any Code provision or principle of law which would prevent him by this transfer of deposits from his sole account to a joint account from giving her a joint interest or making her a joint owner with him in the latter deposit. Whether he intended to do so or not is the essential element in the case, and if that clearly appears from the instruments executed by him and his daughter when he made the deposit in their names we cannot look beyond those instruments. If it is clear on the question of intent the right of the parties must be determined solely from its consideration. No parol evidence could affect it.

Coming now to a consideration of the instrument: While it consists of a mutual declaration of the father and the daughter as to the deposits, the particular question is: Does it clearly disclose an intention on the part of the father, when the deposit was made by him to the account of himself and his daughter, to constitute it and future deposits the joint property of himself and her? We do not perceive how any other reasonable construction can be given to the instrument than that he did. The written declaration as applying to him says so in express terms. The moneys were his before the deposit account was opened. He declares that as deposited by him it is not his separate property, but the joint property of himself and his daughter; "that the sums deposited to this account are, and other sums hereafter to be deposited shall be, joint as to time, title, and possession." There is no ambiguity or uncertainty about this language. It was undoubtedly intended to and did create a joint interest or ownership in the deposit, and this being the intention, and as the right of survivorship applies to joint interests or ownership of personal property, it must have been the intention of the deceased Kennedy, in declaring the deposit to be joint property, to have intended that the incident which follows joint ownership should apply to it, and that upon his death his daughter should take the deposit as survivor. Certainly, more apt language, whereby a joint ownership in the deposit or a right to the withdrawal of it (because the legal title to the money deposited was in the bank and the relation of debtor and creditor between Kennedy and appellant and the bank was created by the deposit) could not have been employed than is used in the instrument in question. It was unnecessary to accompany the creation of the joint ownership with a declaration respecting survivorship. That followed as a legal incident to the creation of the joint interest, a matter which Kennedy must be held to have known and intended to effect by the clear creation of the joint interest between himself and appellant in the deposit.

terms of the instruments, it is insisted by respondent that they were simply forms prepared by the bank to protect it in its payments to either of the two parties, regardless of their rights as between themselves, and had nothing to do as affecting the relations between themselves concerning the moneys deposited; that, further, the deceased Kennedy by the terms of the instruments retained the right to draw against the deposit and so exhaust it, and likewise himself retained the passbook without the production of which at the bank the appellant would be unable to draw any of the funds; and that these matters are inconsistent with an intention on the part of Kennedy to create a joint ownership between himself and appellant in the deposit with the right of survivorship. No doubt but that as claimed by respondent this form was provided by the bank in a measure to protect itself in making payments. But taking into account the well-known fact that deposit accounts are largely opened with savings banks, particularly between husband and wife and near relations for the express purpose of having the amount remaining on deposit in such bank go on the death of one of the parties to the survivor, this form was doubtless provided by the defendant savings bank here for execution by depositors wishing to do this and as legally sufficient to effect that intention. As to the other matters suggested, we do not see how they can have any bearing to defeat the intention clearly appearing from the instruments that the deposit should be the joint property of the parties to it. There was no exclusive right to draw on the deposit retained by the deceased Kennedy by the terms of the written instruments. On the contrary, thereunder both he and appellant had an equal right to do so. Instead of being inconsistent with an intention to create a joint ownership in the deposit, this right of withdrawal extending fully to either party to the deposit would rather tend to sustain such an intention. Nor could the fact (which would be a matter outside of the terms of the agreement respecting the deposit if proven) that the deceased Kennedy retained exclusive control of the passbook during his lifetime affect the terms of the instrument. As said in Farrelly v. Emigrant Industrial Sav. Bank, 92 App. Div. 529, 87 N. Y. Supp. 54:

"Where, however, the deposit is in joint names, and the intent appears to create the joint tenancy, its effect is to vest title to the whole fund in the survivor; and, under such circumstances, whether the book be delivered to the survivor or not, or whether he ever has had it in his possession during the lifetime of his joint owner, is not of consequence, as the intent existing to create the relation of a joint tenancy title vested in the survivor eo instanti upon the death of the joint owner, and no delivery of anything is necessary to effectuate such result."

in opening the account with the bank clearly constituted the moneys deposited therein and in controversy here the joint property of both of them and vested in the appellant as survivor of such joint ownership all interest therein and the sole right to withdraw them. The court found specially as to the execution of these papers, but found generally that Kennedy was the owner of the deposit at his death. This general finding is controlled by such special finding, and on it the trial court should have reached a conclusion in favor of the right of appellant to a recovery. Reaching this conclusion on the appeal from the judgment, it is unnecessary to consider the appeal of appellant from the order denying her motion for a new trial.

Our order is that the judgment and order denying a new trial be reversed; that the trial court set aside its conclusions of law and draw others in conformity with the conclusion reached in this opinion; and that thereon a judgment be entered in favor of appellant on her cross-complaint for the recovery from the defendant bank of the sum of $3,240 and interest thereon.

In re SERVAS' ESTATE.

FONTANA, Consul of Greece, v. HYNES, Public Administrator.
(S. F. 6911.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 9, 1915.)

1. TREATIES ⇐1—SETTLEMENTS OF ESTATES —POLICY OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT.

It is the policy of the federal government not to interfere by treaty with the laws of the states in the administration of estates of decedents.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Treaties, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. ⇐1.]

2. TREATIES ⇐8 — RIGHT TO ADMINISTRATION—"SO FAR AS THE LAWS OF EACH COUNTRY WILL PERMIT."

The phrase "so far as the laws of each country will permit," in the treaty between the United States and Sweden providing that, in the event of any citizen of either country dying in the territory of the other, the consul of the nation of which deceased may belong shall, "so far as the laws of each country will permit," and pending the appointment of an administrator, take charge of the property of decedent for his lawful heirs and creditors and have the right to be appointed as administrator, refers exclusively to the laws of the state within which the foreigner dies.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Treaties, Cent. Dig. § 8; Dec. Dig. ⇐3.]

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⇐24—CONSULS—APPOINTMENT OF ADMINISTRATOR —TREATY RIGHTS.

The quoted phrase in the treaty between the United States and a foreign country, which provides that, in the event of any citizen of either dying in the territory of the other, the consul of the nation of which the deceased may belong shall, "so far as the laws of each country will permit," and pending the appointment of an administrator, take charge of the property of the deceased and have the right to be appointed administrator, applies not only to the temporary possession which the foreign consul may take, but qualifies his right to be appointed administrator, and his right to be appointed administrator is subject to the statute declaring that, in the absence of next of kin entitled to inherit, the public administrator is entitled to letters of administration, and the foreign consul is only to administer in the absence of an application by the next of kin or the public administrator, and then only as to persons legally competent within Code Civ. Proc. § 1365, subd. 10.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Applications by Richard D. Fontana, as Consul of Greece, and by M. J. Hynes, as Public Administrator of City and County of San Francisco, for the appointment of administrator of John Servas, deceased, a subject of Greece. From order appointing M. J. Hynes, Public Administrator, as administrator, Richard D. Fontana, as Consul of Greece, appeals. Affirmed.

W. B. Clark and S. T. Hogevoil, both of San Francisco, for appellant. Ambrose Gherrini, of San Francisco, amicus curiae. Cullinan & Hickey, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. The deceased, John Servas, a subject of the kingdom of Greece, died intestate in the city and county of San Francisco on December 2, 1913, leaving estate in said city and county. His next of kin reside in Greece. Two applications for letters of administration on his estate were filed in the probate department of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, one by the appellant Richard D. Fontana, as consul of Greece at said city and county and other places, the other by the respondent, M. J. Hynes, as public administrator. The superior court held that the public administrator was entitled to letters of administration and the Greek consul appeals from the order.

The only question presented on this appeal is: Does the treaty between the United States and the kingdom of Greece give the appellant, Richard D. Fontana, as consul of Greece, a right paramount to that of all persons, including the public administrator, to letters of administration upon the estate of a subject of Greece dying intestate in this state. The Greek consul contends that it does. He does not rely on any express provision of the treaty between the United States and the kingdom of Greece giving this right, but upon a provision of the treaty between the United States and Sweden and the application of the "most favored nation" clause found in the treaty with Greece.

Article 11 of the treaty of November 19,

1902 (33 Stat. 2129) between the United States and the kingdom of Greece provides that:

"In all that relates to the administration and settlement of estates, the consular officers of the high contracting parties shall have the same rights and privileges as those accorded in the United States of America and Greece respectively, to the consular officers of the most favored nation."

Section 14 of the treaty of March 20, 1911 (37 Stat. 1487) between the United States and Sweden reads:

"In the event of any citizen of either of two contracting parties dying without will or testament, in the territory of the other contracting party, the consul general, consul, vice consul general, or the vice consul of the nation of which the deceased may belong, or, in his absence, the representative of such consul general, consul, vice consul general, or vice consul, shall, so far as the laws of each country will permit and pending the appointment of an administrator and until letters of administration have been granted, take charge of the property left by the deceased for the benefit of his lawful heirs and creditors, and, moreover, have the right to be appointed as administrator of such estate."

The claim of appellant is that under the provision of the treaty with Sweden the consular officers of that government are given an exclusive and paramount right to letters of administration on the estates of subjects of that country dying intestate in the United States, and that under the "most favored nation" clause in the treaty with Greece he, as consul of that kingdom, is entitled to the same right to administration in similar cases as is granted to consuls of Sweden.

It may be said, in approaching the consideration of this clause, as was said in Estate of Ghio, 157 Cal. 552, 108 Pac. 516, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 549, 137 Am. St. Rep. 145, which involved an interpretation of the provisions of a treaty between the United States and the Argentine Republic granting to consuls the right to "intervene * * * in the administration" of the estates of their deceased nationals "conformably with the laws of the country," that:

"The question presented would directly affect the right of administration upon the estates of all citizens of all the above-named countries residing in this state, of whom there is doubtless a large number. It is also of grave importance because its solution in favor of the appellant necessarily ascribes to the federal government the intent, by means of its treaty-making power, to materially abridge the autonomy of the several states and to interfere with and direct the state tribunals in proceedings affecting private property within their jurisdictions. It is obvious that such intent is not to be lightly imputed to the federal government, and that it cannot be allowed to exist except where the language used in a treaty plainly expresses it, or necessarily implies it."

[1] It is to be observed, also, that while in the present case the claim of the consul of Greece under the provision of the treaty with Sweden is against the public administrator, still, if the interpretation which the consul insists shall be given to the language of the treaty is sound, he is not only entitled to letters of administration in preference to the public administrator, but has an absolute paramount right to them as against the resident heirs of next of kin—the resident widow or children—of the deceased. To give the treaty provision the interpretation the Greek consul contends for is to ascribe to the federal government the intention not only to interfere with the generally accorded right of the states to provide for the distribution of estates of persons dying within their jurisdiction but also to interfere in a manner at variance with the generally recognized right of the resident kindred of a deceased to preference in the administration of his estate, and an interpretation which effects such a result should only follow when the language of the provision clearly requires it. It is a vexed question whether power resides in the federal government by treaty or otherwise to abridge the rights of the states over the administration of estates of persons dying and leaving property within their territorial jurisdiction; whether exclusive jurisdiction over that subject is not a right reserved to the states with which the federal government may not interfere. We mention this, not that we consider the question of such power involved here, but to point out that in the absence of any determination of that question by the Supreme Court of the United States it has been the declared policy of the federal government not to interfere by treaty with the laws of the states in the matter of the administration of estates of deceased persons. Mr. James G. Blaine, as Secretary of State, writing to Mr. Abbott in 1890 (For. Rel. of the U. S., 1890, p. 255) relative to a provision of the treaty of 1850 between our government and New Granada (now the United States of Colombia), which provided that consuls of the contracting parties might take possession of and sell the property of residents of their nation who might die in the country where the consul resides, said:

"The only exception to the exercise of this power is found in the provision that 'consuls shall not discharge this function in those states whose peculiar legislation may not allow it.' The reason and effect of these provisions are clear. In the United States, just as was formerly the case in Colombia, legislative power in respect to the settlement of estates is vested in the several states. It has always been controverted whether the exercise of this power could constitutionally be controlled by the government of the United States, either by law or treaty. In order to meet this difficulty it was provided by the present treaty that consuls should not exercise the function of settling estates in states where 'peculiar legislation' might not allow it. The term 'peculiar legislation' means simply legislation of particular political divisions of the country possessing legislative power with respect to the subject-matter. The term 'those states' was also obviously employed in reference to the same political divisions, and could not have been used in reference to the contracting governments."

Mr. Bayard when Secretary of State, in answer to the proposition that the consuls of the United States and of Brazil respectively be conceded the privilege of taking out letters of administration in certain cases, declared in 1889:

"Each state, under our system, has exclusive jurisdiction over the administration of property of persons, whether foreigners or citizens, dying within its limits."

Mr. Uhl, acting Secretary of State, in response to a note from the Italian ambassador proposing that the consuls of Italy in the United States be authorized to settle the estates of subjects of Italy dying in this country, wrote in 1894:

"In reply I beg to say that the United States has never entered into any treaty granting to the consuls of foreign countries in this country such authority as that you suggest should be given to the consuls of Italy. The entire question of the administration, settlement and distribution of decedents' estates in this country is under the control of the respective states. * * * These considerations compel me, though with much regret, to dissent from the opinion entertained by you that the Italian consuls should by international agreement be given the authority you demand for them."

The power of our consuls to take charge of the effects of American citizens dying abroad in their jurisdiction is confined to the case "where the laws of the country permit." U. S. Com. Stats. 1901, § 1709.

So that, in determining whether the language used in the treaty with Sweden does express a clear intent to grant an exclusive and paramount right of administration to consular officials of the estates of their deceased nationals, this declared policy of the federal government must be considered as an element in the solution of the question.

[2] It will be noted, on reading the language of the treaty provision with Sweden here involved, that it deals with dual rights to be exercised by a consular officer respecting the estate of his deceased national; it refers first to a right on his part to take charge of the property of said deceased pending the appointment of an administrator of his estate and until letters of administration are granted, and, secondly, provides that such consular officer shall have the right to be appointed as administrator of the estate. All this language in the paragraph is preceded by the words "as far as the laws of each country will permit." This language, "as far as the laws of each country will permit," can have but one meaning as far as the language refers to this country, namely, according to the laws of the particular state in the union within whose jurisdiction the national may have died. There is no federal law for the administration of estates of decedents, and necessarily the language used means as the laws of the several states will permit. Between the phrase referred to by Secretary Blaine "consuls shall not discharge these functions in those states where peculiar legislation does not allow it" found in the treaty with Colombia, the phrase "conformably with the laws of the country" in the treaty with the Argentine Republic involved in the Estate of Ghio, supra, and the phrase "as far as the laws of each country will permit," in the treaty with Sweden, there is no substantial difference. The construction given by our court to the phrase "laws of the country" in the Argentine treaty in the Ghio Case applies to the same phrase in the treaty provision here under consideration:

"* * * Whatever right was given, it was intended to be a right which should conform to the laws of the country, and that, in view of the well-known complex form of our government, the phrase 'laws of the country,' so far as the United States is concerned, means the local laws of administration and procedure of the respective states. If the right asserted is necessarily contrary to those laws, it cannot be said to conform to them."

[3] The real question here presented, however, is, not so much as to the meaning of the term "as far as the laws of each country will permit," because unquestionably that phrase refers to the laws of the states, but how that language is to be applied as employed in the paragraph of the treaty. The contention of the Greek consul is that the words "as far as the laws of each country will permit," as it immediately precedes that portion of the paragraph granting consular officials the right to take temporary possession of the effects of a deceased national until letters of administration have been granted, qualifies only that right; that it has no reference to the last portion of the paragraph; is not a qualification thereof, and that by that portion the "right to be appointed administrator" is given as an absolute paramount right whether the laws of the state permit it or not. On the other hand, in behalf of the public administrator, the claim is that the term "as far as the laws of each country will permit" qualifies the entire paragraph and affects all rights respecting administration conferred therein on consular officers.

We cannot adopt the construction urged on behalf of the Greek consul. According to that construction, while the treaty provision would not authorize the consul to take temporary charge of the property of his deceased national or be appointed special administrator of his estate unless the laws of the state would permit it, still that, whether the laws of the state permit it or not, he is under the same provision given an exclusive and paramount right to be appointed administrator. We perceive no warrant for the distinction. The entire paragraph deals with the right to the custody and charge of the estates of their deceased nationals by consuls, preliminary to general administration and general administration itself. The whole matter of administrative right is embraced in a single paragraph. Certainly no valid reason can be assigned why the federal government should have declared an intention only partially to interfere with the laws of the states respecting administration. Why an absolute paramount right to general administration should be conferred on the consul, anything in the state law to the contrary notwithstanding, but that as to matters ancillary to such general administration—taking charge of the property or special administration—he should not have an absolute right but only such as the laws of the state would permit. Naturally the paragraph would be expected to deal with the whole subject of administration, and the same right granted as to all branches of it whether special or general. We are satisfied that it does; that the phrase "as far as the laws of each country will permit" has reference to the entire subject of administration as mentioned in the paragraph, and qualifies not only the right given to a consular officer to take possession temporarily of the estate of a deceased national pending the grant of general letters of administration, but also the right itself to a grant of such letters. Taking into consideration the settled policy of the federal government as expressed by its Secretaries of State not to interfere with the states in the administration of estates within their jurisdiction and our own consular regulations on the subject, we think it would be an unwarranted and strained construction to put upon the treaty provision to hold that the language "as far as the laws of each country will permit," used in the paragraph of the treaty, applies only to the temporary possession which a foreign consul may take and does not qualify the right to be appointed administrator found in the last section in the same paragraph. In our opinion it qualifies both rights.

This same treaty provision with Sweden was before the Supreme Court of Minnesota for construction in the case of Austro-Hungarian Consul v. Westphal, 120 Minn. 122, 139 N. W. 300. In that case the right to letters of administration of the estate of a subject of Austria who had died in Minnesota was claimed by the Austro-Hungarian consul, his claim being based on the same provision of the treaty with Sweden involved here. There the court construed the provision adversely to the right claimed by the consul. In considering the language "as far as the laws of each country will permit" it was said:

"Grammatically it may well be contended that this qualifying clause applied only to the clause with which it is immediately coupled, thus leaving the right to administration without qualification. In view, however, of the presumption so aptly referred to by Mr. Justice Shaw in Estate of Ghio, supra, against any intention on the part of the federal government to invade, by treaty, the province of state law, in a matter so inherently local, as distinguished from national, and likewise from a consideration of the subject-matter and the provisions of this whole article, and especially the latter part, we have concluded that the right to appointment as administrator is conferred by such article upon the expressed condition that it can be claimed only 'as far as the laws of each country will permit.' It would certainly seem strange that the right to temporary possession and control until appointment of an administrator should thus be qualified, and the right to be appointed administrator be given in unqualified terms. The former is often no less important than the latter. Likewise, we cannot think, in the absence of clearly expressed intention so to do, that the federal government intended to take the matter of administration of the estate of foreigners entirely out of the control of the states."

This is the only decision of a court of final jurisdiction directly involving a consideration of this provision of the treaty with Sweden which has been called to our attention.

In support of the claim of the Greek consul, reliance is placed on some decisions of Surrogates' Courts in the state of New York and the language used by Mr. Justice Day of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Rocca v. Thompson, 223 U. S. 317, 32 Sup. Ct. 207, 56 L. Ed. 453. This last case was before the said Supreme Court on a writ of error to this court to review our decision in the Ghio Case, heretofore referred to. The treaty with Sweden was not involved in the Rocca or Ghio Cases. It was only the treaty with the Argentine Republic and involved solely the right of a consul to letters of administration on the estate of his deceased national under the provisions therein giving him the right to "intervene * * * in the administration" of the estates of his deceased nationals "conformably to the laws of the country." In pointing out that the Argentine treaty in conferring the right to "intervene" did not confer the right to administration, Mr. Justice Day, it is true, did say that, if it had been the intention under the Argentine treaty to confer the administration of estates of citizens of one country dying in another exclusively to the consul of the foreign nation, it would have been very easy to declare that purpose in unmistakable terms, and then, by way of illustration, referred to the provision in the treaty with Sweden under consideration here. But, as we have said, the treaty with Sweden was not under consideration or involved in the Rocca or Ghio Cases. The provision in that treaty was simply referred to by Mr. Justice Day as matter of comparison. No discussion or independent reasoning was applied by him in his opinion in the Rocca Case to the language "as far as the laws of each country will permit," found in the treaty with Sweden, and his language respecting the latter treaty was mere dictum. Undoubtedly, the provision in the treaty with Sweden does confer the right on a consul to letters of administration on the estates of his deceased nationals. It so expressly provides. But we cannot agree that it confers upon him any exclusive right to administration. Under the laws of this state, in the absence of next of kin entitled to inherit, the public administrator is entitled to letters of administration, and the Greek consul would only be entitled to administer by virtue of the treaty provision in the absence of an application for letters by the next of kin or the public administrator, and then only "as a person legally competent," within the meaning of subdivision 10 of section 1365 of the Code of Civil Procedure of this state. This is the only right which we think is intended to be conferred by the treaty provision; such a right as our law of administration permits and not a right contrary to it. A careful consideration of the particular provision satisfies us that this is the proper construction to be given to it notwithstanding that a contrary view may be expressed in the dictum in the Rocca Case. This language of Mr. Justice Day was relied on in the Minnesota case quoted above, and that court said of it:

"In the Rocca Case, supra, Mr. Justice Day seems to refer to the treaty with Sweden as expressly and clearly giving Swedish consuls an absolute right in the premises; but at most this was a mere dictum, and we cannot follow it without question."

As far as the decisions of the Surrogate Courts of New York are concerned, it is not necessary to cite or discuss them. They are not decisions of courts of last resort, and prior to the Rocca decision these courts were not in entire harmony. In none of them prior to the decision in the Rocca Case was the provision in the treaty with Sweden involved. Subsequent to the decision in the Rocca Case, this treaty provision with Sweden was invoked in the Surrogates' Courts, but in none of the decisions therein was any independent reasoning indulged in with reference to the terms of the treaty, nor any discussion of the meaning of the language "as far as the laws of each country will permit." They simply refer to the Rocca Case and sustain the right of the consul to administer on the authority of the language used by Mr. Justice Day in referring to the provision in the treaty with Sweden. Some of these surrogates' decisions were rendered subsequent to the decision in the Minnesota case but no reference is made to it.

In the case of Holmberg's Estate (D. C.) 193 Fed. 260, all that was held was that the consul of Sweden under this treaty provision was eligible to appointment as administrator under subdivision 10 of section 1365 of the Code of Civil Procedure heretofore referred to, and hence entitled under the federal law to have delivered to him the effects of a deceased national. The proceeding in that case was ex parte and involved no question of whether the consul was entitled to an exclusive and paramount right to administration.

Under these views, the order appealed from appointing the public administrator was correctly made by the superior court and is affirmed.

HANLON v. ESHLEMAN et al., State Railroad Commission. (L. A. 3888.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1915.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 189 — SALE OF PUBLIC UTILITY—ACTION OF RAILROAD COMMISSION—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

The action of the railroad commission in granting or refusing permission to carry out a contract of sale of a public water system under Public Utilities Act (St. 1911 [Ex. Sess.] p. 44) § 51a, providing for the disposition of property or franchise of public utility by authority of the commission, is merely permissive, and the power must be exercised alone for the protection of the rights of the public interested in the service.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 272; Dec. Dig. 189.]

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 189 — SALE OF PUBLIC UTILITY—ACTION OF RAILROAD COMMISSION—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Sales affected by Public Utilities Act, § 51a, providing that the property or franchise of a public utility can be disposed of only by authority of the railroad commission, are sales of property of a public utility necessary or useful in the performance of the duties to the public, and the owner of a utility may not transfer the same unless authorized by the commission; but, where the owner does not desire to sell though he has made a contract of sale, the commission will not compel him to do so, and the party complaining must seek his remedy in the courts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 272; Dec. Dig. 189.]

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 189 — SALE OF PUBLIC UTILITY—ACTION OF RAILROAD COMMISSION—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

A petition to the railroad commission for permission to carry out a contract for the sale of a public utility under Public Utilities Act, § 51a, must be made by the owner of the utility, and, where he declines to invoke the power of the commission, one having a contract for the purchase of the utility cannot resort to the commission for relief, and pending a proceeding before the commission the owner may show to the commission his unwillingness to carry out the contract of sale, and thereby terminate the authority of the commission.

In Bank. Petition for writ of mandate by John Hanlon against John M. Eshleman and others, as members of and constituting the State Railroad Commission. Alternative writ of mandate discharged, and proceeding dismissed.

Gurney E. Newlin, T. C. Gould, and W. B. Mathews, all of Los Angeles (Roy V. Reppy, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for petitioner. Max Thelen and Douglas Brookman, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. This is an original proceeding in mandamus, brought for the purpose of compelling the railroad commission to pass upon an application that permission be granted to P. T. Durfy, the owner of a water system in Los Angeles county, to sell such system to Hanlon, the petitioner, on terms and conditions stated in a contract between Durfy and Hanlon. An alternative writ was issued, and the railroad commission made its return thereto. There is no substantial dispute about the facts.

The power which the commission should, as is claimed, have exercised, is that given by section 51a of the Public Utilities Act, providing that:

"No railroad corporation * * * or water corporation shall henceforth sell, lease, assign, mortgage or otherwise dispose of or encumber the whole or any part of its railroad, street railroad, line, plant or system, necessary or useful in the performance of its duties to the public * * * without having first secured from the commission an order authorizing it so to do."

Durfy was the owner of a water system, known as the Sherman Waterworks, and was supplying water for domestic purposes to inhabitants of the town of Sherman and vicinity. He also owned about 190 acres of land, in Sherman and in Franklin Canyon, some of which was used for furnishing water to the water system. In March, 1913, Durfy entered into a contract with Hanlon for the sale by the former to the latter of the said water system and land. The contract was made before the public utilities act took effect, but it was evidently entered into in contemplation of that act, since it provides for a transfer of possession upon compliance with certain conditions, including "permission for transfer from railroad commission." Thereafter the city of Los Angeles sought to acquire a part of Durfy's lands for a reservoir site and right of way to be used in connection with the city's aqueduct project, then in course of construction.

In October, 1913, Hanlon filed with the commission a petition, setting forth his contract with Durfy, and praying for an order authorizing the sale of the water system by Durfy and its purchase by him. This proceeding was designated on the files of the commission as No. 941. Before it had been disposed of, Durfy filed a petition, the proceeding upon which became No. 942. Durfy's petition also set forth the contract with Hanlon. It then alleged that the city of Los Angeles desired to acquire Durfy's lands to complete its waterworks; that the Hanlon contract was contrary to the public interest; that it would be for the public interest if a sale to the city was authorized; and that the applicant would sell to Hanlon pursuant to his contract, if the commission should determine that course to be for the best public interest. The prayer of the petition was for such order "as shall be deemed by this commission for the best public interest in the premises."

Both proceedings were heard together. Before a decision had been reached, Durfy filed another petition in No. 942, alleging that he had executed a deed conveying to the city of Los Angeles a portion of his lands necessary for the location of reservoirs and conduits for the Los Angeles aqueduct, and praying for an order approving said conveyance. The commission dismissed the Hanlon application (No. 941) and, in the other proceeding (No. 942), authorized Durfy to sell to the city of Los Angeles the property described in his deed to the city. The present proceeding seeks to compel the commission to pass upon the application for authority to consummate the sale from Durfy to Hanlon pursuant to the contract between them.

[1, 2] The theory upon which the commission declined to act in proceeding No. 941, by either granting or refusing permission to carry out the Hanlon contract, was that the action of the commission, under section 51a, is merely permissive, and that "the application should be made by the owner of the public utility property, because the authority must run to such owner." This view, we think, is the correct one. The commission's power is to be exercised for the protection of the rights of the public interested in the service, and to that end alone. The sales, leases, or incumbrances affected by section 51a are dispositions of property of a public utility "necessary or useful in the performance of its duties to the public." The owner may not transfer such properties unless authorized by the commission. All that the commission is concerned with, therefore, is whether a proposed transfer will be injurious to the rights of the public. If not, the owner may be authorized to make the transfer. With the rights of an intending purchaser the commission has nothing to do. Nor has it power to determine whether a valid contract of sale exists, or whether either party has a legal claim against the other under such contract. These are questions for the courts, and not for the railroad commission, which is merely authorized to prevent an owner of a public utility from disposing of it where such disposition would not safeguard the interests of the public. If the owner does not desire to sell, the commission cannot compel him to do so. If, having contracted to sell, he refuses to comply with his contract, the commission is not empowered to determine that he should carry out his bargain. The provision that an owner may not sell without the consent of the commission implies that there must be an owner ready to sell and seeking authority so to do before the commission is called upon to act. We conclude therefore that the commission acted properly in determining the application of Hanlon (No. 941).

[3] It is urged, however, that in No. 942 Durfy, the owner, presented a petition which alleged the making of the contract with Hanlon, and asserted Durfy's willingness to carry out that contract, if the commission should give its approval. Here, it is claimed, was a submission of the question by the owner, and, since by such submission the commission obtained jurisdiction to decide whether the sale should be authorized, any person interested has a right to insist that the jurisdiction be exercised. We do not find it necessary to pass upon the merit of this position. While the matter was still before the commission, Durfy filed a second petition, in which he asked authority to sell a part of the property to the city of Los Angeles. There is some difference between the parties over the question whether this second petition was filed "in substitution" of the first. Be that as it may, the second petition asked for an order, which, if consummated, would make it impossible to carry out the contract with Hanlon. The entire property could not be conveyed to Hanlon, if a part of it had first been conveyed to the city. The second petition was therefore inconsistent with a continued willingness on Durfy's part to abide by his contract with Hanlon. Furthermore, the record, and particularly the opinion of the commission, show with sufficient clearness that Durfy's final position was that the sale to Hanlon should not be approved. At the conclusion of the proceeding, therefore, the commission had before it an owner who, having made a contract of sale, did not desire authority to consummate it, but urged that such authority ought not, in the public interest, to be granted. The only person having the right to invoke the action of the commission declined to invoke it, and the commission was therefore right, in No. 942 as in No. 941, in declining to pass upon the propriety of a sale to Hanlon.

The alternative writ of mandate is discharged and the proceeding dismissed.

In re GRAFF'S ESTATE. (S. F. 7033.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 9, 1915.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS $\S$ 17 — RIGHT UNDER STATUTE OF GUARDIAN OF GRANDCHILD OF DECEDENT TO ADMINISTER.

Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1365, establishes the order in which relatives of deceased persons are entitled to letters of administration, placing grandchildren in the sixth class, and the public administrator in the eighth class, and in the tenth class any legally competent person. Section 1369 provides in part that only an adult and a resident shall serve as administrator. Section 1368 provides that letters of administration may be granted to the guardian of any person who is entitled to administer and who is a minor or incompetent. Held, that the guardian of the estate of a nonresident minor grandchild of deceased is not entitled to letters of administration on the estate as against the public administrator.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Petitions for letters of administration on the estate of Esmerencia Sanchez Graff; one by William Rennie, guardian of the estate of Carmelita Muller, resident in Germany, and the other by M. J. Hynes, public administrator of the City and County of San Francisco. Rennie's petition was granted, and Hynes appeals. Reversed.

Cullinan & Hickey, of San Francisco, for appellant. Edmund Tauszky, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. The facts in this matter are admitted. Esmerencia Sanchez Graff died intestate leaving estate in the city and county of San Francisco. Her only heirs at law are two grandchildren, Hildegard Melsheimer, of the age of majority, residing in Belgium, and Carmelita Muller, a minor, residing in Germany. The respondent, William Rennie, is the guardian of the estate of Carmelita Muller. Two petitions for letters of administration of the estate of Esmerencia Sanchez Graff, deceased, were filed; one by said William Rennie, claiming the right to administer as guardian of the estate of Carmelita Muller, the other by M. J. Hynes, claiming the right to administer as public administrator of the city and county of San Francisco. The court granted the petition of William Rennie, and denied that of M. J. Hynes, and this appeal is taken by the latter.

The question presented for determination is solely whether the guardian of the estate of a nonresident minor, heir of a deceased person, is entitled to letters of administration. Section 1365 of the Code of Civil Procedure enumerates the persons who are entitled to letters of administration of the estate of a decedent and the preferential order in which the relatives of the deceased or other persons are entitled to administer, placing the grandchildren of the deceased in the sixth class, the public administrator in the eighth, and in the tenth and last class any person legally competent. Section 1369 provides that no person is competent or entitled to serve as administrator or administratrix who is, first, under the age of majority; second, not a bona fide resident of the state; third, convicted of an infamous crime; fourth, adjudged by the court incompetent to execute the duties of the trust by reason of drunkenness, improvidence, or want of understanding or integrity. Section 1368 provides that:

"If any person entitled to administration [italics ours] is a minor or an incompetent person, letters must be granted to his or her guardian, or any other person entitled to letters of administration, in the discretion of the court."

It is this last section which calls for particular consideration, but in determining who is entitled to administration of an estate all the sections of the Code which bear upon the matter are to be examined. Obviously these are the three sections—1365, 1368, and 1369—and they must all be taken together in determining what the law is on the subject.

Counsel for respondent asserts that the question of who is "entitled" to administer in this particular case is to be determined by a consideration of sections 1365 and 1368 only, but we perceive no reasonable ground advanced by him upon which this restriction should apply. Not only these two sections, but also section 1369, are involved in the inquiry. While section 1365 declares the general rule as to persons who are entitled to administration and the order of preference to be given to them in a grant of letters, this section is to be read in connection with section 1369, which declares that "no person is entitled to serve as administrator" who is subject to the disqualifications mentioned in this latter section. These two sections declare who are "entitled" to administer, and expressly provide that neither a minor, nonresident, convict, or incompetent shall be "competent or entitled" to serve as an administrator. When section 1368 authorizes letters of administration to be granted to his guardian "if any person entitled to administration is a minor or incompetent," the language "any person entitled to administration" has reference to such persons as are under the terms of sections 1365 and 1369, taken together, declared to be so entitled. It refers to those who, if they were not minors or incompetent persons, would otherwise be entitled to administer.

In the case at bar (leaving out for the moment any consideration of section 1365) there are two grounds upon both of which the ward herself would be disqualified from asserting a right to administer, namely, minority and nonresidence. If by a direct provision of law the disqualification of minority alone had been removed, she would still not be entitled to administration, because the other ground of disqualification—nonresidence—would still remain. Now the only ground of disqualification which is removed by section 1368 is the bar of minority, and that only to the extent that, if a minor has a guardian, the guardian shall be entitled to represent him and obtain a grant of administration, where the ward, save for his minority would be entitled to it. The section deals only with the bar of minority, and removes that. No other ground of disqualification affecting the right of the ward to administer is removed. The purpose of the statute is to give to the guardian the same right of administration as the ward would be entitled to if the bar of minority were removed from the latter. If a ward, were the bar of minority removed, would still not be entitled to administration on account of the further disqualification of nonresidence, then the guardian is not entitled to letters. Nonresidence of the ward stands as a fatal bar against both him and his guardian, because by the plain terms of section 1368 it is only the bar of nonage or incompetency of the ward that is removed. Nonresidence still remains as an absolute disqualification, affecting alike the ward and the guardian.

Under this view, the guardian of Carmelita

Muller was not entitled to letters of administration as against the appellant, the public administrator.

The order appealed from is therefore reversed.

NEAL PUB. CO. v. ROLPH, Mayor.

(S. F. 6985.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1915.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\S$ 244 — CONTRACT—PROVISION AS TO HOURS AND WAGES — "WORK."

Under charter of city and county of San Francisco, providing that every contract for work to be performed for the city and county shall provide that in its performance eight hours a day shall be the maximum hours of labor and $3 a day the minimum wage, and that any contract for work not complying with such provisions shall be void, a contract to furnish printed forms and blanks not containing such provisions was valid, since it was not a contract to perform "work" for the city, which implies that work is done to manufacture or prepare the merchandise necessary to be sold either personally or through employes, but a contract for the sale and delivery of goods and merchandise, whether such goods were already in existence ready for delivery or were to be manufactured to fill the contract.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\S$ 120 — CONTRACTS — PROVISION FOR UNION LABOR — HEAD OF DEPARTMENT.

A resolution of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, instructing heads of departments to patronize only printing establishments paying full wages, and as a guaranty thereof that all public printing should bear the label of the Printing Trades Council, was simply a direction to heads of departments and the printing committee, not binding on the board itself, or upon the mayor, simply required as a ministerial act to approve awards made by the board, in which action he was not the head of a department.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\S$ 111—RESOLUTION OF SUPERVISORS — CONFLICT WITH SUBSEQUENT CHARTER — "QUANTITY AND QUALITY CONSIDERED."

A resolution of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, instructing heads of departments to patronize only printing establishments paying full wages, and whose work bore the union label, was inconsistent with the subsequently enacted charter of San Francisco which continued in force only such resolutions as were not inconsistent therewith, and which provided for competitive bidding for contracts to furnish stationery and supplies and an award to the lowest bidder, and that the supervisors, when they believed that the prices were too high, or that bidders had combined to prevent competition, might reject any and all bids, and must award the contract to the lowest bidder, "quantity and quality being considered," which provision means only that, in determining the lowest bid, the board may consider quantity and quality.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Mandamus by the Neal Publishing Company against James Rolph, Jr., as Mayor of the City and County of San Francisco. Writ directed to issue, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Percy V. Long, City Atty., and J. F. English, Asst. City Atty., both of San Francisco (Geo. B. Benham, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant. W. B. Kollmeyer, of San Francisco, for respondent. J. C. Campbell, Weaver, Shelton & Levy, of San Francisco, amici curiæ.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. Hearing granted in the Supreme Court after decision by the District Court of Appeal, First District.

This is an appeal from a judgment directing that a writ of mandate issue on the application of the petitioner, commanding the appellant, as mayor of the city and county of San Francisco, to sign and execute a certain contract with the petitioner for the furnishing of certain supplies in the way of printed blanks and forms, for use in the several departments of the city government, which contract had been awarded to the petitioner as the successful bidder for such supplies.

There is no dispute as to the facts which, so far as material to the questions raised, are as follows: The board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, acting in conformity with the charter provision, regularly advertised for bids for the furnishing and delivery of a required quantity of specified printed forms and blanks for the use of the various offices and departments of the municipality for the fiscal year 1913-14. The petitioner was the lowest bidder for a considerable portion of these printed forms and blanks, and was regularly awarded the contract to furnish the same at specified prices by the board of supervisors. At the time of the bidding and award of the contract, the petitioner was conducting a union printing office, and was entitled to use and affix to its work the label of the Allied Printing Trades Council of the city and county of San Francisco. On the day following the award, however, the petitioner's right to the use of the label was taken away by the said trades council, which seems to have had the authority so to do; and the petitioner's establishment thereupon ceased to be a union office. Thereafter the mayor approved the resolution of the board of supervisors making said award to the petitioner, being at that time unaware that the petitioner's right to use the union label had been revoked; but, when a few days later a contract covering the items of petitioner's bid and award was presented to the mayor for his signature, he refused to sign and execute the same for two reasons: First, that at the time of the presentation of the contract for his signature the petitioner was not entitled to the use of the label hereinbefore referred to, as was claimed to be required by resolution No. 2458 (fourth series) of the board of supervisors; and, second, that the said contract so presented by the petitioner for his signature was not sufficient in form in this: That it did not contain the express provisions as to hours of labor and as to the minimum wages of laborers required by the terms of article 2, c. 3, § 1, of the charter. Thereupon the petitioner made its application for the issuance of a writ of mandate to compel the appellant herein, as mayor, to affix his signature to and to execute said contract, which application having been granted, the appellant prosecutes this appeal.

[1] The latter of these objections will be considered first. It is based on a provision at the end of section 1 of chapter 3 of article 2 of the charter of the city and county of San Francisco, which reads as follows:

"Every contract for work to be performed for the city and county must provide that in the performance of the contract eight hours shall be the maximum hours of labor on any calendar day, and that the minimum wages of laborers employed by the contractor in the execution of his contract shall be three dollars a day. Any contract for work to be performed for the city and county which does not comply with the provisions of this section shall be null and void, and any officer who shall sign the same shall be guilty of misfeasance, and upon proof of such misfeasance shall be removed from office."

The proposed contract did not contain this provision. The learned judge of the trial court held that this provision of the charter was not applicable to such a contract as this, and in this conclusion we are satisfied he was right. In his opinion delivered in deciding the case he said:

"In my opinion this contract does not provide for the doing of work for the city and county, within the meaning of this provision, but simply for the furnishing of certain finished articles of merchandise, which the contractor may have printed anywhere that he chooses. * * * These articles are the property of the contractor until delivered to the city, and do not seem to come within this provision. No work is done for the city. It is rather like the case of furnishing structural steel for the erection of a building. The contractor simply furnishes a certain chattel for the city in a completed state, and it is not work done for the city. In this instance it is the making and delivering to the city of this material. It is merely a chattel or merchandise delivered to the city." (The italics are ours.)

It is probably unnecessary to add anything to this. The proposed agreement was simply one for the sale and delivery of printed forms and blanks. A contractor undertaking to sell and deliver to a city completed chattels or merchandise does not thereby undertake to perform "work" for the city. The distinction, in this respect, between a contract or agreement for sale to a city and a contract for the doing of work therefor is so clear as hardly to require statement. In the one case, if any work on his part is done in the way of manufacture or preparing the chattels or merchandise necessary to be sold and delivered, either personally or through employes, it is work done solely for himself, and in no proper sense for the city. His contract with the city is simply for the sale and delivery of the finished article, and until the delivery the city has no interest whatever in the property. In the other case he contracts to furnish labor or personal service directly to the city, as where he agrees to construct a building for the city for a stipulated sum, or where he agrees to grade or otherwise improve a street belonging to the city, or to perform any other work for the city. Such contracts include the performance of work for the city, and the contractor must agree that "the minimum wages of laborers employed by" him in the execution of his contract shall be $3 a day, and that eight hours shall be the maximum hours of labor on any calendar day. No distinction material to the question under consideration can be made between a contract or agreement for the sale of such articles as are already in existence, ready for delivery, and one for the sale of articles that must be manufactured or created to meet the demands of the contract. In neither case is there undertaken any "work to be performed for the city and county." The work done is not public work.

In this connection the case of United States v. Olinger, 55 Fed. 959, a case decided in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Alabama, the defendant being charged with violating the act of Congress making it unlawful for any contractor to employ, upon any public work of the United States or the District of Columbia, laborers or mechanics for more than eight hours of any calendar day, is directly in point, as the following quotation will show:

"In my opinion, a statement of the facts is alone sufficient to show that the act of Congress, under which this prosecution is sought to be maintained, has no application to the case. * * * If a contractor, he was a contractor to furnish to the government of the United States two barges, to be delivered within 40 days from the making of the contract, which, if built according to certain specifications furnished him, were to be purchased by the government from him. The barges were his, and were to be his until the government purchased them. They might or might not become the property of the government. The transfer of title to them depended upon conditions which could not be determined until the barges were completed. It is clear to me that the building of the barges was in no sense a part of the public works; no more so than the mining of coal contracted to be furnished to the navy and marine service of the United States, according to specifications as to quantity and quality, or the furnishing under contract with the government of the United States of lumber and brick to be used in building quarters at Mt. Vernon barracks for officers or soldiers or any other public use, according to specifications as to kind, quantity, and quality. It would hardly be contended that the mining of such coal, the sawing of the lumber, or making the bricks, would be public works in contemplation of the act of Congress, or that the laborers engaged in the work of mining and in making the lumber and bricks were the laborers whose services and employment Congress has undertaken to regulate and limit. I fail to see any difference in principle in the cases mentioned and that under consideration."

A reading of the whole of the section of the charter in which the provision under consideration is contained makes it manifest that the provision is applicable only to contracts for work to be performed directly for the city and county, and that it was not intended to apply to any contract or agreement for the sale or furnishing of completed chattels.

[2] The other objection is based upon resolution No. 2458 (fourth series) of the board of supervisors, passed in the year 1899, before the going into effect of the present charter. It is as follows:

"Resolved, by the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, that as the city and county is required to pay full price for all printing, the heads of departments be instructed to patronize only printing establishments that pay full wages, and, as a guaranty thereof, all city and county printing hereafter shall bear the label or be done in offices entitled to the use of the label of the Allied Printing Trades Council of the city and county of San Francisco, as registered with the Secretary of the State of California.

"Resolved, that the printing committee be instructed to award all jobs for printing to union offices.

"Resolved, that all jobs for printing for this department and all jobs coming within the province of the printing committee shall be referred to at least two members of said committee before being awarded."

As to this resolution the learned judge of the trial court held that, so far as any action of the mayor here invoked is concerned, he is not the head of a department patronizing any printing establishment, but an officer who has simply approved an award made by the board of supervisors, and who is asked here to simply perform a ministerial duty not involving the exercise of any discretion whatever; that the resolution does not in terms apply to any action by the board of supervisors and is not binding on the board of supervisors, but was manifestly addressed only to heads of departments and to the printing committee; that the board of supervisors themselves, without actually formally repealing this resolution, can award any contract within their jurisdiction, regardless thereof. Without discussing the question whether the resolution was superseded by the charter, because inconsistent with the provision thereof in reference to letting such contracts to the lowest bidder, he concluded that the objection was not good, because the resolution is not applicable; the board of supervisors having itself awarded the contract.

We are of the opinion that the learned judge was right in his construction of the resolution. Manifestly, if we are to construe it according to its terms, it was simply a direction to heads of departments and the printing committee, and in no way binding on the board itself in awarding contracts. The single provision therein on which appellant relies, viz., "and as a guaranty thereof, all city and county printing shall hereafter bear the label," etc., is simply incidental to the specific instruction to heads of departments immediately preceding and, as it says, "a guaranty" of the observance of such instruction. It certainly cannot have the effect of invalidating an award of contract made by the board.

[3] But regardless of this, and construing the resolution as purporting to apply to the board of supervisors, it is clearly inconsistent with provisions of the charter of San Francisco, and must be held to be without force. It is needless to say that the provisions of the charter are paramount. Only ordinances, orders, and resolutions that were not inconsistent with the present charter were continued in force at the time of its adoption, so that if the resolution was valid under the old consolidation act, which is not at all clear, it died with the adoption of the new charter, if inconsistent therewith. The matter of stationery and supplies in the way of printed blanks is regulated by the provisions of sections 1 and 3 of chapter 3 of article 2 of the charter. A method of competitive bidding for contracts to furnish such supplies is provided, and the board of supervisors has no power to purchase or pay for the same, unless the provisions in regard thereto are strictly followed. Advertisement for bids for at least ten days, requiring the bidder to state the prices at which each article will be furnished as the same may be required, must be made, and as to printed blanks "the contract or contracts must be made with the lowest bidder offering adequate security; quantity and quality being considered." The only condition imposed by the charter is that no article furnished shall have been made in any prison. Subject only to the right of the supervisors, provided for by section 5 of the same charter, when they "believe that the prices bid are too high, or that bidders have combined to prevent competition, or that the public interest will be subserved thereby" to "reject any and all bids," they must award the contract to the lowest bidder offering adequate security; "quantity and quality being considered." They cannot impose additional conditions, and any ordinance or resolution purporting to do so is ineffectual. The inconsistency of the resolution relied on with these provisions of the charter is obvious. A feeble attempt is made in the briefs to show that the words "quantity and quality being considered" in the charter provision justify such a resolution, but we are utterly at a loss to see how they affect the question.

They mean simply that, in determining what is the lowest bid made, the board may take into consideration the "quantity and quality" of the supplies proposed to be furnished by the respective bidders.

The only authority cited by appellant in support of this resolution is the case of Stanley-Taylor Co. v. Supervisors, 135 Cal. 480, 67 Pac. 783, and it is most earnestly contended that this decision upholds the very resolution here involved, as a valid resolution. An examination of the opinion and of the record and briefs in that case shows that there is no basis for this claim. Even if we concede, as argued by learned counsel for appellant, that, in view of the pleadings in that proceeding, the matter could not logically be decided against the plaintiff therein without upholding the resolution, it nevertheless remains that neither the trial court, nor this court, which adopted the opinion of the trial court, said a word about such resolution, or decided the case upon the theory that it was valid. Even the learned city attorney, in seeking to uphold the decision of the trial court in that case, did not suggest the existence of any such resolution in his brief, but placed his claims for affirmance on entirely different grounds. The plaintiff there, claiming to have been the lowest bidder, sought a writ of mandate to compel the awarding to it by the board of supervisors of the contract. A demurrer to the petition was sustained. It appeared that the board had rejected all bids "for the reason that public policy demands such action be taken." It is true that it was further alleged in the petition that no ground of public interest or public policy existed that would warrant such a conclusion, and that the real reason for the rejection was that plaintiff had not been authorized to use the label of the Allied Printing Trades Council. It was held both by the trial court and by this court that in view of the provision of the charter that, when the supervisors "believe that the public interest will be subserved thereby, they may reject any and all bids and cause the notice for proposals to be readvertised," the supervisors were vested with absolute discretion to determine that matter; that it was intended that their discretion should be final, and that they were the final arbiters in the matter and their judgment conclusive; and that, where such is the case, a writ of mandate will not lie to direct or mold or otherwise interfere with such discretion. It was further said:

"In this instance, as appears from the resolution adopted and set out in the petition, the board of supervisors exercised its discretion. It determined a fact it was empowered by the charter to determine. That its determination was erroneous or its reasons bad is immaterial. It had jurisdiction to decide the matter, and, having such jurisdiction, its judgment cannot be controlled by the courts. How the public interest was subserved by rejecting the bid of plaintiff does not appear. Plaintiff was the lowest bidder, and had complied fully with the requirements of the charter, but that the board believed public policy would be subserved appears from the petition, and, under the law, action upon such belief is an exercise of discretion. The Legislature has committed the power of deciding to the defendant. 'When the supervisors believe,' is the language of the charter, 'that public interest will be subserved,' they may reject 'any and all bids.' Were the court to interfere, it might substitute its belief and its judgment for the belief and judgment of the board—a result that our system does not contemplate. The writ of mandate will lie to correct illegal but not capricious acts."

It is to be borne in mind that in the case at bar the board of supervisors did not reject the bid of plaintiff, but awarded the contract to it, and that the resolution of award was approved by the mayor. We think it is manifest from all this that there is nothing in either the opinion or record in that case to warrant the claim made for it by learned counsel for appellant, and we have given it this somewhat extended notice only because of the apparent earnestness of counsel in making such claim.

Our conclusion is that neither of the objections to the proposed contract made by the defendant is good.

The judgment is affirmed.

CITY OF LOS ANGELES v. DEHY, Judge.
(L. A. 3795.)

1. JUDGES ⇨42—DISQUALIFICATION—INTEREST.

A corporation was the owner of riparian rights on a lake fed by a river. A city, to obtain water therefrom, built an aqueduct running to the river above the lake. At a point about 30 miles above the aqueduct intake the city had obtained water rights, and it claimed the right to allow the water to flow on at that point and divert it lower down through its aqueduct. The water to which the city was entitled was diverted through a ditch, the intake of which was located on the land of the trial judge. The river flowed through his land below the intake of the ditch, and such land was riparian to the river. Held that, though a decree in an action between the corporation and the city would not be binding on him, the judge was disqualified to sit in a suit brought by the corporation to enjoin the city from diverting water through its aqueduct; for it was to the interest of the judge to diminish the amount of water the city was allowed to take.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Cent. Dig. §§ 190-200; Dec. Dig. ⇨42.]

2. JUDGMENT ⇨707—CONCLUSIVENESS—PERSONS CONCLUDED.

A judgment adjudicating water rights is conclusive only upon the parties thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1230; Dec. Dig. ⇨707.]

3. JUDGES ⇨55—DISQUALIFICATION—INTEREST.

Where a judge was disqualified to hear a suit involving the conflicting rights of riparian owners because he was also a riparian proprietor, and it was to his interest that petitioner be allowed to take little water, his disclaimer of any interest in the amount of water actually diverted by the petitioner or in the manner of its diversion, where the amount remained to be determined, did not remove the disqualification.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Cent. Dig. § 234; Dec. Dig. ¶55.]

In Bank. Application by the City of Los Angeles, a municipal corporation, for a writ of prohibition against Hon. William D. Dehy, as Judge of the Superior Court of Inyo County, instituted in the District Court of Appeal, where the writ was denied. On application of the petitioner the decision was vacated, and hearing ordered in the Supreme Court. Writ issued.

Albert Lee Stephens, W. B. Mathews, and S. B. Robinson, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner. Edward R. Eliassen and John S. Partridge, both of San Francisco, A. H. Swallow, of Bishop, and Olin Wellborn, Jr., and Alfred H. McAdoo, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is a proceeding in prohibition originally instituted in the District Court of Appeal of the Second District, where an alternative writ of prohibition was issued at the inception of the proceeding. A hearing being had, the petition for prohibition was denied. Within the time fixed by law, upon the application of petitioner, this decision was vacated and a hearing ordered in this court.

It is sought by this proceeding to obtain a writ prohibiting Judge Dehy from in any wise hearing, considering, or adjudicating any question of law or fact in or about an action pending in his court, wherein the Natural Soda Products Company, a corporation, is plaintiff, and petitioner here is defendant. The application is grounded on a claim of a disqualifying interest held by the respondent judge in the issues of the suit.

There is no dispute as to the material facts essential to a determination of the question presented to us for decision. Those facts sufficiently appear in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, as follows:

"The city of Los Angeles, the petitioner, has been for more than 8 years last past engaged in the construction of an aqueduct from a point on the Owens river, in the county of Inyo, to the city of Los Angeles, for the purpose of obtaining water for domestic and other uses. It has acquired the ownership of certain waters flowing in Owens river, which it has and is taking from said Owens river by means of canals and ditches. About 40 miles below the place of the aqueduct intake on the Owens river is Owens Lake. The Natural Soda Products Company claims to be the owner of lands riparian to the waters of the lake, and claims the right to use such waters for the purpose of extracting by evaporation the soda contained therein. In December, 1912, it brought suit in the superior court of Inyo county against petitioner, alleging that petitioner threatened to divert by means of its aqueduct, at points above Owens Lake, all of the waters of the river, and so prevent any of said waters from reaching the lake, in violation of the riparian rights of that plaintiff. It appears that at a distance of about 30 miles above the aqueduct intake the petitioner has obtained rights in water there being diverted from the river, and which is now used upon lands owned by petitioner some distance below the point of such diversion. The intake of this ditch, called the 'Collins Ditch,' is located on land owned by the respondent judge, and the ditch for more than 1,000 feet traverses his said land. The Owens river also flows through the land of respondent below the intake of the Collins ditch, and said land is riparian to the river. In the action brought by the Natural Soda Products Company, under the issues there made, the court would be called upon to determine what quantity of water the city of Los Angeles is entitled to divert from the Owens river. Involved in this determination necessarily would be the question as to the quantity of water acquired by the city under its Collins ditch rights. The water diverted through the Collins ditch at present does not flow back into the river (unless some part of it reaches that stream by percolation), but is used for irrigating purposes on land owned by the city. However, the petitioner city claims the right to cease to take water through the ditch mentioned, to restore it to the river, and take it out below the lands of respondent and at the point of the intake of the aqueduct, or other points on the river. As the matter of the total quantity of water entitled to be diverted by petitioner from the river, as before mentioned, is an issue in the suit pending before respondent judge, and as the lands of said judge are riparian to the river for some distance below the intake of the Collins ditch, the claim is made that respondent judge would be directly interested in determining the issues in that suit; that is, that the smaller the interest ascertained to be possessed by petitioner in the stream by reason of its Collins ditch rights, the greater remaining water there would be in the river to which riparian rights might be asserted by respondent. * * * It is essential that the stipulation of the parties as to the further facts be considered: In the written stipulation as filed it is recited, among other things, that all of the matters contained in paragraph one of the separate and further answer of the respondent judge 'are, and shall be, deemed to be admitted by the petitioner to be true.' That paragraph of said answer is here quoted, and it reads as follows: 'That respondent is the owner of a tract of land described in the petition herein; that said Owens river flows through said tract of land for a distance of more than one-quarter of a mile; that the intake of the said A. O. Collins ditch referred to in the petition herein, from said Owens river, is on said tract of land; that a large quantity of water has been diverted from said Owens river by means of said intake and ditch, and said water so diverted, for more than 25 years last past, has been conveyed through and by means of said ditch to lands below and distant from respondent's said tract of land; that none of the waters diverted from said Owens river through or by means of said A. O. Collins ditch are now, or ever have been, used on respondent's said tract of land; that respondent has not asserted or claimed, and does not assert or claim, any right or interest in or to said A. O. Collins ditch or to the waters diverted from said Owens river thereby; that respondent's said tract of land is about 30 miles above the intake of the aqueduct referred to in said petition, and is about 60 miles above the lands of the said Natural Soda Products Company, referred to in the complaint and answer in said action mentioned in said petition; that none of the waters diverted and used from said Owens river through or by means of said A. O. Collins ditch return to said Owens river on or above respondent's said tract of land; that respondent is informed and believes, and upon such information and belief alleges, that whether or not the owner or owners of said A. O. Collins ditch continue to divert and convey the waters to which such owner or owners is or are entitled through or by means of said A. O. Collins ditch, as heretofore, or permit and allow said waters to flow past the intake of said ditch down through said Owens river through and past respondent's said tract of land, and thence through said aqueduct, will not and cannot affect or change the use or value of said tract of land, or any portion thereof, nor affect respondent's interest in or to said tract of land."

[1, 2] We are clearly of the opinion that the facts stated show the disqualification of the learned trial judge to act in the case referred to. While doubtless he does not consider the outcome of that case of any great concern to himself or his property, and is satisfied that he could and would determine all the issues with absolute impartiality, it seems clear to us that he has a direct and immediate interest in at least one of the matters involved, an interest that is of pecuniary concern to him. The complaint in the action brought by the Natural Soda Products Company clearly puts the defendant city of Los Angeles to its proofs as to all of its water rights in the Owens river above the land of such company, including, of course, its alleged right of diversion now being exercised by means of the Collins ditch. As said by the District Court of Appeal:

"Under the issues there made the court would be called upon to determine what quantity of water the city of Los Angeles is entitled to divert from the Owens river. Involved in this determination necessarily would be the question as to the quantity of water acquired by the city under the Collins ditch rights."

It is obvious that it is to the interest of respondent as a riparian owner below the intake of the Collins ditch that the quantity of water to be awarded the city by virtue of its Collins ditch rights be as small as possible. The smaller the amount so awarded the greater will be the amount left to flow over his land, subject to his rights as a riparian owner. We think there can be no doubt that this shows an interest that should be held to disqualify him from acting. It is true that he is not a party to the action, and also that, not being a party, any judgment given therein would not be binding upon him in any subsequent litigation to which he may be a party. But, of course, under all the authorities, he may nevertheless have a disqualifying interest. We cannot but see that his interest in this question involved in the case of Natural Soda Products Company v. City of Los Angeles has all the requisites included in the definition of a disqualifying interest given by Chief Justice Shaw in Northampton v. Smith, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 390, quoted approvingly in Meyer v. San Diego, 121 Cal. 102, 108, 53 Pac. 434, 41 L. R. A. 762, 66 Am. St. Rep. 22. The case of North Bloomfield G. M. Co. v. Keyser, 58 Cal. 315, is directly in point and controlling here, notwithstanding the difference in the facts. As a riparian owner below the intake of the Collins ditch, respondent is directly concerned in the judgment to be rendered in this case. Applying what is said in the case just cited to the facts here: In so far as it is based on a determination of the question of the amount of water the city of Los Angeles is entitled to take by reason of its Collins ditch rights, the same judgment that limits the quantity that may be diverted by the city by virtue of those rights, for the benefit of the Natural Soda Products Company as a lower riparian owner, practically limits it also for his benefit as a riparian owner. In so far as it is based on such a determination, the very judgment that will protect the Natural Soda Products Company will protect him, as a riparian owner. It will be borne in mind that it is not suggested that he has parted with, or is estopped to assert, his rights as such owner. It appears to be conceded that his riparian rights are subject to whatever rights the city actually has by reason of the Collins ditch diversion. It is admitted by him that "a large quantity" of water has been diverted by means of said Collins ditch, but the amount remains to be determined in this action. As said in North Bloomfield G. M. Co. v. Keyser, supra:

"His interest, therefore, is not merely in the questions of law involved in the controversy, nor is it uncertain or remote; but it is a direct and immediate interest in the result of the action."

We find nothing in any of the subsequent decisions to detract from the weight to be accorded to that decision. The case of Lassen Irrigation Co. v. Superior Court and Frank A. Kelly, Judge, 151 Cal. 357, 90 Pac. 709, involved the question of the disqualification of the judge in an action for damages to which the judge was not a party, and in which the judgment could not directly or indirectly affect him or his property. It is clearly distinguishable.

[3] The opinion of the District Court of Appeal indicates that it would have concluded that the respondent was disqualified to act in this case, were it not for that portion of his answer which is admitted to be true, which we have heretofore quoted. We see nothing therein to affect the view we have already stated. What the quantity of water is that the city is entitled to by reason of the Collins ditch, or that has been diverted by means of said ditch, is a question that is in no way touched upon therein. It is stated that the respondent claims no right or interest in or to such water as has actually been diverted by means of said ditch, but what the quantity of that water was is a question to be determined in the action referred to. It is also stated that whether or not the owner or owners of the Collins ditch rights divert and convey the waters "to which he or they is or are entitled," through or by means of the ditch, as heretofore, or allow them to flow past the intake of such ditch through the river, through and past respondent's land, and thence through the aqueduct, will not and cannot affect or change the use or value of said land or any portion thereof, nor affect respondent's interest in or to said land. Regardless of the question of its correctness as matter of law, this statement means no more than that the respondent is not interested in the question how the water to which the city may be found to be entitled by reason of its Collins ditch rights shall be conveyed. We are satisfied that it must be held that petitioner is entitled to the relief sought herein.

Let a peremptory writ of prohibition issue as prayed in the petition.

We concur: SHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.; SLOSS, J.

MARTIN v. BECKER et al. CAREAGA v. SAME. HUBBARD v. BRINKER et al.
(S. F. 6122, 6106, 6300.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS $\hookrightarrow$ 213—TAKING MORTGAGE SECURITY—EFFECT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 726, providing that there can be but one action for the recovery of any debt secured by a mortgage, a materialman, taking a mortgage on real property of the contractor in terms covering the contractor's debts for the material, may retain and resort to the security of the mortgage lien, and at the same time claim and foreclose a materialman's lien.

2. MORTGAGES $\hookrightarrow$ 218—LIEN—WAIVER.

The provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 726, that there can be but one action for the recovery of any debt secured by a mortgage, being intended for the benefit of the primary debtor, is one which, under the express provision of Civ. Code, § 3513, he may waive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 568-585; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 218.]

3. MORTGAGES $\hookrightarrow$ 218—LIEN—ADDITIONAL SECURITY.

A mortgagee may take security other than and in addition to his mortgage security, and, if the contract with the giver of such security permits, may enforce his debt from such third party, without reference to the mortgagor and his security.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 568-585; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 218.]

4. MECHANICS' LIENS $\hookrightarrow$ 263—ENFORCEMENT—PARTIES—MORTGAGOR.

Where a materialman took a mortgage on the contractor's real property in terms covering the debts of the contractor for the material so furnished him, the mortgagor was not a necessary party to an action to foreclose the materialman's lien, since the action was not against the primary debtor, the mortgagor, and had no bearing upon the mortgage contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 471-481; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 263.]

5. LIENS $\hookrightarrow$ 16—NEW OR ADDITIONAL SECURITY—DESTRUCTION OF EXISTING LIEN—INSTANCES.

The taking of a new or additional security operates to destroy an existing lien, where the destruction is worked by virtue of a positive declaration of law, by the contract of the parties, by necessary intendment growing out of the agreement of the parties, in that the taking of the later security is inconsistent with the continued existence of the lien, and by the nature of the earlier or later security, as that it is concealed or undisclosed, giving rise to a situation where it would be fraudulent upon other claimants to permit the earlier lien to be held valid, whereupon equity interposes, and declares it to have been waived or lost by the taking of the later security, or in effect erects a bar to its enforcement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 7-16; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 16.]

6. MECHANICS' LIENS $\hookrightarrow$ 209—ENFORCEMENT OF LIEN—INCONSISTENT AGREEMENT.

Where a contract between the owner and the contractor requires the conclusion that they intended to waive the mechanic's lien, or where a contract is taken upon the same property, or where the payment to the lien claimant was to be made by a deed of part of the property, the contract is inconsistent with the right to a mechanic's lien, which will be denied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 383; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 209.]

7. VENDOR AND PURCHASER $\hookrightarrow$ 246—"VENDOR'S LIEN"—NATURE.

In English and American law a vendor's lien is exceptional in character, and is an importation from the civil law, which found its recognition through courts of chancery, on the equitable principle that the person who had secured the estate of another ought not in conscience to be allowed to keep it and not pay full consideration money, and that to enforce that payment it was just that the vendor should have a lien upon the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 615; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 246.]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Vendor's Lien.]

8. MECHANICS' LIENS $\hookrightarrow$ 212—VALIDITY—CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

In view of Const. art. 20, § 15, declaring a mechanic's lien in favor of parties furnishing labor or material, and the law requiring notice thereof by record, the mere circumstance that a mechanic or materialman has taken additional security for his debt should not destroy his lien; nor should the conclusion that the additional security was meant to be a substituted security for the right to the lien be reached, unless it plainly appears from the nature of the contract that the security was in fact substituted, and not cumulative; and no argument for the destruction of a mechanic's lien can be based on the theory of its secrecy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 393-397, 399; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 212.]

9. MECHANICS' LIENS $\hookrightarrow$ 215—LOSS OF LIEN—ATTACHMENT.

The right to enforce a mechanic's lien is not lost by the fact that the lienor, by levying an attachment upon other property, thereby obtains additional security.

10. MECHANICS' LIENS $\hookrightarrow$ 290—PROCEEDINGS TO ENFORCE—CONSTRUCTION OF FINDING.

In a proceeding to enforce a materialman's lien against a bankrupt contractor and the owners, a finding that the contractor paid $1,000 to a materialman on his general account, and not on account of material for a building for a certain owner, was a finding that the account for material furnished for that building was not reduced by any specific payment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 591-597; Dec. Dig. ⚡ 290.]

11. MECHANICS' LIENS ⚡ 310—PROCEEDINGS TO ENFORCE—COSTS.

In a materialman's suit to enforce his lien, consolidated with suit of another lien claimant, in which a party defendant, having no notice of the setting of the case for trial, and not appearing thereat, after adverse judgment moved for a new trial, the denial thereof, on the ground that the total amount due it had been deposited in court by one of the plaintiffs in full satisfaction of its claim, was irregular, in that such party, entitled to prevail in the action, was not allowed to file a cost bill, and to establish the amount to which it was entitled in addition to its claim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 651-654; Dec. Dig. ⚡ 310.]

12. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡ 411—ALTERNATIVE METHOD OF APPEAL—NOTICE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 941b, providing that, as an alternative method of appeal, the appellant may file with the clerk of the court below a notice stating that he appeals, identifying the judgment with reasonable certainty, and requiring notice of appeal to be filed within 60 days from notice of entry of judgment, and where no notice of entry is given, within 6 months after entry of judgment, a notice filed with the clerk 31 days after judgment was sufficient.

S. F. 6300:

Will M. Beggs and R. C. McCormich, both of San Jose, for appellant Hubbard. A. H. Jarman, of San Francisco, for appellant Home Union. Edwin H. Williams, of San Francisco, for respondent Hart. Rogers, Bloomingdale & Free, of San Jose, for respondent Brinker.

HENSHAW, J. The defendant Becker was a building contractor who became bankrupt. At the time of his bankruptcy he had completed for Mrs. Careaga and for Mr. Martin each a separate dwelling house under a valid statutory contract. The final payments becoming due, Mrs. Careaga and Mr. Martin deposited the amounts of their payments in court with appropriate averments, asking the court to call in the lien claimants to the funds, apportion the money, and dismiss plaintiffs, respectively, without further costs or charge. In the case of Hubbard v. Brinker, Becker, because of his bankruptcy, abandoned the incomplete building which he was constructing for Brinker, and Hubbard and Hart sued Brinker to establish liens for materials furnished. Their cases were consolidated. Hubbard admittedly had furnished material to Becker, which material had been used in the construction of the buildings. No question arises over this, nor over the validity of his lien claims, in the matter of form or substantive proof to sustain them. But Hubbard had taken a mortgage upon real property owned by Becker, the contractor, which mortgage by its terms covered the debts of Becker growing out of these materials so furnished him. Because of the existence of this mortgage security the trial court decided against the validity of his lien claims for materials furnished, and decreed that he could not participate in the funds admittedly due to the holders of valid liens. Hubbard's appeals in all three of the above-entitled cases present this as the principal question for determination. What is here said upon it is therefore applicable to all the cases. Certain points of minor significance, arising separately in the different cases, will receive their separate consideration.

The principal inquiry has been thus stated: "May the defendant Hubbard, as the creditor of the defendant Becker, retain and resort to the security of a mortgage lien, and at the same time claim and foreclose a materialman's lien for the satisfaction of an indebtedness which is found to be clearly covered by both liens?"

The trial court and the Court of Appeal made answer: (1) That by virtue of section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure this could not be done. That section declares that "There can be but one action for the recovery of any debt * * * secured by mortgage upon real or personal property." (2) That, aside from the consideration of section 726, the fact that Hubbard had taken security from Becker for the latter's debt, even though that security was in the form of a mortgage upon real property of Becker, operated to annul the former's right to his materialman's liens.

[1, 2] 1. At the outset it is important to note what changes the Legislature made in the common-law rule, and therefore what it sought to accomplish in the declaration contained in section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure. At common law a mortgage was a conveyance of title upon condition subsequent. That title became absolute and indefeasible upon breach of the condition. No right of redemption existed. The sole recourse was a resort to equity for relief against the forfeiture. Moreover, the mortgagee had his right to go to law to recover the amount of the mortgage debt and to enforce his recovery by imprisonment of the debtor. Nor did the doing of any of these acts impair his mortgage security. Under our statutory system the first radical change was to declare that a mortgage conveyed no title, but gave only the security of a lien upon the property. Civ. Code, §§ 2888, 2920, 2923. This radical change having been established, section 726 became the expression of a natural corollary to that change. To simplify procedure and to relieve the mortgagor (who was usually thought not always the primary debtor), it was declared that but one action should be brought to enforce the mortgage debt. The mortgaged property thus became the primary fund, which must first be exhausted before any other remedy or relief could be had against the primary debtor. If this primary fund should prove insufficient to extinguish the debt, then in the same action a deficiency judgment could be docketed against the primary debtor. No longer could the primary debtor be pursued in an action which did not take into recognition the existence of the mortgage security. Otherwise it would be true to-day that if the primary debtor had given a mortgage upon his own property, and subsequently had sold it subject to the mortgage, the mortgagee could enforce the debt against the primary debtor without recourse to the mortgaged property, leaving the primary debtor to his chance of recovery over against his vendee. Or, again, the mortgage might have been given as security by one other than the primary debtor and with the understanding between the mortgagor and the primary debtor that the mortgaged property should first be exhausted in payment of the debt. If our existing rule did not obtain, the mortgagee could in like manner pursue the primary debtor without reference to the security.

Every reason for the existence of the rule discloses and declares that it was designed for the benefit of the primary debtor, and, indeed, it is so decided. Ould v. Stoddard, 54 Cal. 613; Toby v. Oregon Pac. R. R. Co., 98 Cal. 494, 33 Pac. 550; Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Thornton, 109 Cal. 427, 42 Pac. 447, 50 Am. St. Rep. 52; Commercial Bank of Santa Ana v. Kershner, 120 Cal. 495, 52 Pac. 848; Otto v. Long, 127 Cal. 471, 59 Pac. 895; Hellyer v. Baldwin, 53 N. J. Law, 141, 20 Atl. 1080. This provision, then, being thus clearly designed for the protection of the primary debtor, is one which he not only can waive (Civ. Code, § 3513; Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Thornton, supra; Hellyer v. Baldwin, supra), but, still further, is one which has no applicability whatsoever unless the action which is brought directly affects his rights under the mortgage contract. And by that we mean this: That the law never contemplated that because a man had taken a mortgage he could not take other independent security for his debt, and, if the contract for such security permitted it, enforce such contract without reference to the mortgage debt. Indeed, our books are full of cases where the doing of this precise thing has been uniformly countenanced and upheld, notwithstanding the fact that plaintiff's success in the action has resulted in the payment of his debt secured by mortgage, without recourse or reference to the mortgage security. Thus in Knowles v. Sandercock, 107 Cal. 629, 40 Pac. 1047, the action was brought against the stockholders for a liability of the corporation, which corporate liability was evidenced by its note secured by mortgage. It was urged that the mortgagee must first exhaust the mortgage security in the "one action" contemplated by section 726. This court said:

"The note was due, but the mortgage had not been foreclosed. This fact constitutes no defense for defendants. They are not affected by the fact that because of the mortgage only an action to foreclose could be brought against the corporation. The mortgage only affects the remedy against the mortgagor—the corporation. The liability of the stockholder, as has already been said, is primary in the sense that he is not a surety. He is not injured nor is he benefited by the fact that the corporation has given security. Sonoma Valley Bank v. Hill, 59 Cal. 107."

We have quoted this language because it succinctly declares the principle vital to this consideration. "The mortgage only affects the remedy against the mortgagor" or primary debtor. Again, in Adams v. Wallace, 119 Cal. 67, 51 Pac. 14, the action was against an independent guarantor of a debt secured by mortgage, and it was held that the action could be maintained and the payment of the debt enforced without regard to the existence of the mortgage, because the action was upon an independent contract to pay the debt upon default of the principal debtor. Identically the same proposition was decided in Carver v. Steele, 116 Cal. 116, 47 Pac. 1007, 58 Am. St. Rep. 156, and Kinsel v. Ballou, 151 Cal. 754, 91 Pac. 620, where action was brought against the guarantors by indorsement of a promissory note secured by mortgage. Yet it is to be noted that in each one of these cases the result was the payment of the debt secured by mortgage without recourse to the mortgage security.

[3] Why was this permitted to be done? The answer is found in what has already been said: That these other actions, not being directed against the primary debtor entitled to rely on the mortgage security, but being based upon independent contracts, were not within the spirit or meaning of section 726. The primary debtor or mortgagor alone, or he holding under or in privity with him, may invoke section 726 for his own protection. It never has been, nor has it ever been declared to be, the law in this state that a mortgagee may not take security other and in addition to his mortgage security, and, if the contract with the giver of such security permits, may not enforce his debt from this third party, without reference to the mortgagor and his security. Indeed, in Commercial Bank of Santa Ana v. Kershner, supra, one of the cases upon which respondents rely, it is said that:

"A debt may be secured by pledge, mechanic's lien, judgment lien, attachment, or otherwise, and yet the security may be reinforced by a mortgage on the same or other property."

We may now with propriety turn to the cases which respondents cite as supporting their contention, for the purpose of determining whether any of the previous utterances of this court conflict with the views here expressed.

The first of these is Ould v. Stoddard, 54 Cal. 613. Defendant had given to plaintiff a note secured by mortgage. In a foreign jurisdiction—the state of Ohio—plaintiff had brought a personal action upon the note and had secured a personal judgment against him. No part of the amount of the judgment so recovered had been paid. Thereafter in this state the plaintiff brought his action to foreclose the mortgage. This court, quoting section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure, declared that the plaintiff had brought his "one action," that in that one action he had not sought to enforce his security, and that he had therefore waived it. Certainly nothing in this case militates against the propositions which we have enunciated, but to the contrary it pronounces, in accordance with what we have said, that the section was framed for the benefit of the mortgagor to relieve him from harassment in repeated litigations.

The next case is Bartlett v. Cottle, 63 Cal. 366. Here a promissory note was given, secured by mortgage. The payee of the note, the mortgagee, brought his action against the maker; the complaint being silent as to the mortgage. The existence of the mortgage was set forth as matter in abatement. The trial court held the security to be valueless, and therefore the holder of the note to be entitled to prosecute his action without reference to the mortgage, upon the theory, now well settled, that if the mortgage is valueless there is no security to be enforced. Otto v. Long, 127 Cal. 471, 59 Pac. 895. The court held that "on an examination of the testimony we are of opinion that the security was not without value," and therefore reversed the judgment, in effect telling the plaintiff that he must exhaust the security of the mortgage before obtaining a personal judgment against the mortgagor.

Hall v. Arnott, 80 Cal. 348, 22 Pac. 200, was an effort to foreclose a mortgage in the form of a deed absolute. The action was between the successors in interest of the original parties. It was held that through laches, by virtue of their failure to include or to have included this mortgage debt in an earlier action in foreclosure, the holders of the security had lost their right to the lien, and that, the mortgage being in form a deed absolute, the owners of the property were in turn entitled to a decree removing the apparent cloud upon their title. This does not amount to a declaration that the parties may not have more than one form and kind of security, but merely to a declaration that through their own neglect, growing out of the peculiar circumstances of the case, they had lost their right to enforce one of their securities.

The next case is Stockton Savings & Loan Society v. Harrold et al., 127 Cal. 612, 60 Pac. 165. This case is substantially the converse of the one last discussed. Defendant McKee held security by way of mortgages. He, a cross-complainant, set up these mortgages. The trial court struck out a portion of his cross-complaint, preventing the foreclosure in the action before it of a lien upon a large tract of land. This court held that the action of the trial court was improper, that if the defendant were to sue in his own independent action of foreclosure he would lose the lien of that particular mortgage if it were omitted from the foreclosure, and by virtue of the fact that he is brought in as a defendant and a cross-complainant he cannot be compelled to lose part of his security when thus forced to foreclose his mortgage.

Commercial Bank of Santa Ana v. Kershner, 120 Cal. 495, 52 Pac. 848, presented the following facts: Defendants were indebted to plaintiff upon their promissory notes. Plaintiff began its action, and attached certain real property of defendants. Defendants then gave a mortgage upon the property. This mortgage covered property not under attachment, as well as the property under attachment. Plaintiff proceeded to judgment in its attachment suit, and sold out the interest of the defendants in the property under attachment. There remained a deficiency judgment. Plaintiff then commenced its action in foreclosure, and, all these matters having been set up in the complaint, defendants' demurrer to that complaint was sustained. This court held that the taking of the mortgage under these circumstances was the creation of a new contract between the parties, that the debt did not become due under the terms of the mortgage until one year after its creation, that by reason of this novation plaintiff had no right to prosecute its attachment suit to judgment, but that the mere fact that the defendants in the attachment suit interposed no objection to plaintiff so doing did not estop them from subsequently raising the objection that plaintiff's conduct, under the authority of Ould v. Stoddard, supra, amounted to a waiver of the mortgage security.

It is important to note that these actions were between the principals to the mortgage contract, and that the parties objecting were the mortgagors themselves, who had suffered one action for the collection of their debt.

[4] This concludes the review of the authorities cited by respondents, and it is manifest that in them there is no decision, and indeed no utterance, in contrariety to the propositions we have enunciated, for here the action is not against the primary debtor—the mortgagor—and has no relation to nor bearing upon the mortgage contract. The mortgagor in this case was not even a necessary party to the action seeking to foreclose the materialman's lien. Russ, etc., Co. v. Garrettson, 87 Cal. 589, 25 Pac. 747; Green v. Clifford, 94 Cal. 49, 29 Pac. 331; Yancy v. Morton, 94 Cal. 558, 29 Pac. 1111.

[5] 2. It is sometimes, but not always, nor even usually, true that the taking of new or additional security operates to destroy an existing lien. It so operates only in four classes of cases: (1) Where the destruction is worked by virtue of a positive declaration of law; (2) where it is worked by the agreement and contract of the parties; (3) where it is worked by necessary intentment growing out of the agreement of the parties, in that the taking of the later security is inconsistent with the continued existence thereafter of the lien; and, finally, (4) where the nature of the earlier or later security, as that it is concealed or undisclosed, gives rise to a situation where it would partake of fraud upon other claimants to permit the earlier lien to be held valid, whereupon equity interposes and declares it to have been waived or lost by the taking of the later security, or—what is in effect the same—erects a bar to its enforcement. To one or another of these classes all cases decreeing the destruction of an earlier lien by virtue of the taking of later security are referable. Thus in Barrows v. Baughman, 9 Mich. 213, the builder's agreement with the owner was that he should take a mortgage upon the property in payment of his debt. The Supreme Court of Michigan held that under their lien law, by virtue of his acceptance of the mortgage upon the property, the builder had waived his right to a mechanic's lien, and also "that the statute creates no lien where the parties by their contract provide for a different security upon the same land for the same debt which the lien would otherwise secure." In this case the court declared for the nonexistence of the mechanic's lien law upon two of the grounds above enunciated—one, that by operation of law a lien was denied in such cases; the other, that by the intentment of the parties the existence of the lien was inconsistent with the taking of the mortgage upon the same land for the same debt, or, in other words, that the mortgage was substituted for the lien. To the same effect is Gorman v. Sagner, 22 Mo. 137. There the plaintiff, who had a mechanic's lien upon certain property, accepted from the owner promissory notes payable months after date and a deed of trust to the property impressed with the mechanic's lien. The Supreme Court of Missouri discussed and analyzed this later contract of mortgage, and held that by its very terms it was inconsistent with the continued existence of the mechanic's lien, which must therefore be considered to have been waived by the intentment of the parties. In Willison v. Douglas, 66 Md. 99, 6 Atl. 530, the mechanic's lien law of that state provided that the lien should not be considered as waived "by * * * receiving notes or other securities, unless the same be received as payment, or the lien be expressly waived." It was held that the taking of a mortgage—a contract under seal—upon the same property was inconsistent with the operation of the lien, and that the lien was therefore "expressly waived by the legal effect of such express contract." Weaver v. Demuth, 40 N. J. Law, 238, held that the agreement by the builder to accept a mortgage upon the property was inconsistent with the theory of the existence of a statutory mechanic's lien, basing the decision squarely upon Barrows v. Baughman, supra. And, indeed, it may be here added that none of the cases pretends to deny the equitable principle first declared in Crawshaw v. Homfray, 4 Barn. & All. 53, to the effect that "unless the special agreement be inconsistent with the right of lien it will not destroy it."

The same principle is enunciated in Peyroux v. Howard, 7 Pet. 324, 8 L. Ed. 700, and announced and affirmed by every court which has been called upon to consider the question. Grant v. Strong, 18 Wall. 623, 21 L. Ed. 859, was a case in which Strong had filed his bill in equity against Grant to establish a mechanic's lien. Strong was to do the brickwork upon certain houses which Grant was building, and by agreement was to take one of the houses in payment for his work. A conveyance was made by Grant of the lot which Strong was to have, and placed in escrow, to be delivered to Strong when his work was completed. Differences arose between the parties during the progress of the work, and a new agreement was entered into. The new agreement provided that the work was to be paid for by Grant's negotiable note, payable within three months from the date of the completion of the work, and when so paid for the escrow conveyance by Grant to Strong should be canceled and given up. A later agreement declared that the work had been done, the promissory note given, and the escrow declared null and void. The trial court decreed Strong a lien. The Supreme Court of the United States reviewed the contracts between the parties, and declared that it was clear that under the original agreement Strong was not to be paid in money at all, but by the lot, deed to which was placed in escrow, that under these circumstances no lien could accrue, that under the second contract Strong did not give up his security, but retained it and relied on it, that all of this was inconsistent with the existence of a mechanic's lien, and saying:

"The question whether a lien is obtained, or is displaced when it once attaches, is largely a matter of intention to be inferred from the acts of the parties and all the surrounding circumstances."

It concludes as follows:

"In short, we are of opinion that these agreements show an acceptance and reliance by Strong on another and very different security for the payment for his work, inconsistent with the idea of a mechanic's lien, and that no such lien ever attached in the case."

McMurray v. Brown, 91 U. S. 257, 23 L. Ed. 321, was an action to enforce a mechanic's lien given under the provisions of the federal statute. The trial court decreed the lien. The contract between the parties provided that the owner, by way of payment for the work done by plaintiff, would convey to him a certain lot at a stipulated price. The owner—the defendant—failed to make the conveyance, and insisted that by virtue of the special contract plaintiff's remedy was at law for breach of the contract. The Supreme Court of the United States in the course of its discussion declared:

"Cases may arise, undoubtedly, where the rights and responsibilities of the parties are so completely defined by the contract that neither party is at liberty to claim anything beyond the terms of the contract, if the contract is in all respects fulfilled. Consequently lien laws do not in general create a lien in favor of a materialman who has accepted in full a different security at the time the contract or agreement was made. Examples of the kind, such as a trust deed or mortgage, may be mentioned, which are regarded as a species of security inconsistent with the idea of a mechanic's lien upon the same land for the same debt. Grant v. Strong, 18 Wall. 623 [21 L. Ed. 859]. Phill. on Mech. Liens, § 117. Such a security is regarded as inconsistent with the intent of the parties that a mechanic's lien should be claimed by the party furnishing building materials, as the owner may obligate himself to pay in money, land, or any specific article of property; but, if he does not fulfill his contract by paying in the manner stipulated, the mechanic is entitled to his lien. Reiley v. Ward, 4 G. Greene [Iowa] 22."

[6] So far as this examination of authorities has proceeded, we find that the actions are between the contractor and the owner of the property upon which the work was done, to enforce the lien upon that property, and we find that the adjudications are merely to the effect that the courts will consider each of these contracts according to its facts, and that when the contract between the parties is such as to force the conclusion that the intent of the parties was to waive the mechanic's lien, as where a mortgage is taken upon the same property, or as where the payment to the lien claimant was to be made by a deed of part of the same property, it is held that these contracts are inconsistent with the conception of a right to a mechanic's lien. In no one of them, however, is the denial of the right to the mechanic's lien based upon the mere fact that the lien claimant has taken security other than that afforded by his lien. The decision in each case is based upon findings that the nature of the contract under which the security is taken forces the conclusion that there was a waiver of the right to the lien. Of these cases no criticism may be made, and with them no fault may be found.

We come now, however, to consider another class of cases laying down a much broader rule, to the effect that the taking of any other security by the lien claimant is a waiver of his right to his mechanic's or materialman's lien. Thus Trullinger v. Kofoed, 7 Or. 228, 33 Am. Rep. 708, was an action by plaintiff to enforce a materialman's lien. Defendant Runey had likewise furnished material used upon the building, and had taken the promissory note of the owner secured by mortgage on the property. He likewise sued to enforce his materialman's lien. The principal question discussed was whether the taking of the mortgage by Runey was a waiver of his right to a materialman's lien. It was held that Runey's right to a lien was waived by the taking of the mortgage upon the same property, the court saying:

"We can see no reason for taking the mortgage, unless he contemplated indulgence to Kofoed beyond the time when he would have to enforce his lien. He might have taken the note in order to have the amount of the debt fixed and interest secured; but the mortgage was no better security than the lien during the time that the lien would continue. It is a rule that where a vendor takes a mortgage on the property sold he waives his vendor's lien, and it has been so held by this court. [Pease v. Kelly] 3 Or. 417; 6 Ves. 752; Lagow v. Badollet, 1 Blackf. [Ind.] 416 [12 Am. Dec. 258]; Gilman v. Brown, 1 Mason, 191 [Fed. Cas. No. 5,441]; Williams v. Roberts, 5 Ohio, 35; 4 Kent. Com. 154; Houck on Liens, § 202. And there seems to be no difference in principle between vendors' liens and the liens of mechanics, and it has been so held in many cases. Kinzev v. Thomas, 28 Ill. 505; Gardner v. Hall, 29 Ill. 277; Gorman v. Sagner, 22 Mo. 137; Borrows v. Baughman, 9 Mich. 213; Phillips on Liens, § 280, and cases there cited. From these numerous authorities the rule seems to be well settled that where a mechanic takes a mortgage, either on the same property to which the lien attaches or on other property, he thereby waives his lien, and the reason is, as observed in many of the cases cited, that subsequent lienholders and purchasers have a right to rely on the record, and should be protected against secret liens."

Of the first ground of decision in the Oregon case no criticism can be made. It is the familiar finding of an agreement between the parties whereby a mortgage is taken as substituted security for the lien. But our review of the cases heretofore made shows that neither Gorman v. Sagner, supra, nor Borrows v. Baughman, supra, relied on by the Oregon court, supports the broad declaration that where a mechanic or materialman takes security on other property he waives his lien. Gorman v. Sagner and Borrows v. Baughman were both cases where the materialman had taken a mortgage upon the same property, and it was held, as so repeatedly declared, that both by operation of law and by the intent of the parties the contract of mortgage upon the same property was a waiver of the right to the statutory lien. But one court alone sustains this broad declaration of the Oregon case, and that is the Supreme Court of Illinois. We find that court saying (Kankakee Coal Co. v. Crane Bros., 138 Ill. 207, 27 N. E. 935):

"We have held that 'taking other security, either on property or that of individuals not parties to the transaction, would have the effect to discharge the lien.' Brady v. Anderson, 24 Ill. 110; Kinzey v. Thomas, 28 Ill. 502; Gardner v. Hall, 29 Ill. 277; Croskey v. Corey, 48 Ill. 442; Clark v. Moore, 64 Ill. 273."

We find the following declaration in Brady v. Anderson, 24 Ill. 111, without the citation of any authority in its support:

"While the taking of other security, either on the property or that of individuals, not parties to the transaction, would have the effect to discharge the premises from the lien, yet the mere settlement and adjustment of accounts, * * * is in no sense a change of security, or security of any description."

This unsupported declaration seems to be founded upon an earlier discussion had in that same case, to the effect that the mechanic's lien awarded by statute is in derogation of the common law and is secret in its nature, since no notice of it is required to be filed for record, and therefore it should receive a strict construction. This case was followed by Kinzey v. Thomas, 28 Ill. 502, where the lien claimant had taken other security in the nature of a chattel mortgage. The Supreme Court of Illinois referred to its language above quoted in Brady v. Anderson, and as an additional reason for its holding declared as follows:

"The settled doctrine is that a vendor of land waives his lien wherever he takes distinct security for the payment of the purchase money, such as a deposit of stock, a pledge of goods, a mortgage on real or personal estate, or the responsibility of a third person; and we can see no difference in principle between such a lien and the lien of the materialman. Both are secret liens. Conover v. Warren, 1 Gilm. [Ill.] 501 [41 Am. Dec. 196], and cases there cited."

Later decisions of the Supreme Court of Illinois have reaffirmed this doctrine.

With the first reason given by the Supreme Court of Illinois in its holding that the taking of any other security destroys the right to a mechanic's lien we need not take issue. It is based upon the fact that under the peculiar wording of the Illinois statute the lien is a secret lien, not required to be recorded, and therefore imperiling the rights of ignorant and innocent purchasers or incumbrancers of the property. This reason has no application in this state, where recordation of the lien claim is required. Some force may attach by reason of the secret nature of the mechanic's lien in the state of Illinois to the second reason assigned, by which reason an identical parallelism is found between the vendor's lien and the mechanic's lien of the Illinois statute, but this force inheres only because of the secrecy of the lien.

[7] The vendor's lien is in the English and American law exceptional in character. It was an importation from the Roman civil law, and found its recognition in the English system through its courts of chancery. The equitable principle was that the person who had secured the estate of another ought not in conscience to be allowed to keep it and not pay full consideration money, and that to enforce that payment it was just that it should be made a charge upon the estate so taken. But being from its nature a secret lien, being thus an intrusion upon and an exception to every principle of our jurisprudence, which frowns upon secret transactions of all kinds, some courts have criticized its existence, some states by statute have destroyed it, and every court has been swift to declare that the taking by the vendor of any security is a waiver of the lien. 2 Warvelle, Vendors, § 676; 2 Sugden, Vendors, c. 19. True it is that in this state the vendor's lien is expressly recognized by section 3046 of the Civil Code, but equally true it is that all other rules and doctrines governing the existence and destruction of such liens are left to the principles established by courts of equity.

[8] To the contrary, however, the lien of the mechanic in this state is a lien, world-wide notice of which is given by recordation, and it is a lien of the highest possible dignity, since it is secured, not by legislative enactment, but by the Constitution of the state. Const. Cal. art. 20, § 15. Grave reasons indeed must be shown in every case to justify a holding that such a lien is lost or destroyed. Certainly the mere circumstance that the prudent mechanic or materialman has taken additional security for his debt should not be held so to operate. Nor should any conclusion that such additional security was meant to be a substituted security for the right to the lien be found except in the clearest case. Before such a conclusion is reached, it should plainly appear from the nature of the contract between the parties that the security was in fact substituted and not cumulative. And, finally, no argument for the destruction of such a lien can be based upon the theory of its secrecy, when in this state no secrecy at all exists.

We have so far limited this discussion to an analysis of the cases which it is contended hold the destruction of the mechanic's lien. We have endeavored to show that the principles of most of these cases have been misunderstood and accordingly misrepresented, and that in the other cases, as in the Oregon case and Illinois cases, the principles declared are wholly inapplicable to our law. We may now sum up this matter by adding that the great weight of authority supports the views here expressed, and, without unduly prolonging this discussion by quotations, we may cite 1 Jones on Liens, § 1101; Bender-Moss on Liens, § 630; Phillips on Mechanic's Liens, § 280; Roberts and Wife v. Wilcoxson and Rose, 36 Ark. 355; Maryland Brick Co. v. Spilman, 76 Md. 337, 25 Atl. 297, 17 L. R. A. 599, 35 Am. St. Rep. 431; Parberry v. Johnson & Co., 51 Miss. 291; Peck v. Bridwell, 10 Mo. App. 524; Brumme v. Herod, 38 App. Div. 558, 56 N. Y. Supp. 670; Boyle v. Robbins, 71 N. C. 130; Howe v. Kindred, 42 Minn. 433, 44 N. W. 311; Kilpatrick v. Kansas City, etc., Co., 38 Neb. 620, 57 N. W. 664, 41 Am. St. Rep. 741; Talliaferro v. Stevenson, 58 N. J. Law, 165, 33 Atl. 383; Myers v. Humphries (Tex. Civ. App.) 47 S. W. 812; Hale v. Burlington, etc., Co. (C. C.) 13 Fed. 203.

[9] And finally, it may be pointed out that in this state it has been held that the right to enforce a mechanic's lien was not lost by reason of the fact that the plaintiff, by levying an attachment upon other property, thereby obtained additional security. Brennan v. Swasey, 16 Cal. 140, 76 Am. Dec. 507.

It follows herefrom that Hubbard, in taking mortgage security from Becker upon the property of Becker for the value of the material which he might sell to him, did not lose his right to a mechanic's lien, either by virtue of section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or by the just application of any rule of decision holding that the taking of other security destroys the right to such lien.

[10] S. F. 6106: The evidence in this case showed that Becker had paid to Hubbard $1,000, which he directed should be applied on certain specified accounts, none of which was the Careaga account. The court found that Becker paid the $1,000 to Hubbard "on his general account, and not on account of material furnished for the construction of said building for said Mollie A. Careaga." This is a sufficiently explicit finding that Hubbard's account with Becker on account of material furnished to the Careaga building was not reduced by any specific payments, and appellant has no just cause for complaint over this finding.

[11] S. F. 6300: In this case the suit of Hubbard to foreclose his lien and the suit of Hart to foreclose his lien were consolidated. The Home Union, a corporation, was a defendant and cross-complainant. It was not given notice of the setting of the case for trial and did not appear at the trial. It moved for a new trial. The amount of its lien claim was $22.98. The court granted the motion conditionally, declaring that if the amount due the Home Union was deposited in court the motion would be denied. Subsequently the court entered its further order, reciting that the total amount due the Home Union was $26.98, and that Henry Hart had deposited $27 with the clerk of the court in full satisfaction of the claim and demand of the Home Union Company, and the motion for new trial was denied. This was irregular, in that the Home Union was not allowed to file a cost bill and establish the amount to which it was entitled in addition to its claim of lien. The amount involved may be trifling, but the principle is of consequence. A party under such circumstances, who by the finding of the court is entitled to prevail in the action and to have judgment accordingly, is likewise entitled to his hearing in court upon the question of the settlement of the legal costs which he has incurred.

It follows from the foregoing that Hubbard is entitled to share in the funds admittedly applicable to the payment of the liens by mechanics and materialmen, and that the Home Union is entitled to a reversal of the order denying it a new trial for the reasons indicated.

[12] The motion to dismiss this appeal is denied. The appeal was taken under the new or alternative method. The notice of appeal was filed with the clerk 31 days after judgment was filed. No other notice of appeal was required. Code Civ. Proc. § 941b; Lang v. Lilley, etc., Co., 161 Cal. 295, 119 Pac. 100; Fraser v. Sheldon, 164 Cal. 165, 128 Pac. 33.

Wherefore the judgments and orders appealed from are reversed, and the causes remanded.

GOLDBERG, BOWEN & CO. v. DIMICK
et al. (S. F. 6381.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1915.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES — 467 — ACTION — COMPLAINT — IDENTITY OF PLAINTIFF AND PAYEE — "INC."

A complaint in an action on notes payable to "Goldberg, Bowen & Co., Inc.," describing plaintiff as "Goldberg, Bowen & Co. (a Corporation)," not alleging their identity or any assignment of the notes to the plaintiff, but alleging that the notes were "made and delivered to the plaintiffs," was not demurrable for failure to identify plaintiff as the payee, since the abbreviation "Inc." means Incorporated, and the name in the note was equivalent to the name in the complaint.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Inc.]

2. PARTIES ☞67—MISNOMER.

Even if there is a variance between the name of the promisee in a contract and the name of the plaintiff, the rule is that where the parties can be ascertained, and the action is prosecuted in the name of the real party, an error in the name of the promisee, as described in the contract, is not a basis of defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parties, Cent. Dig. § 109; Dec. Dig. ☞67.]

3. TRIAL ☞45—OFFER OF PROOF—"OFFERED IN EVIDENCE."

In an action on notes, where each note was read in evidence, and where the judgment recited that "oral and documentary evidence was introduced and received in behalf of the plaintiff," the notes were "offered in evidence" as effectually as if the paper upon which it was written was formally tendered and received by the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 110-114; Dec. Dig. ☞45.]

4. CORPORATIONS ☞32—EVIDENCE—CORPORATE EXISTENCE.

In an action on notes, evidence held sufficient to show that plaintiff was a corporation existing under the laws of the state.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; A. I. McSorley, Judge.

Action by Goldberg, Bowen & Co., a corporation, against J. K. Dimick and H. H. Blood. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Blood appeals. Affirmed.

Jesse Olney, of San Francisco, for appellant. Alfred J. Fritz, of San Francisco, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Defendant has appealed from a judgment for the aggregate sum of $3,394.08, with interest.

The action was based upon three promissory notes, each pleaded in a separate count. Each note is fully set forth in the complaint. Each, as pleaded, is made payable to "Goldberg, Bowen & Co., Inc.," and purports to be signed by J. K. Dimick, as principal, and H. H. Blood, as surety. Each count contains the allegation that Goldberg, Bowen & Co. was, at all times mentioned therein, a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the state of California. It is also averred in the complaint that each note was made and delivered to the plaintiff.

Defendant Blood demurred to each count for alleged want of facts, and that it could not be determined therefrom if demand had been made upon J. K. Dimick. The demurrers were overruled, and defendant Blood answered, basing his denials upon information and belief.

When the case was called for trial neither defendant Blood nor his counsel appeared. Testimony was taken in their absence, by which it appeared that Goldberg, Bowen & Co. was a corporation existing under the laws of the state of California, but it did not appear when the incorporation had taken place. An employé of the corporation testified that it was still the owner and holder of each note, and the witness read each note into the record, where each appears in the exact words by which it is set forth in the complaint. It does not appear from the record that the plaintiff formally offered the notes themselves in evidence.

[1] Appellant insists that "Goldberg, Bowen & Co., Inc.," specified in the notes, is not the same entity as "Goldberg, Bowen & Co. (a Corporation)," the plaintiff, and that, as the complaint contains no allegation of their identity or of any assignment of the notes to the plaintiff, his demurrer for want of facts should have been sustained. There is no merit in this contention. The abbreviation "Inc." means "Incorporated"; therefore "Goldberg, Bowen & Co., Inc.," is equivalent to "Goldberg, Bowen & Co. (a Corporation)." This practical identity of names is aided by the averment that the notes were "made and delivered to the plaintiff." The demurrer to the complaint was properly overruled.

[2] It was shown that defendant Blood signed the notes in the office of the plaintiff, and that the said notes had never been out of plaintiff's possession. It was not denied that Mr. Blood did sign the notes, and that he had paid no part of the principal and further that only a small part of the interest had been paid, but upon the supposed variance between the name of the payee in the notes and that of plaintiff the defendant bases an argument that the record is insufficient to support the judgment. This contention is also without merit. There is, as we have seen, a practical identity of the name of the payee in the notes and the title of the plaintiff, and, even if there were a variation, the rule is that where the parties to a contract can be ascertained, and an action is prosecuted in the name of the real party, an error in the name of the promisee as described in the promise is not a proper basis of defense. Charitable Ass'n in Middle Granville v. Baldwin, 42 Mass. (1 Metc.) 365; Medway Cotton Manufactory v. Adams, 10 Mass. 360; City of Lowell v. Morse, 42 Mass. (1 Metc.) 475; Commercial Bank v. French, 38 Mass. (21 Pick.) 486, 32 Am. Dec. 280. It is true that, in the second and third of the above citations, the misnomers were aided by averment, but this fact does not detract from the principle and the rule involved.

[3] Appellant also attacks the judgment on the ground that none of the three notes on which plaintiff relies was offered in evidence. On the contrary, each note was read in evidence, and the judgment recites that "oral and documentary evidence was introduced and received in behalf of the plaintiff." There can be no sort of doubt that the court had before it the notes upon which the signature of appellant duly appeared. A note read into the record is "offered in evidence" as effectually as if the paper upon which it is written were formally tendered and taken into the custody of the court.

[4] In his closing brief appellant for the first time asserts that the corporate quality of the plaintiff was not established. He says:

"In the second paragraph of the answer filed to each of the plaintiff's alleged three causes of action * * * the defendant specifically denies that Goldberg, Bowen & Co. were a corporation at the time of the alleged execution and delivery of each note. No proof was introduced at the trial to controvert this denial."

At the trial Mr. Denvir, cashier for the plaintiff, testified that Goldberg, Bowen & Co. was a corporation "existing under the laws of the state of California." He did not state how long the corporation had existed, but he produced the three notes here in suit, and another witness swore that he saw Mr. Blood sign those instruments in which "Goldberg, Bowen & Co." is described as incorporated by the abbreviation "Inc." This is sufficient proof.

From the foregoing discussion it follows that the judgment must be and accordingly it is affirmed.

O'CONNOR v. MENNIE. (S. F. 6162.)
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1915.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨258—ACTION FOR INJURY—PLEADING—CONSTRUCTION.

A complaint, in a servant's action for injury based solely on the "improper and negligent" construction of an elevator, was to be construed as meaning an improper and negligent condition of the elevator as it was at the time of the accident.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 816-836; Dec. Dig. ⇨258.]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨265—ACTION FOR INJURY—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In a servant's action for injury from the alleged improper and negligent construction of an elevator used by his master, it was incumbent on the servant to make a prima facie case of the negligence averred.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 877-908, 955; Dec. Dig. ⇨265.]

3. TRIAL ⇨165—MOTION FOR NONSUIT—EVIDENCE.

A motion for a nonsuit admits the truth of plaintiff's evidence and every inference of fact that can be legitimately drawn therefrom, and upon such motion the evidence should be interpreted most strongly against the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 373, 374; Dec. Dig. ⇨165.]

4. TRIAL ⇨139—TAKING CASE FROM JURY—EVIDENCE.

To justify the submission of any question of fact to a jury, the proof must raise more than a mere conjecture, and must be such that a rational mind can reasonably draw from it the conclusion that the alleged fact exists, and, where the evidence does not justify such an inference, the court may properly refuse to submit the question to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 332, 333, 338-341, 365; Dec. Dig. ⇨139.]

5. NEGLIGENCE ⇨121—PRESUMPTIONS—"RES IPSA LOQUITUR."

"Res ipsa loquitur" means simply "the thing, or affair, speaks for itself," and, so speaking, authorizes the inference of negligence, in the absence of a showing to the contrary. When a thing causing injury is shown to be under the management of the defendant, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those in charge use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation, that the accident arose from a want of care.

6. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨265—ACTION FOR INJURY—EVIDENCE—RES IPSA LOQUITUR.

The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies in a servant's action for injury; but, where the evidence as to the accident is such as to leave it purely a matter of conjecture whether the injury was due to a cause for which the master was liable, the doctrine is not applicable, and, under such circumstances, the mere happening of the accident is not prima facie evidence of negligence; but, where the evidence itself fairly warrants the inference that the accident was due to a cause for which the master was liable, the doctrine makes a case sufficient to require submission of his liability to the jury.

7. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨285—ACTION FOR INJURY—EVIDENCE AS TO NEGLIGENCE—MASTER'S KNOWLEDGE—RES IPSA LOQUITUR.

In an action by the servant of a contractor who was operating a temporary elevator furnished the contractor by a third party, for injury from the fall of the elevator by reason of negligent construction, evidence of the condition of the appliance, in the absence of explanation, and aided by the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, held to warrant the inference that the accident was due to its defective construction so as to take the case to the jury.

8. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨265—ACTION FOR INJURY—BURDEN OF PROOF—MASTER'S KNOWLEDGE.

Plaintiff, to make defendant's alleged negligence a question for the jury, was not required to do anything more than show that the defect in the elevator was actually known to defendant or could have been discovered by reasonable care, where there was nothing in the evidence showing that the defect might not have been discovered by a reasonable examination.

9. MASTER AND SERVANT 106—ACTION FOR INJURY — PLACES AND APPLIANCES FOR WORK.

In a servant's action for injury from the fall of a temporary elevator used in repair work, it was immaterial that the master did not construct it, but hired it and furnished it to his employés for their use, as he was in the control of it while it was being so used and was required to use reasonable care to see that it was not a defective or dangerous appliance.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Michael O'Connor against Alexander Mennie. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Olney, Pringle & Mannon and J. R. Pringle, all of San Francisco, for appellants. Jesse W. Lillenthal, Albert Raymond, and Lillenthal, McKinstry & Raymond, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. Hearing granted in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal for the first district.

This is an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff from the fall of an elevator which occurred during the making of certain repairs upon the City of Paris building in San Francisco.

The defendant was a contractor engaged in doing certain cement and plaster work in the course of said repairs, and while doing such work was using and operating an elevator which had been temporarily placed in said building by the Clinton Fireproofing Company in order to facilitate the work of making the repairs. Defendant was using this elevator in his own work under an arrangement with the fireproofing company, paying such company a stipulated sum per day for the use of the car and the engineer's time. This elevator was operated by means of a donkey engine in the basement, the engineer of which engine was directed by the defendant while he and his employés were making use of the elevator. The plaintiff was a hod carrier who had been in the employ of the defendant for a day or two before the accident occurred. On the day of the accident one Richard Downing was acting as foreman for the defendant and was directing the services of his employés in the prosecution of said work. A short while before the accident, Downing directed the plaintiff to go with him upon said elevator to the upper floor of the building, there to procure some barrels of cement which were to be placed upon the elevator and transported to a lower floor. The cement was placed upon the elevator. The plaintiff also got upon it with Downing and by his direction, and the latter gave the engineer the signal to descend. While so descending, Downing signaled the engineer to stop at the required floor. In descending, whether without stopping or just upon stopping at the second floor, the evidence being in conflict on this point, the elevator fell to the basement. The plaintiff received the injuries complained of, was carried unconscious from the building, and was for several months confined in a hospital or at his home, and was thereby precluded from conducting any personal investigation as to the cause of the accident. When he so far recovered as to be able to make such investigation, both the elevator and all external evidences of the way the accident had occurred had disappeared.

Upon the trial plaintiff introduced evidence showing the facts hereinbefore stated. There was also evidence tending to show as follows: The elevator was an ordinary hoisting elevator for use in building purposes, placed temporarily in any building where its use was deemed expedient by its owners, the Clinton Fireproofing Company. The top of this appliance was a head-piece or cat-head, consisting of "a timber carrying two sheaves," over which the cable attached to the car ran. Apparently, the appliance was put in place in a building by attaching this head-piece in some way to the building itself. A very short time before the accident the engineer of the fireproofing company, who was still in their employ at the time of the trial, testified that "it may have been one day, or it may have been three or four, a very short time before," this head-piece had been lowered from a former position to the place where it was at the time the elevator fell. Almost immediately after the accident, and before anything had been done to change the conditions, both the engineer and one Nelson made an examination as to the situation. The engineer testified that he found that "the head-piece was scattered pretty much all over the building," and, again, "that was scattered all over the building, that part of it." Asked as to whether he found any portion of the head-piece broken, he said that he "found it all broken apart, it was all separated, and there was a cap of one of the boxes broken." He said that he could not say that he found any of the pieces of wood that composed the head-piece broken in two or cracked, but that there were timbers broken that were used in holding the head-piece in place. He found "a bunch of broken timbers." Again, he testified that at the top he found "some timbers there that were broken in two, or cut in two by the line." Nelson testified:

"I found the pieces that carried the two wheels or pulleys that the cable ran over were broken. There were some of them broken, and some of the boxes where the ex gones were pulled out of the sockets, and * * * two of the iron boxes came down into the basement.

The whole business was pulled apart and broken, some of it loose."

There was also evidence to the effect that once or twice previously the same load had been carried on the elevator, but it does not affirmatively appear that this was prior to the lowering of the head-piece.

In his complaint herein plaintiff averred:

"That the breaking and falling of said elevator was due to the improper and negligent construction thereof, and that said defendant had knowledge of said negligent and improper construction and that the plaintiff had no knowledge thereof."

There was no other proof than that above stated as to the cause of the falling of the elevator, or in support of the averment that the breaking and falling of the elevator was due to the improper and negligent construction thereof, or that defendant had knowledge of said negligent and improper construction, or should have had such knowledge. Upon the grounds, among others, that there was not sufficient evidence to make a prima facie case in these regards, defendant moved for a nonsuit, and the lower court granted such motion. Judgment was thereupon given that plaintiff take nothing, and we have here an appeal by plaintiff from such judgment.

[1, 2] It is to be borne in mind that the cause of action stated in the complaint is based solely on the alleged "improper and negligent construction" of the elevator, and that no other negligence on the part of defendant, if any, such for instance as negligence in the operation of the elevator, is available to plaintiff in this action, as the pleadings now are. We have no doubt, however, but that the specification of improper and negligent construction must be construed as meaning an improper and negligent condition of the elevator as it was at the time of the accident—its unfitness at that time for the purposes for which it was intended and was being used. It was incumbent on plaintiff to make a prima facie case of negligence in the respect averred, and, if he did not present evidence from which the jury could legitimately infer negligence on defendant's part in this respect, the motion for a nonsuit was properly granted.

[3] Of course, as was said in Hoff v. Los Angeles, etc., Co., 158 Cal. 596, 599, 112 Pac. 53, 54:

"The motion for nonsuit admits the truth of plaintiff's evidence, and every inference of fact that can be legitimately drawn therefrom, and upon such motion the evidence should be interpreted most strongly against the defendant."

[4] It is also true, however, as said in Janin v. London & S. F. Bank, 92 Cal. 14, 27, 27 Pac. 1100, 1102 (14 L. R. A. 320, 27 Am. St. Rep. 82):

"In order to justify the submission of any question of fact to a jury, the proof must be sufficient to raise more than a mere conjecture or surmise that the fact is as alleged. It must be such that a rational, well-constructed mind can reasonably draw from it the conclusion that the fact exists, and, when the evidence is not sufficient to justify such an inference, the court may properly refuse to submit the question to the jury."

In the absence of further affirmative proof as to the cause of the accident and the negligence of the defendant, plaintiff relies upon the application to his case of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, claiming that applying this doctrine the evidence was sufficient to create a presumption of defendant's negligence in the respect averred—to make a prima facie case in such respect, and thus to put defendant to his proof.

[5] As was said by the District Court of Appeal, the maxim res ipsa loquitur translated means simply "the thing, or affair, speaks for itself," and, so speaking, authorizes the inference of negligence in the absence of a showing to the contrary. As applied to cases of alleged negligence, the rule, as stated in Judson v. Giant Powder Co., 107 Cal. 549, 556, 40 Pac. 1020, 1021 (29 L. R. A. 718, 48 Am. St. Rep. 146), quoting from Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, is:

"When a thing which causes injury is shown to be under the management of the defendant, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from a want of care."

See, also, Kahn v. Triest-Rosenburg Cap Co., 139 Cal. 341, 344, 73 Pac. 164.

[6] There can be no doubt, in view of the decisions in this state, as to the applicability of this doctrine in actions for negligence wherever the circumstances shown justify its application, whether the action be one by a passenger against a common carrier, by a person bearing no relation to the one managing the thing causing the accident, or by an employé against an employer. See Judson v. Giant Powder Co., supra. Of course, to justify its application in any case, the circumstances of the accident must be such as, unexplained, afford reasonable evidence of want of care in a respect for which the defendant is liable in the particular action. For this reason the rule that the accident speaks for itself and prima facie shows negligence has been held inapplicable in many actions by an employé against his employer to recover damages for injuries sustained by the employé in the course of his employment. Under the law generally applicable to the relation of employer and employé, there were certain cases in which the employer was not liable for injuries received by the employé in the course of his employment, such as, for instance, where the injury was produced by a cause as to which the employé had assumed the risk or was caused by the negligence of a fellow servant. It may safely be said that the authorities generally support the conclusion that, where the evidence as to the accident was such as to leave it purely a matter of mere surmise or conjecture whether the injury was due to a cause for which the employer was liable, the doctrine is not applicable. The burden of proof is on the employé to show actionable negligence, and under such circumstances the mere happening of the accident is not prima facie evidence of such negligence. On this point it is sufficient to cite such California cases as Madden v. Occidental, etc., S. S. Co., 86 Cal. 445, 25 Pac. 5; Sappenfield v. Main St., etc., Co., 91 Cal. 48, 27 Pac. 590; Thompson v. California Construction Co., 148 Cal. 35, 82 Pac. 367; and Campbell v. Southern Pacific Co., 21 Cal. App. 175, 131 Pac. 80. But where the evidence is of such a nature as to fairly warrant the inference as a fact, in the absence of explanation, that the accident was due to a cause for which the employer is liable to his employé, the doctrine is applicable, and a sufficient case is made to require submission of the question of the employer's liability to the jury.

[7] So here, if the evidence was of such a nature as, in the absence of explanation, to fairly warrant the inference that the accident to this elevator was due to the improper and defective construction, construing the allegation of the complaint in this behalf as we have construed it, and was such an accident as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, plaintiff made a sufficient case to preclude the granting of a nonsuit.

It seems to us very clear that this was the condition of the evidence when plaintiff rested his case. The evidence as to the condition of things at the top of the shaft and of the head-piece immediately after the accident, in connection with the evidence as to the lowering of the head-piece only a day or so before, renders it an entirely reasonable inference that the sudden fall of the elevator was due to the giving way, under the strain of the load, of the supports of the head-piece. The evidence of the engineer, whose interest, if any, would naturally be with the defendant, tended to show that, while attachments of the head-piece had given way in the accident and that the thing was "all broken apart," "separated," none of the pieces of wood that composed the head-piece had been broken in two or cracked, but that timbers holding the head-piece in place were broken in two. The head-piece itself had apparently been wrenched away from its supports, and had fallen to the floor. At least, the evidence was such as to make this a reasonable conclusion. It would be entirely reasonable to conclude, upon this evidence, in view of the established fact that the appliance had always previously proved sufficient for the purposes for which it was used, that the defect was in the supports at the place to which it had been recently lowered, or the manner of its attachment to those supports. The conditions were not such, in our judgment, as to indicate that the falling of the elevator was due to any negligence on the part of the engineer. We do not well see how the falling of the elevator could have produced the conditions existing at the top of the shaft immediately after the accident. In view of the use that had previously been made of the elevator, it is not fair to assume that there was any negligence in placing on it as large a load as that with which it started from the fourth floor. Really, in view of the circumstances shown, no adequate cause for the accident appeared other than the giving or yielding of the supports of the head-piece. Such a thing does not happen in the ordinary course of things if those who have the management use proper care.

[8] We are of the opinion that, in order to make a sufficient case for the jury, it was not incumbent on plaintiff, under the circumstances appearing, to do anything further in the way of showing that the defect in the appliance was actually known to the defendant, or would have been discovered upon the exercise of reasonable care to ascertain as to its condition. There was nothing in the evidence showing that the defect was such that it would not have been discovered, had such an examination of the structure been made by defendant as reasonable care for the safety of his employés demanded. The evidence indicates that the plaintiff could have known nothing before the accident about the condition of the elevator in so far as its safety was concerned, and shows that by reason of his injuries he was unable to make any investigation as to the cause of the accident until the elevator and all external evidence of the way the accident had occurred had disappeared. It is reasonable to assume that the defendant could have ascertained and probably did ascertain the cause of the accident, and certainly it was within his knowledge whether or not he had used due care for the observance of defects in the appliance furnished for the use of his employés. There are numerous authorities to the effect that under such circumstances it is enough for the employé to show that the accident was due to a defect in the appliance furnished the employé, without showing the precise nature of the defect, in this respect, and that such a showing warrants the inference that, if the defendant does not choose to give an explanation, the real cause was negligence on his part. This conclusion does not violate the well-settled rule that the party who alleged negligence must prove it, but simply means that such proof, under the circumstances stated, fairly warrants an inference of negligence, in the absence of explanation or evidence of reasonable care on the part of a defendant having superior knowledge as to the facts. In the case of Penson v. Island Empire, etc., Co., 73 Wash. 338, 132 Pac. 39, this question was discussed. In that case a scaffold on which the plaintiff was standing while painting a roof fell, the fall being due to the breaking of a 2x4 support, and it did not appear whether the defect in the timber was a patent or a latent defect. The same contention was there made as here, and the court, after a full discussion, concluded as follows:

"The prima facie case made by the character of the accident itself was not met in any way. The unexplained facts speak negligence."

The theory of the decisions in accord with this view is simply that the circumstances appearing are such that the jury may reasonably infer therefrom, in the absence of explanation, that the employer was guilty of negligence in the matter. There is ample authority for the view thus expressed, and it appears to us to be in accord with reason. While there are undoubtedly cases apparently opposed to this view, we know of no decision in this state that is clearly to the contrary. In Madden v. Occidental, etc., Co., supra, where the cause of the death of the employé was the breaking of a rope sling, it was said that it might be conceded that negligence of the employer might be inferred if it had been shown that the sling was being properly used by the coemployés of the deceased, and in the ordinary way. In Sappenfield v. Main St., etc., Co., supra, the court was discussing an instruction given to the jury, as to the duty of the employer, which was erroneous in declaring that the obligation upon the employer requires him to furnish such appliances "as combine the greatest safety with practical use." Incidentally it was said in the course of the discussion that:

"The mere fact of the injury or accident does not raise a presumption of negligence, and * * * it must be shown that the master knew or had notice that the appliance was defective."

This, however, should not be taken as meaning that the circumstances of the accident, unexplained, may not be sufficient to reasonably warrant an inference that the employer knew or should have known of the defect. In Thompson v. California Construction Co., supra, it was held that, under the circumstances of that case, "the mere happening of the accident is not prima facie evidence of neglect" on the part of the employer, and that "that rule applies only in cases where, in the ordinary course of things, due care being used, such accidents do not happen." There the plaintiff was employed in a quarry, in which the conditions of danger constantly changed as the work progressed, and was injured by the sliding of a rock upon him. A single expression in the opinion of the department deciding the case of Brymer v. Southern Pacific Co., 90 Cal. 496, 27 Pac. 371, probably comes nearer to supporting a contrary view than any other California case. It was said:

"That the mere fact that the chain broke would not authorize the inference that the defendant had failed to exercise reasonable care in the selection of the appliances used."

The question presented on that appeal was one simply of the correctness of an instruction that "the mere fact that an accident occurred by which the plaintiff was injured does not fix the liability, or even raise a presumption that the defendant was at fault in providing machinery," etc., on account of the refusal to give which a new trial had been granted by the trial court. As an abstract proposition of the law applicable to the relation of employer and employé, this instruction was admittedly correct, and it may be conceded that the facts of that case justified even the expression of the court above set forth. In Higgins v. Williams, 114 Cal. 176, 45 Pac. 1041, the same department, distinguishing the case, said that in the Brymer Case the defect "was latent and concealed." In the case at bar we have a very different situation from that presented by the mere breaking of a chain. We have a case where it may fairly be inferred that the supports and attachments by which the head-piece was to be kept in place were insufficient—that when the head-piece was lowered shortly before the accident, it was not attached in such a place and in such a manner as would render it a safe appliance for the purposes for which it was intended. There is nothing to show precisely what the defect was. While it may be easy for the defendant to meet and rebut the case made by plaintiff, we think that, in view of what we have said, the showing in this respect was sufficient to preclude the granting of a nonsuit.

[9] We have no doubt that it is entirely immaterial that defendant did not "construct" the elevator, or put the head-piece in the place where it was at the time of the accident. We have already referred to the matter of the proper construction to be given to the allegation of the complaint as to the cause of the accident, viz., "the negligent and improper construction" of the elevator. Defendant had procured from the owner the use of the elevator for the purposes of his own work, and furnished it to his employés for their use in such work. He was in the management and control of the same while it was being so used. It was incumbent on him, so far as his employés were concerned, to use reasonable care to see that it was not a defective and dangerous appliance for them to use in his work. It is entirely sufficient, in so far as plaintiff's case is concerned, that defendant was using this appliance as he did. See Higgins v. Williams, 114 Cal. 183, 45 Pac. 1041. The claim of learned counsel for defendant is based on too narrow a construction of the allegations in the complaint.

We see no other matter in the briefs that requires notice. We are of the opinion that the lower court erred in granting the motion for a nonsuit.

The judgment is reversed.

RAY v. BORGFELDT et al. (S. F. 6008.)
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 10, 1915.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY ⇨33—SURETIES—CONSIDERATION.

A loan of money to the maker of a note is adequate consideration for an agreement of his sureties, signing as comakers, that the note shall be paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. §§ 65, 66; Dec. Dig. ⇨33.]

2. PAYMENT ⇨38 — APPLICATION OF PAYMENTS—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Civ. Code, § 1479, providing that, where a debtor under several obligations does an act equally applicable to two or more of the obligations, the performance may be applied to the extinction of any particular obligation, as manifested by him to the creditor, or, when no such application is made, the creditor may apply it toward the extinction of any obligation, contemplates that a creditor at the time of a payment must have knowledge, obtained from the debtor, of the intention of the debtor that the payment shall be applied to a particular obligation, and that the time as to date of payment at which knowledge is so obtained is immaterial, and, where an appropriation of a payment by a debtor has once been made known to the creditor, the intention of the debtor is manifest to the creditor, who, when payments are made, must apply them accordingly.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Payment, Cent. Dig. §§ 99-103, 128; Dec. Dig. ⇨38.]

3. PAYMENT ⇨38 — APPLICATION OF PAYMENTS—AGREEMENTS.

A debtor liable under several obligations to the same creditor may at the time of making a payment direct an application different from his original direction, but the original direction governs in the absence of a new direction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Payment, Cent. Dig. §§ 99-103, 128; Dec. Dig. ⇨38.]

4. PAYMENT ⇨38 — APPLICATION OF PAYMENTS—AGREEMENTS.

A debtor's intention that a payment shall be credited on a particular obligation need not be expressed to the creditor in writing or in any technical or formal words, but it is sufficient that the intention is manifest, and that the creditor learns thereof, and notice of application may be shown by parol, whether made at the time of payment or at the time of the creation of the obligation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Payment, Cent. Dig. §§ 99-103, 128; Dec. Dig. ⇨38.]

5. PAYMENT ⇨38 — APPLICATION OF PAYMENTS—AGREEMENTS.

An agreement made contemporaneously with the execution of notes not indicating order of payment as to other debts due from the maker, that payments shall be applied to the extinguishment of the notes, and not in satisfaction of the other obligations, may be proved by parol, and a failure of the payee to apply payments according to the oral agreement, is a violation of the rights of the sureties on the note given by Civ. Code, § 1479, defining the right of application of payments.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Payment, Cent. Dig. §§ 99-103, 128; Dec. Dig. ⇨38.]

6. PAYMENT ⇨75 — APPLICATION OF PAYMENTS—PAROL AGREEMENTS—EVIDENCE.

In an action on a note, evidence held to show that a contemporaneous parol agreement for the application of any payment by the principal maker was made between the payee and the principal maker and his sureties signing as comakers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Payment, Cent. Dig. § 239; Dec. Dig. ⇨75.]

7. CORPORATIONS ⇨411—OFFICERS—POWERS

The president and manager of a corporation, who attended to and managed its affairs before and after it became financially embarrassed, has authority to act for and bind it by an oral agreement governing the application of payments by the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1650-1653; Dec. Dig. ⇨411.]

8. WITNESSES ⇨237 — EXAMINATION — ASSUMPTION OF FACT.

A question put to a witness which assumes the truth of the fact to the proof of which the question is addressed is for that reason improper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 829-832; Dec. Dig. ⇨237.]

9. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨882 — HARMLESS ERROR—ERRONEOUS RULINGS ON EVIDENCE.

A party who, on the cross-examination of a witness, brings out a fact, or who without objection permits a juror to bring out the fact, cannot complain of questions erroneously assuming the truth of the fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3591-3610; Dec. Dig. ⇨882.]

10. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨854—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—RULINGS ON EVIDENCE.

Where the court, admitting proper evidence, gave an erroneous reason for its ruling, the party objecting to the evidence could not complain on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3403, 3404, 3408-3424, 3427-3430; Dec. Dig. ⇨854.]

11. PAYMENT ⇨77 — APPLICATION — AGREEMENTS—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in an action on a note defended by sureties signing as comakers, it was admitted that the payee had loaned money to the principal maker, that the sureties signed as comakers, and that enough money had been collected from the principal maker to pay the note if applied according to the wishes of the sureties, and the sole issue was whether there had been a direction for the payments so as to satisfy the note, an instruction that, if at the time of the execution of the note, "and as the sole consideration therefor," there was an oral agreement that moneys coming from the principal maker should be applied first to the note, and there subsequently came into the hands of the payee a sum to pay the note if so applied, the verdict should be for the sureties, was not objectionable because confining the jury to the oral agreement as the sole consideration for the obligation of the sureties, and, by eliminating the quoted words, the instruction properly submitted the issue.

12. PAYMENT ⇨77 — APPLICATION — AGREEMENTS—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in an action on a note defended by sureties signing as makers on the theory of the payee's failure to apply payments made by the principal maker in satisfaction of the note as required by a contemporaneous parol agreement, all of the proof of an agreement was directed to an agreement between the payee and all the other parties to the note as to the order of payment, and there was no evidence of any agreement between the payee and the sureties alone, an instruction referring to an agreement between the payee and "defendants," the sureties, was not misleading because of the use of the word "defendants."

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by George R. Ray against Christian J. Borgfeldt and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Charles W. Slack, of San Francisco, for appellant. E. A. O'Brien, of San Francisco, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. This case was originally decided on appeal by the District Court of Appeal of the Third District and the following opinion, prepared by Mr. Justice Hart, was filed:

"This action, brought to recover on two promissory notes, was tried before a jury, and a verdict returned in favor of the defendants. The plaintiff has appealed from the judgment thereupon entered in favor of the defendants and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

"The notes in suit were made in favor of the Banca Svizzera Americana of Locarno (commonly called and known as the Swiss-American Bank), by F. Cavagnaro Company, C. J. Borgfeldt & Co., and Hilbert Mercantile Company, and were assigned by said bank to the plaintiff. One of the notes was for the sum of $500, is dated January 15, 1906, and made payable four months after its date. The other is for the sum of $4,884.18, is dated January 30, 1906, and payable four months after its date. The notes were in the ordinary form and the makers thereof bound themselves thereon both jointly and severally.

"The notes in controversy were executed under the following circumstances, quoting from an admittedly correct statement of the facts in the opening brief of counsel for the plaintiff:

"The F. Cavagnaro Company, one of the makers of the notes, in the month of January, 1906, and before the execution of the notes, was insolvent. An agreement was entered into by and between the F. Cavagnaro Company and its creditors, among whom was the Banca Svizzera Americana of Locarno, commonly called the Swiss-American Bank, by the terms of which the creditors agreed to accept 35 per cent. of their respective claims in cash in full satisfaction. The F. Cavagnaro Company, however, lacked $5,384.18 of having enough money to carry out the agreement. Application was made to the Swiss-American Bank for a loan of that sum, the F. Cavagnaro Company offering its notes in return. The bank, however, refused to loan the money on the notes of the F. Cavagnaro Company alone, but demanded that financially reliable persons be procured to go on the notes with the F. Cavagnaro Company. Thereupon the F. Cavagnaro Company, the Hilbert Mercantile Company, and the defendants executed, as makers, and delivered to the bank, the notes, and the bank paid $5,384.18 in cash to the F. Cavagnaro Company, which the latter applied in settling the claims of its creditors in accordance with its agreement. The defendants at the time the notes were given were partners doing business under the firm name of 'C. J. Borgfeldt & Co.'

"The complaint contains allegations showing the making and delivering of the notes by the defendants and the other makers to the bank and the assignment of the notes to the plaintiff. After deducting all part payments made by various makers at various times, the amount still due is alleged to be $3,891.86, and interest."

"The defendants admit the due execution of the notes, but claim that they were paid in full. This claim is based upon an alleged oral agreement had between the parties contemporaneously with the execution of the notes, whereby, so it is insisted, the bank agreed to apply to the payment of said notes, after first satisfying a certain note for $4,780.94, mentioned in the answer, all moneys received by it from Cavagnaro & Co. in preference to the satisfaction, by means of the moneys so received, of other indebtedness due said bank from said Cavagnaro & Co. The oral agreement thus referred to was pleaded in the answer as a special defense, and, as thus the facts relative to said agreement are fully and clearly stated, and as said agreement constitutes the only ground upon which the defendants seek to avoid the force of the obligations of the notes, it is conceived that a clearer apprehension and understanding of the point thus presented may be obtained by a reproduction here in its entirety of the special defense as thus set up: 'And for a further and separate defense to the first count in plaintiff's complaint contained, defendants allege that at the time of the execution and delivery of the note sued upon in the first count of plaintiff's complaint herein, the plaintiff's assignor agreed that any and all money coming into their hands from F. Cavagnaro Company would be applied to the satisfaction of the said note sued upon in the first count of plaintiff's complaint herein, and the said note sued upon in the second count of plaintiff's complaint herein, after the satisfaction and payment of a certain note in the sum of $4,780.94, which was then due and owing from the said F. Cavagnaro Company to the said plaintiff's assignor, and the said plaintiff's assignor at that time agreed that the payment of a certain note in the sum of $8,750 due and owing then from the said F. Cavagnaro Company would be postponed until the payment of the said note sued upon in the first count of plaintiff's complaint, and the said note sued upon in the second count of plaintiff's complaint herein; that subsequent to the execution of the said note sued upon in the first count of plaintiff's complaint herein, and prior to the commencement of this suit, the F. Cavagnaro Company deposited with and delivered over to the plaintiff's assignor certain insurance policies covering the property of the said F. Cavagnaro Company, aggregating in amount, the plaintiff is informed and believes, and therefore alleges, the sum of $16,000; that subsequently, to wit, on or about the 18th day of April, 1906, the property covered by the said insurance policies delivered to plaintiff's assignor as aforesaid was destroyed by fire, and defendants are informed and believe, and therefore allege, that the plaintiff's assignor collected and received from the various insurance companies represented by said policies, in payment of the losses sustained upon the property covered by said insurance policies, an amount aggregating the sum of $14,000; that the amount thus obtained by the plaintiff's assignor as aforesaid, if applied to the payment of the indebtedness of the said F. Cavagnaro Company to the said plaintiff's assignor in accordance with the agreement as aforesaid to apply all money received from F. Cavagnaro Company to the payment of the notes sued upon in counts 1 and 2 of plaintiff's complaint, after the payment of the one $4,780.94 note then due plaintiff's assignor, was ample and sufficient to satisfy the indebtedness due on the note sued upon in the first count of plaintiff's complaint herein.'

"It was admitted by the plaintiff that the bank realized from the sale of certain goods belonging to Cavagnaro & Co. the sum of $408.75, and received from the insurance policies referred to in the answer the sum of $12,425. The undisputed evidence shows that the money so received was applied by the bank to the satisfaction of two notes of the F. Cavagnaro Company which are not involved in this action, and that, consequently, no part of said money was applied to the payment of either of the notes in controversy.

"The evidence as to the making of the oral agreement discloses that the parties making said agreement were a representative of the defendants, a representative of the Hilbert Mercantile Company, Elwin W. Gates, president and manager of the Cavagnaro Company, and the plaintiff's assignor, the latter having been represented by Mr. Tognazzi, its manager. Thereafter, Mr. Gates had several conversations with a Mr. Brunner, also an official of the bank, having authority to bind it, and to the latter Gates stated that it was the understanding of all the parties and the desire of the makers of the notes that all moneys received by the bank from Cavagnaro & Co. should be applied to the liquidation of the notes in suit, after first so paying the note mentioned in the answer as evidencing an indebtedness to the bank of $4,780.94, which note, as seen, is not involved in this action, so far as the purpose of it is concerned. The evidence shows that the defendants, before signing the notes, declared to the manager of the bank, on the occasion of the making of the oral agreement, that they would refuse to become sureties on the notes unless the proposition there suggested as to the order of the payment of the notes in dispute was assented to by the bank, and that thereupon the manager of the latter agreed to said proposition. It is in evidence, and, indeed, admitted, that the money received by the bank on account of the insurance policies was first applied to the payment of the $4,780.94 note, and the balance remaining applied to the extinction of obligations due the bank from Cavagnaro & Co. other than those evidenced by the notes declared upon.

"The plaintiff produced proof to sustain his claim that no such oral agreement as the one upon which the defendants wholly rest their resistance to recovery upon the notes in controversy was made or entered into; but, manifestly, the result of this denial of the oral agreement is only to create a conflict in the evidence upon that question, and it follows, therefore, that, as to the fact of the making of the agreement, the conclusion of the jury is conclusive.

"The defendants, in confirmation of the special defense set up and relied upon by them, contend that, agreeably to the terms of the oral agreement, so much of the money paid to the bank on the insurance policies as was remaining after the satisfaction therewith of the $4,780.94 note ought to have been credited upon the notes in suit or applied in payment thereof. The contention is, obviously, the offspring of the theory that the oral agreement referred to amounted, within the contemplation of section 1479 of the Civil Code, to the manifestation to the bank of an intention or desire of the makers of the notes that the money so received should be applied to the extinction of those particular obligations. It is further contended by the defendants that, since they became sureties upon the notes upon the agreement with the bank that the latter would apply the money received by it from Cavagnaro & Co. to the payment of said notes in preference to the settlement with such money of any other indebtedness of Cavagnaro & Co. to it, excepting the note for $4,780.94, there was, by reason of the violation of said agreement by the bank, a failure of consideration for the notes in suit.

"The plaintiff, on the other hand, insists that, to have entitled the makers of the notes in dispute to the benefit of the application of said money to the payment of said notes, by virtue of the provisions of section 1479, supra, it was the duty of the makers of the notes, under the terms of said section, to have made known to the bank, at the very time the money was received by or paid to, the bank, their intention or desire in that respect, and that there is no evidence of any such intention or desire having been manifested to the bank by the debtors at that time. It is therefore, argued that the effect of the oral agreement, if enforced, will be to vary or modify the terms of a contract in writing. The further point is made by the plaintiff that the oral agreement referred to, if made at all, was not between the principal debtor, Cavagnaro & Co., and the creditor, the bank, but between the sureties and the bank, and that such an agreement so made could not in any event, within the meaning of section 1479, supra, be treated as a manifestation by the debtor to the bank of an intention or desire that the money received by the bank from the insurance companies should be applied to any particular obligation Cavagnaro & Co. were under to the bank.

"The points thus stated and urged here are tested by exceptions reserved at the trial to the rulings of the court admitting evidence of the parol agreement referred to.

[1] "The argument by counsel for the defendants that the failure of the bank to apply the money received by it on the insurance policies to the payment of the notes in suit constitutes a failure of the consideration moving the defendants to become sureties upon said notes has made no impression upon us. The defendants and the Hilbert Mercantile Company appear upon the face of the instrument as joint makers with Cavagnaro & Co. The evidence, however, shows them to be indorsers or sureties. In any event, the loan of the money was a valuable and adequate consideration for the agreement by the sureties that the notes would be paid. Lompoc Valley Bank v. Stephenson, 156 Cal. 350, 104 Pac. 449. * * *

[2] "We are of the opinion, however, that the testimony received by the court in proof of the oral agreement was properly admitted as in proof of the direction by the makers of the notes in suit to apply any moneys received by the bank from Cavagnaro & Co. to the extinction of their obligations to the bank as evidenced by said notes.

"Section 1479 of the Civil Code reads, in part, as follows:

"Where a debtor, under several obligations to another, does an act, by way of performance, in whole or in part, which is equally applicable to two or more of such obligations, such performance must be applied as follows:

"1. If, at the time of performance, the intention or desire of the debtor that such performance should be applied to the extinction of any particular obligation, be manifested to the creditor, it must be so applied.

"2. If no such application be then made, the creditor, within a reasonable time after such performance, may apply it toward the extinction of any obligation, performance of which was due to him from the debtor at the time of such performance; except that if similar obligations were due to him both individually and as a trustee, he must, unless otherwise directed by the debtor, apply the performance to the extinction of all such obligations in equal proportion; and an application once made by the creditor cannot be rescinded without the consent of (the) debtor."

"We are not inclined to accept the view that, in order to comply with and thus receive the benefit of the provisions of the foregoing section, the debtor, under several obligations to the creditor, must necessarily, at the precise time of performance, direct the application of any payments made by him toward the extinction of a particular obligation. We are of the opinion, rather, that, in sound reason, all that the statute requires or contemplates is that the creditor, at the time of performance or payment, must be in possession of knowledge, obtained from the debtor, of the intention or desire of the latter that the payment shall be applied to the satisfaction of a particular obligation, and that the time, in respect of the date of performance or payment, at which such knowledge is so obtained—that is to say, whether it be at the precise time of performance or at some prior time—is wholly immaterial. In other words, where the appropriation of payments by the debtor has once been made known to the creditor, the intention or desire of the former as to such appropriation is thus manifested to the creditor when the payments are actually made, and a repetition of such manifestation is not necessary.

[3] "It is, no doubt, true that the debtor, at the time of performance, may make a different direction as to the application of payments, but, unless he does so, the original direction must govern the creditor in the application of the moneys paid. This view of the section under consideration harmonizes with the expressions of our Supreme Court upon the subject in some early cases.

"In Wendt v. Ross, 33 Cal. 650, 657, the court, dealing with a statute whose provisions were substantially the same as those of section 1479, said: 'The debtor may, at or before the time of payment, direct the application of the payment, and, if the creditor receives the money, he is bound by the direction. If the debtor omits to do so, the creditor may, generally, apply it to any debt he chooses; and, when the application is made, he is bound by it, and cannot, without the consent of the other party, change the application to another debt'—citing 1 Am. Lead. Cases, 268; notes to Mayor, etc., v. Patton and Field v. Holland.

"In Clarke v. Scott, 45 Cal. 86, 88, the trial court refused to receive evidence in proof of an oral agreement, made concurrently with the execution of the notes upon which the action was brought, whereby it was agreed or understood between the sureties on the notes in suit and the payee that any payments made to the creditor by the principal obligor should be applied to the payment of said notes. On appeal the Supreme Court held that the evidence was admissible, saying: 'If it be a fact that at the time the defendants J. M. Scott & Co., as sureties of the other defendant, S. W. Scott, signed the note in suit, it was then agreed or understood between all the parties that such payment as the defendant S. W. Scott might thereafter make should be applied toward the satisfaction of that particular note, it would be a circumstance tending, in some degree at least, to establish by presumption that the payments, when they were subsequently actually made by the defendant S. W. Scott, without any intermediate change of his first intention, were to be so applied; and in this view we think that the proffered evidence ought to have been admitted.' See Eppinger v. Kendrick, 114 Cal. 620, 625, 46 Pac. 613; 2 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 444.

[4] "Nor need the communication to the creditor by the debtor of the latter's intention or desire to apply the payments toward the extinction of a particular obligation be expressed in writing, or in any technical or formal words, or delivered in any particular manner. 'It will be sufficient that the intention is manifest, and that it comes to the knowledge of the other party.' Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 448. It therefore necessarily follows that the communication may be shown by parol, whether made at the time of performance or at the time when the obligation as to which the direction was intended to operate was created and its terms committed to writing, or at any time between the date of the making of the obligation and that of payments to the payee.

[5] "It is very true, as counsel for the appellant declares, that the terms of a written instrument cannot be altered or varied by a parol agreement. This is, of course, an elementary rule. But, obviously, the effect of testimony disclosing a direction by a debtor to his creditor to apply payments to the extinction of a particular obligation of several the former is under to the latter is not to modify or vary in the slightest degree the terms of the writing. In the case at bar the defendants do not deny the due execution of the notes in suit or challenge the legal stability thereof in any respect. Indeed, they expressly admit the due execution of the notes; that they signed the same, and thus became legally bound to the obligations thereof. In legal effect, their resistance to recovery upon the notes is wholly founded upon the claim that sufficient payments of money had been made by Cavagnaro & Co. to the bank to satisfy the notes, and that the bank had wrongfully refused and failed to credit the notes with such payments. Their position is, in other words, no different in principle from the case where the maker of a promissory note has made payments on such note, thereby reducing the amount due thereon, which payments, however, had not been credited on the note by the payee. In such case, of course, no one will dispute the maker's right to resist payment of the original amount of the note, or his right to show such payments by parol testimony, nor will it be claimed that the effect of thus showing such payments would be to alter or vary the terms of the note. At any rate, our conclusion is that, if the evidence discloses that, contemporaneously with the execution of the notes, the makers thereof manifested or communicated to the bank their desire that the moneys received by the bank from Cavagnaro & Co. should be applied as indicated, it was the duty of the bank to so apply such moneys; that its failure to do so under the stated circumstances involved a violation of the rights of the defendants under the terms of section 1479 of the Civil Code; and that, since the notes themselves do not indicate the order of their payment with respect to other like obligations which Cavagnaro & Co. were under to the bank, it was competent to show such direction or communication by parol testimony. Hagood v. Swords, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 305; Grogan et al. v. Valley Trading Co., 30 Mont. 229, 76 Pac. 211, 213; Safer v. Lambert, 111 Ill. App. 410, 412; Frutig v. Trafton, 2 Cal. App. 47, 48, 83 Pac. 70.

"That the so-called oral agreement in question must be held to have involved a direction by the debtor to the bank to apply the moneys received by it from Cavagnaro & Co. in the manner and order explained, cannot be doubted.

[6] "The contention of the plaintiff that no evidence was introduced disclosing that the principal debtor, Cavagnaro & Co., took any part in the making of the oral agreement or the direction that said moneys should be applied as stated is not borne out by the record. The witness Gates testified that he was president and manager of said corporation at the time it became insolvent, in October, 1905; that he attended to all its affairs at that time, and also in the year 1906; that he was present as a representative of Cavagnaro & Co. when the oral agreement was had with the bank's manager, Mr. Tognazzini, and participated therein; and that subsequently he apprised Mr. Brunner, an official of the bank, who, it was admitted, had authority to act for the plaintiff, of the understanding that the moneys paid by Cavagnaro & Co. should be applied upon the notes in suit, after the note for $4,780.94 was satisfied.

[7] "It is true that it does not affirmatively appear what the precise scope or limitations of Gates' authority were as president and manager of Cavagnaro & Co., but we have a right to infer, from the fact that he was the corporation's president and manager, and from the fact that he attended to and managed all its affairs both before and after it became embarrassed from financial difficulties, that he possessed full authority to act for and bind it on the occasion of the making of the oral agreement, and that his election, manifested to the bank, at the time referred to, as to the manner and order of the application of the moneys paid by Cavagnaro & Co. to the bank, was that of the latter; it being clear that said transaction involved an act within the ordinary or usual course of business of said corporation. Martin v. Webb, 110 U. S. 7, 3 Sup. Ct. 428, 28 L. Ed. 49;

Carpy v. Dowdell et al., 115 Cal. 677, 47 Pac. 695; Waterman on Corporations, § 30; Preston v. Central Cal. Irr. Co., 11 Cal. App. 190, 104 Pac. 462; Stevens v. Selma Fruit Company, 18 Cal. App. 242, 251, 123 Pac. 212.

[8, 9] "It is next claimed that certain testimony was erroneously permitted to go to the jury, and that its effect was to prejudice the jury against the plaintiff. The testimony of which complaint is thus made and which was brought out, over the objection of the plaintiff, in the examination of the defendants' witness Reynolds, who was connected with Hilbert Mercantile Company at the time of the transactions concerned here, tended to show, so it is urged, that the bank, although entering into the agreement with the other creditors of Cavagnaro & Co. to accept in full settlement of all claims against said corporation payments on the basis of 35 cents on the dollar, had in fact received payment in full of all indebtedness of Cavagnaro & Co. to it. It is manifest that such testimony could have no relevant bearing upon the issues made by the pleadings. It appears, however, that the only testimony showing or tending to show that the bank received more than 35 cents on the dollar was brought out in the cross-examination of the defendants' witness Gates, by counsel for the plaintiff himself. Having stated, on cross-examination by the plaintiff's attorney, that the bank had received in settlement of Cavagnaro & Co.'s indebtedness to it the full amount thereof, that witness, still under cross-examination, was asked by a juror: 'Was there anybody else excepting the bank who got 100 cents?' To which question the witness replied, no objection having been interposed thereto: 'Not that I know of.' The witness Reynolds was thereafter asked by the attorney for the defendants, and permitted, against the objections of the plaintiff, to answer, the following questions: 'Did you know anything about the existence of the $8,750 note other than the $4,700 35 per cent. note at the time these notes were being signed in the office of the Swiss-American Bank? A. I did not. I learned of that after the fire. Q. Did you know that the bank was receiving, or was to receive, anything more than 35 per cent.? A. I did not.' Thus it will be observed that Reynolds did not himself say that the bank was receiving in settlement of Cavagnaro & Co.'s indebtedness to it an amount in excess of that compounded by the creditors of the former. While the questions thus put to the witness assumed the truth or existence of the fact to the proof of which they were addressed, and were for that reason improper, even though it was true that the bank received more than it agreed to accept, since, as stated, such testimony was wholly irrelevant to the issues, yet it cannot be said, in view of the fact that counsel for the plaintiff himself brought out the fact on cross-examination or without objection permitted a juror to bring it out, that the questions to Reynolds or the form in which they were propounded could have added to or intensified the injury which the plaintiff had thus already inflicted upon himself.

"We have found no occasion for remanding the cause, and the judgment and the order are accordingly affirmed."

[10] Subsequently the case was reheard, and the learned District Court, while adhering to its original views, reversed the judgment and order upon the grounds: (1) That the lower court tried the case upon the erroneous theory that the sole consideration which moved the defendants to become parties to the notes was the oral agreement; and (2) that an instruction given by the trial court evidenced this theory and misstated the law to the injury of the plaintiff. A hearing in this court was granted in order that we might further consider these points.

Examining the pleadings, we find that the answer does not set up the oral agreement as the sole consideration for the signing of the note by defendants. The first defense pleaded to each note is that said note, both principal and interest, had been paid. To each note there is set up in the answer a defense based upon the verbal understanding with reference to the order of payment of the obligation of the F. Cavagnaro Company and the fact that sufficient money had been received by the bank on account of said company to pay the notes in suit if the credit had been applied in the agreed manner. This part of the pleading is set forth in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, which we have quoted above. When proof of the oral agreement was offered, however, the objection interposed by plaintiff was that the execution of a contract in writing supersedes all the negotiations which preceded or accompanied the making and signing of the instrument, and that proof of the oral agreement therefore was not admissible to vary the terms of the note. The court below held that the proffered evidence of the oral agreement was admissible on the ground that it constituted the sole consideration for the notes in suit. The ground of this ruling was admittedly erroneous, but the ruling itself was nevertheless correct. The agreement or understanding pleaded by defendants did not alter nor modify the terms of the notes. Therefore appellant's objection to its introduction in evidence was untenable. It was admissible under section 1479 of the Civil Code. But the court manifested further by an instruction the theory upon which the case was tried.

[11] The instruction was as follows:

"You are hereby instructed that, if you believe from the evidence that at the time the notes in suit were executed, and as the sole consideration therefor, there was an agreement between the defendants and the Swiss-American Bank that any moneys coming into the hands of said bank from F. Cavagnaro Company would be applied first to the note for $4,780.94 due from the F. Cavagnaro Company to the said bank, and then the balance to the payment of the two notes in suit, and if you further believe from the evidence that there subsequently came into the hands of the said Swiss-American Bank a sufficient sum to pay the said note for $4,780.94, and also the two notes in suit, if such application had been made, your verdict should be in favor of the defendants."

This instruction was erroneous, for the reason stated in the quoted opinion of the District Court of Appeal; namely, because it sought to confine the jury to the oral agreement as the sole consideration for the acts of the defendants in signing the notes. But defendants assert that plaintiff was not prejudiced by the instruction, which placed upon the defendants the burden of proving both the existence of the agreement, and also that it was the sole consideration for the notes in suit. But appellant says he was entitled to have submitted to the jury directly the question whether or not the oral agreement involved a direction to the bank by the debtors for the application of the payments to the satisfaction of particular obligations. The instruction does not submit that question to the jury. There was no dispute at the trial regarding these facts: (1) The bank had loaned to the Cavagnaro Company the money represented by the notes; (2) defendants had signed the notes; (3) enough money had been collected on account of the Cavagnaro Company to pay the notes if applied according to the wishes of the defendants. The sole question pertinent to the oral arrangement which the court should have propounded to the jury was whether or not there had been a direction for the payment of the notes in the order for which defendants contended. The quoted instruction involves that very matter and more. It seems to us, therefore, that the subject of "sole consideration" may be eliminated from the instruction, and it will state correctly the law regarding application of payments.

[12] Appellant makes the further objection that the instruction refers to an agreement between the defendants and the bank, and therefore is not by its terms applicable to a direction to the bank by the debtor, the F. Cavagnaro Company, regarding the order of settlement of the latter's notes. Of course, no agreement between the plaintiff's assignor and the defendants without the concurrence of the debtor, the F. Cavagnaro Company, would bring the facts of the case under the provisions of section 1479 of the Civil Code. But we do not think the jurors were misled by the careless and inaccurate use of the word "defendants." All of the proof was directed to an agreement between the bank and all of the parties to the notes relative to the order of payment. There was no testimony regarding any agreement between the bank and the Borgfeldts without the other parties to the note, including the debtor; and the jury could not have been misled in reference to the "agreement" mentioned by the court in the instruction. Assuming that the court did adopt an erroneous theory upon the subject of the consideration for the notes (although appellant himself offered an instruction by which the court's attention was directed to section 1479, Civil Code, but which was rejected for certain erroneous statements of the law), the fact remains that the jury, considered and determined the one vital question in the case; i. e., was there the direction by the debtor to the bank that the notes of the F. Cavagnaro Company should be paid in the order specified in the answer?

For the reasons given in the original opinion of the District Court of Appeal and those which we have added, the judgment and order are affirmed.

DAM v. SUPERIOR COURT OF ALAMEDA COUNTY. (S. F. 7136.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1915.)

CERTIORARI ⇨64—SCOPE OF REVIEW—JURISDICTIONAL QUESTIONS.

In a certiorari proceeding to review an order of the superior court vacating a decree of partial distribution in the matter of the estate of a decedent, the court could determine only whether, as alleged in the petition, the superior court exceeded its jurisdiction in making the order, and not whether the order was otherwise erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Certiorari, Cent. Dig. §§ 174, 175, 183, 184; Dec. Dig. ⇨64.]

In Bank. Certiorari by F. H. Dam against the Superior Court of Alameda County. Ordered that submission be vacated and matter placed on calendar.

F. H. Dam, of San Francisco, in pro. per.

PER CURIAM. A writ of certiorari was issued herein by this court upon the complaint of the petitioner that respondent had exceeded its jurisdiction in making an order vacating a decree of partial distribution theretofore made by it in the matter of the estate of George W. Mitchell, deceased. No return on the writ has been made to this court by respondent, but in lieu thereof the matter was submitted by the parties for decision upon a stipulation setting forth certain agreed facts. We find upon an examination of this stipulation that the only questions submitted thereby for decision are questions that in no way pertain to the question to consider which the writ issued, viz., that of alleged excess of jurisdiction in the making of the order complained of. We are, in effect, asked simply to determine whether the original decree of partial distribution attempted to be vacated by the order complained of was erroneous in certain respects. Such questions are not within the proper scope of a proceeding of this character, and we cannot consider them. The only question to be determined by this court in this proceeding is whether in making the order complained of the superior court exceeded its jurisdiction.

It is ordered that the submission herein be vacated, and the matter placed upon the calendar for Monday, March 1, 1915.

MARSHALL & STEARNS CO. v. DENEEN BLDG. CO. (PAUSON et al., Interveners.) (S. F. 6269.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1915.)

1. NEW TRIAL ⇨122—MOTION—NOTICE—NECESSITY—ADVERSE PARTIES—APPEAL.

Where, in an action against a corporation and individuals to foreclose a materialman's lien, wherein certain persons intervened, judgment was rendered against the corporation alone and for the interveners for costs, and foreclosure of the lien was denied, and it appeared that the granting of a new trial might make it necessary to relitigate matters pertaining to the rights of the individual defendants who were not served with notice of intention to move for a new trial, such defendants were adverse parties to the motion, and, since the trial court for want of such service was without jurisdiction to grant a new trial, the Supreme Court could not disturb the order denying same.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. § 232; Dec. Dig. ¶ 122.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶ 222 — PRESENTATION BELOW—NECESSITY—JURISDICTIONAL DEFECT.

Since failure to serve a motion for new trial on necessary parties involved a jurisdictional defect, it was available at any time and was not waived by the failure of such parties to present the point in the lower court.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by Marshall & Stearns Company, a corporation, against J. A. Deneen and others, wherein J. W. Pauson and others intervene. Judgment denying certain relief to plaintiff, and for interveners for costs, and, from denial of new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Joseph E. Bien, of San Francisco, for appellant. A. L. Weil, of San Francisco, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff appeals from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

The action was one brought to foreclose a lien for materials furnished and used in the construction of a certain building in the city and county of San Francisco known as the "Cornelia Hotel Apartments." The complaint alleged that J. A. Deneen and N. M. Deneen were the owners of the real property upon which the said building was constructed; that they contracted with the Deneen Building Company to erect the building; and that the agreement upon which the materials were furnished was one made by and between the plaintiff and the Deneen Building Company. The three Pausons, Lowenstein, and Seeley intervened as owners of the fee.

The court found that at all times mentioned in the complaint Morris Siminoff was the owner of the land therein described; that, prior to the making of the contract between the Deneen Building Company and the plaintiff, Morris Siminoff entered into an agreement with J. A. Deneen to sell to him the real property described in the complaint for $52,000; that neither J. A. nor N. M. Deneen ever contracted with the Deneen Building Company to construct the building described in the complaint; that on the 16th day of October, 1906, plaintiff and the Deneen Building Company entered into the contract pleaded; that, with the exception of certain tables which were never affixed to the building, the materials described in plaintiff's claim of lien had been furnished by that corporation to the Deneen Building Company and had been actually used in the building on the land described in the complaint; that only a part of the contract price had been paid; that plaintiff had performed all of the terms of its contract; that on January 21, 1908, J. A. and N. M. Deneen duly filed notice of completion of the building on behalf of the owners; that, within three days after he had obtained knowledge of the construction and intended construction of the building referred to in plaintiff's complaint, Morris Siminoff, as owner of the land therein described, posted a notice in a conspicuous place on said land that he would not be responsible to laborers or materialmen for any work or materials furnished on the building; that on the 1st day of October, 1907, and before plaintiff had furnished any materials for the building, J. A. Deneen and N. M. Deneen executed to the interveners a deed of trust as security for a loan of $50,000; that on January 29, 1908, in accordance with said deed of trust and upon the same security the further sum of $30,000 was loaned by the interveners to the Deneens; that on or about March 26, 1908, the Deneens having defaulted in the performance of the terms of the deed of trust, the property described in said deed was sold by the trustees to the interveners; that subsequently the interveners, pursuant to order of court in that behalf given, paid to the estate of Morris Siminoff, deceased, the amount due for the land under Siminoff's contract with J. A. Deneen, and took conveyance of the said land from said estate; and that the money paid to the estate of Siminoff was used by the executors to discharge the lien of a mortgage on the land which had existed from a time long prior to the making of the contract between Siminoff and the Deneens. The judgment in accordance with the findings of fact and conclusions of law was that the plaintiff take nothing by its action in so far as the foreclosure of its asserted lien was concerned; that judgment be entered in favor of plaintiff against the Deneen Building Company for $6,541.35 with interest; and that interveners should recover their costs. It was recited in the judgment that there was no appearance at the trial for the defendants. The default of N. M. Deneen had been previously entered.

[1] The respondents assert that the order denying the motion for a new trial must be affirmed for the reason that the court below had no jurisdiction to grant a new trial. It is the contention of respondents that where, as here, the notice of intention to move for a new trial was not served upon all of the interested parties, this court is without power to disturb the order denying the motion. The record contains a notice addressed to the interveners only, and there is no showing that the other litigants were served. If they were "adverse parties" within the meaning of the decisions, undoubtedly this case comes under the rule announced in such cases as Niles v. Gonzalez, 155 Cal. 362, 100 Pac. 1080; but it is contended by appellant that, since the defendants did not appear at the trial, they were neither "adverse" nor "necessary" parties, that they all disclaimed interest in the property in question, and the court found that they had no interest. The money judgment against the Deneen Building Company for the amount due on that corporation's contract with plaintiff would not be changed, say appellant's counsel, if a new trial were ordered upon the issue litigated by the intervening respondents, namely, whether or not a lien should be foreclosed upon their property. It is not questioned by respondents that failure to serve all the parties is of no moment if the questions raised by the appeal may be determined without affecting the interests of the parties unserved. This rule is announced in such cases as Bell v. San Francisco Savings Union, 153 Cal. 71, 94 Pac. 225, and Bell v. Staacke, 159 Cal. 195, 115 Pac. 221. But the respondents insist that none of the findings attacked by appellant could be modified or set aside without affecting the interests of at least two of the unserved defendants. In this behalf they quote from Herriman v. Menzies, 115 Cal. 26, 44 Pac. 661, 35 L. R. A. 318, 56 Am. St. Rep. 81:

"The superior court can have no jurisdiction to re-examine an issue of fact that it has tried, and change its decision thereon, unless all the parties to the issue and former decision are properly before it."

An examination of the findings convinces us that the position taken by respondents is correct.

The first finding attacked is one to the effect that:

"Neither J. A. Deneen nor N. M. Deneen entered into a contract with Deneen Building Company to erect a building on the land described in plaintiff's complaint."

If we should reverse the order of the lower court on the grounds presented by appellant—that this finding is unsupported by the evidence, but if supported that the testimony upon which it was based was erroneously admitted—we would affect the rights of the unserved Deneens and the Deneen Building Company. No judgment was entered against either of the Deneens, but a money judgment was given against Deneen Building Company. It is true that none of the defendants appeared at the trial, but this does not alter the fact that if a new trial were granted it would be necessary to relitigate matters pertaining to their rights. It might well be that on a new trial the court might find the existence of a contract between the Deneens and the Building Company by the terms of which the individuals had agreed to assume the debts of the corporation, and the money judgment might be given against the Deneens instead of against the Deneen Building Company.

Or the money judgment might be again given against the corporation but with additional costs. There is a finding that the Deneens duly filed notice of the completion of the building on behalf of the owners. Appellant insists that the court should have found the Deneens to have been the "reputed owners" of the building. It will be seen at once that, under the changed finding which appellant demands, the rights of the Deneens would be entirely different from those which they might have under the existing judgment.

Appellant asserts that there is no evidence to sustain that part of one of the findings which is that the claim of lien filed by plaintiff on February 20, 1908, did not state the name of the owner of the property. We may not review this contention for the same reason stated above—that the rights of unserved defendants are involved. In the complaint it was averred that the Deneens were at all times alleged therein the owners of the property in question. Surely a finding supporting that allegation would injuriously affect them.

It is not necessary to analyze all of the findings reviewed by appellant and specified by counsel as erroneous. We have carefully examined them and conclude that they all involve matters in respect to which unserved defendants are necessary parties. We must hold accordingly that the failure to serve notice of motion for new trial upon adverse parties necessitated the denial of that motion in the superior court and on this appeal requires this court to affirm the order denying such motion. Johnson v. Phenix Ins. Co., 152 Cal. 197, 92 Pac. 182; Estate of Young, 149 Cal. 176, 85 Pac. 145.

[2] There is no merit in the contention that respondents waived their right to raise the question of want of service of the motion for a new trial upon necessary parties by failing to present the point in the lower court. It must be remembered that the failure to serve all parties to the issue involves a jurisdictional defect which is available at any time and in any court in which the cause may be pending.

The order denying appellant's motion for a new trial is affirmed.

SWAYNE & HOYT v. WELLS-RUSSELL & CO. (S. F. 6835.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1915.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR — 189—OBJECTIONS IN LOWER COURT — AFFIDAVIT FOR CONTINUANCE.

Defects in an affidavit for a continuance filed for the absence of a witness, under Code Civ. Proc. § 595, which could be cured by amendment, are deemed waived where not raised by objection below.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1153-1154½, 1205-1215; Dec. Dig. —189.]

2. CONTINUANCE $\hookrightarrow$ 22 — RIGHT TO — ABSENT WITNESS.

Defendant's counsel on September 12th agreed that the case should be set for trial on September 14th, provided the attendance of a certain witness could be procured. On September 14th plaintiff's counsel did not appear, and defendant's counsel requested a continuance to procure the witness' attendance. A continuance was granted until the following day, when the court refused to further continue the case according to stipulation of both counsel. Held that, while the granting of a continuance is a matter resting largely in the discretion of the trial court, its refusal to consent to a delay to procure the attendance of the witness, who lived at a distance, was error.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; C. W. Norton, Judge.

Action by Swayne & Hoyt against Wells-Russell & Co. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Order reversed.

Metson, Drew & Mackenzie, of San Francisco (R. G. Hudson, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant. Ornbaum & Fraser, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The defendant has appealed from an order denying its motion for a new trial. The only point presented by the record is that the court below erred in denying the application of the defendant to postpone the trial from September 15 to September 30, 1911. The case depends upon the sufficiency of the affidavit filed in support of the application for a continuance, taken in connection with the issues and previous proceedings in the case.

The plaintiff sued the defendant for money had and received, alleging that plaintiff operated a steamer carrying passengers to and from San Francisco and Arena Cove, Mendocino county, Cal.; that the defendant operated a public wharf at Arena Cove, and also, in virtue of an agreement between plaintiff and defendant, the latter acted as ticket agent for the plaintiff to sell tickets for passage on its steamer; that from September 29, 1908, to November 30, 1909, defendant sold tickets for plaintiff for sums aggregating $2,833, of which it paid to the plaintiff $2,301.95, and for which it was entitled to commissions of $141.65, leaving due to the plaintiff and unpaid $389.40. The defendant admitted the receipt and payment of said sums of money, and that it was entitled to the commissions as stated, but it alleged as a defense that, in addition to selling tickets, it had performed various other services for the plaintiff at its request, which were of the reasonable value of $389.40, and that it had from time to time rendered monthly accounts of the sales of tickets and of the services rendered, showing that nothing was due to the plaintiff, which accounts were acquiesced in by the plaintiff, so that the same became an account stated.

After the case was at issue and had been placed on the calendar to be set for trial, difficulty was encountered in finding a time when it could be tried by the regular judges of San Francisco county, whereupon it was transferred to an "extra session" held by a judge of another county. On September 12, 1911, the counsel for plaintiff and defendant agreed that the case should be set down for trial on September 14, 1911, but counsel for defendant agreed thereto upon the express condition that the trial should not proceed at that time if defendant was unable to procure the attendance of its wharfinger at Arena Cove as a witness. The next day, ascertaining that the attendance of said witness could not be procured defendant's counsel informed the plaintiff's counsel of that fact, and they thereupon agreed that the case might be continued until a later date, but did not obtain the approval of the court to that agreement. On September 14th, at the time set for the trial, defendant's counsel appeared, but counsel for the plaintiff was absent. Thereupon defendant's counsel stated the foregoing circumstances, and requested a continuance, upon which the court continued the trial until 10 o'clock of September 15, 1911. On September 15th counsel for both parties appeared and joined in a request for a continuance. The court denied the same, and set the cause for trial at 1:30 p. m. of that day, and announced that the cause would not be continued, except upon a "legal showing." At the time fixed the defendant's counsel presented the affidavit upon which the continuance was asked. After stating the foregoing facts the affidavit proceeded to say that, by reason of the distance which must be traveled and the means of travel from San Francisco to Arena Cove, and because of his business engagements, it was impossible to obtain the presence of said witness at that time; that the witness was the agent of defendant in sole charge of its business at Arena Cove, and could not leave said place without first procuring some person to take charge of the business during his absence; that the defendant must rely upon his testimony to show the conditions and terms of business dealings between plaintiff and defendant, and to show the actual business conducted and carried on between plaintiff and defendant under the contract alleged in the complaint; that on behalf of defendant affiant had used diligence in attempting to secure the witness' presence, but it had been impossible to do so because of the inaccessibility of Arena Cove and the impossibility of arranging, in the 4 days' time, for a person to take the place of said witness and to get the witness to San Francisco at the time last set for trial. Prior to the filing of this affidavit a written stipulation between the parties for a continuance of the case from September 15th to September 30th was filed.

The plaintiff had no witnesses present, and had to send for them when the application was denied. Evidently it had expected that the postponement would be granted.

[1, 2] Upon this showing and under the conditions at the time existing, we think it was the duty of the court to have granted the continuance applied for. In determining this question it is necessary to consider both the nature of the issues joined and the prior negotiations between the parties relating to the time of trial, as well as the facts stated in the affidavit. On September 12th defendant's attorney agreed to the trial in the very short time of two days, upon the express condition that it should not proceed unless he was able to procure the witness, and to this the plaintiff had agreed. It appears from the affidavit filed in support of the motion for a new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court that the plaintiff's attorney had relied upon the agreement between them, and did not attend on the 14th at the time set for trial. When the court refused to make the continuance for a longer time than 24 hours, the defendant's counsel, as soon as he could do so, informed plaintiff's counsel of that fact, and it was then agreed between them that a continuance should be had for 15 days. Defendant had a right to rely upon this understanding and to refrain from further efforts in the meantime to secure the attendance of the witness. The affidavit shows that it was impossible to get the witness to San Francisco within the short time intervening between that hour and the time of trial, or within the 2 days between the 12th and 14th of the month. It states in perhaps too general terms the evidence expected from the absent witness. The defense was that statements of account had been rendered monthly by the witness as agent of the defendant at Arena Cove, and that these had become an account stated showing nothing due to the plaintiff. The affidavit states that the witness was in sole charge of the business. It would necessarily follow that he alone could have a first-hand knowledge of the material facts alleged in the defense. No objection to the form or sufficiency of the affidavit in this respect was made below. If it had been made the defect could have been immediately cured if the court below had so required. Code Civ. Proc. § 595. Under these circumstances it must be deemed to have been waived.

While it is true that the matter of a continuance is largely in the discretion of the trial court, and that postponements of trials are not favored, we think the facts of this case disclose a clear abuse of discretion. If the period intervening between the time of the setting for trial and the time set for trial had been longer, perhaps a greater degree of diligence would have been necessary on the part of the defendant, but the time was extremely short, and it was fixed upon a condition, for the benefit of the defendant, which had failed. In view of all these circumstances we think it was clearly entitled to a continuance as applied for.

The order denying a new trial is reversed.

1. NEW TRIAL $\S$ 116—TIME TO MOVE.

Plaintiff obtained a verdict for $4,500, but, on defendant's motion, judgment was entered for plaintiff for only $405. This was reversed on appeal, and judgment was ordered to be entered on the verdict. Held, that defendant's time to move for new trial began to run on notice of entry of the second judgment.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 1202—EFFECT OF AFFIRMANCE—GRANT OF NEW TRIAL—INSUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

An affirmance of a judgment will not preclude the trial court from subsequently granting a new trial for insufficiency of the evidence, though such point was presented on the appeal; the trial court having discretionary power to vacate a verdict on that ground which is beyond attack on appeal.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Annie Bond against the United Railroads of San Francisco, a corporation. From an order striking from the files defendant's notice of intention to move for a new trial, it appeals. Reversed.

William M. Abbott and William M. Cannon, both of San Francisco (Kingsley W. Cannon, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant. Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The defendant appeals from an order striking from the files its notice of intention to move for a new trial.

The action was one to recover damages for the death of the plaintiff's son. At the trial the jury returned a general verdict in favor of plaintiff for $4,500. It also returned its verdict on certain special issues. The defendant moved the court, among other things, to direct entry of judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $405, and the court granted the motion. Judgment was entered accordingly on December 17, 1908. From this judgment the plaintiff appealed to this court, which, on January 11, 1911, made its order reversing the judgment appealed from and directing the superior court to enter judgment upon the verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $4,500. Bond v. United Railroads, 159 Cal. 270, 113 Pac. 366, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 687, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 50. The remittitur going down, the lower court, on February 16, 1911, entered judgment in favor of plaintiff for $4,500. Thereafter the defendant served and filed its notice of intention to move for a new trial, and it is this notice which was, on motion of the plaintiff, ordered stricken from the files.

[1] The motion was based on the ground that the notice was not served or filed within the time allowed by law. The sole question is whether defendant's time to give notice of intention to move for a new trial began to run when it had notice of the entry of the first judgment (for $405), or when it had such notice of the entry of the $4,500 judgment. If the former, the notice was served and filed too late; if the latter, it was in time.

Section 659 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1907, provides that:

"The party intending to move for a new trial must, within ten days after receiving notice of the entry of the judgment, file with the clerk and serve upon the adverse party a notice of his intention. * * *

Where, as here, there have been two judgments, the latter superseding the earlier, which of the two is "the judgment" referred to in this section? It may aid in the solution of this question to suppose that the first judgment had been in favor of the defendant absolutely. Would such defendant be required to move for a new trial of a case which had been determined in his favor, or could he wait to assail the verdict or decision until there was a judgment which affected him injuriously? The more reasonable and sensible construction of the statute, we think, is to permit a party to withhold his application for a new trial until there has been a judgment against him. The respondent cites Brady v. Feisil, 54 Cal. 180, as holding the contrary. But when that case was decided section 659 required the notice of intention to be served and filed "within ten days after the verdict of the jury, or after notice of the decision of the court or referee, if the action were tried without a jury." The time for serving and filing the notice had no reference to the entry of the judgment, which is made the starting point of the time under the section as it now stands. Furthermore, whether or not Brady v. Feisil can properly be regarded as overruled or discredited as stated in the opinion (subsequently vacated by an order for rehearing) in Tuffree v. Stearns Ranchos Co., 54 Pac. 826, we think the view that the time runs from notice of entry of the second judgment finds adequate support in the decision of Klauber v. San Diego Street Car Co., 98 Cal. 105, 32 Pac. 876. There a judgment had been entered on the findings in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff had appealed, and this court had reversed the judgment and directed the entry of a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and such judgment had been entered. The defendant thereupon presented a bill of exceptions, and the same was settled. Upon the hearing of an appeal taken by defendant from the second judgment, it was held that the bill of exceptions was properly settled and could be considered. "Section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure," says the court, "provides that a party who desires to have the exceptions taken at a trial settled in a bill may, within ten days after receiving notice of the judgment, prepare a draft thereof, and have the same settled by the judge. A judgment is the final determination of the rights of the parties to an action or proceeding, and, as there can be only one final judgment in an action, if for any reason a judgment that has been entered is vacated, and another judgment entered in lieu thereof, this last judgment becomes the only one in the case, and the notice of its entry is the point of time from which the right to have a bill of exceptions settled begins to run." See, also, Sala v. City of Pasadena, 162 Cal. 714, 722, 124 Pac. 539. Section 650 has been amended since the decision in the Klauber Case, but not in such manner as to affect the question under consideration. The words of that section are the same, in substance, as those now used in section 659 to define the time within which the acts authorized by the respective sections may be done, and we see no reason why those words should not be given a like meaning in the two instances. Under section 650, the bill is to be prepared by the party who "desires to have exceptions settled." This will, of course, be the party seeking to attack the judgment or order. Section 659 imposes the duty of giving notice of intention upon "the party intending to move for a new trial." Why should a party who has had judgment in his favor desire or intend to move for a new trial? While the proceeding for new trial attacks the verdict or findings rather than the judgment, and is, in a sense, collateral to the judgment (Spanagel v. Dellinger, 38 Cal. 284; Union Coll. Co. v. Oliver, 162 Cal. 755, 124 Pac. 435), it will, if successful, vacate the judgment, and that is, in fact, its ultimate purpose.

The fact that the first judgment, like the second, was in favor of the plaintiff, although for a smaller sum, does not, in our view, alter the situation. The judgment for $405 was entered upon the motion of the defendant. We need not consider whether this circumstance would have deprived such defendant of the right to attack the judgment. Assuming that it might have moved for a new trial, it had the right to accept the existing situation as satisfactory to it, and this it did. When that judgment was vacated, and a new one, much more burdensome to the defendant, was entered, an entirely different condition was presented. An additional liability, amounting to over $4,000, was imposed upon the defendant, which was, for the first time, confronted with the necessity of determining whether it desired to assail the verdict upon which the existence of this liability had been adjudicated. Upon receipt of the notice of the entry of the new judgment, the defendant had the right to determine whether it intended to move for a new trial, and its time for serving notice of such intention then began to run.

[2] The respondent suggested upon the oral argument that a motion for new trial could not serve any effective purpose, for these reasons: The second judgment has now become final by affirmance upon appeal. Bond v. United Railroads, 24 Cal. App. 157, 140 Pac. 982. The parties have stipulated that the bill of exceptions used on said appeal from the judgment may be used on the motion for new trial, if this court should reverse the order here under review. On such motion the moving party could, it is argued, raise only the points that have already been conclusively determined against it. But one of the grounds of motion for new trial is the insufficiency of the evidence. It is true that this point was made on the appeal from the judgment, and was held to be without merit. It is, however, thoroughly settled that the trial court has a much greater power than the appellate court to set aside verdicts for insufficiency. A verdict that would be beyond the reach of attack on appeal might be vacated in the discretion of the trial court. This discretion the losing party has a right to invoke, even though the evidence be such that an appellate court would not be justified in upsetting the verdict as unsupported.

The order is reversed.

In the matter of the application of John Lapique for a writ of habeas corpus. Writ denied.

John Lapique, of Orange, in pro. per. W. I. Foley and M. F. Shannon, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Petitioner was heretofore adjudged to be guilty of a contempt of court and ordered to pay a fine in the sum of $500, or in default thereof that he be imprisoned in the county jail of Los Angeles county for a period in the proportion of one day for each $2 of such fine, or until said fine be otherwise satisfied. He presents an application to be discharged from custody on writ of habeas corpus.

It appears from the order of commitment that in a certain proceeding heretofore pending in the superior court petitioner filed an affidavit in support of a motion for change of venue, the effect of which was to impute a lack of integrity, not only in the judge then sitting in the department in which said matter was to be heard, but attacking 11 other judges of the superior court. Many of the allegations contained in the affidavit were phrased as "upon information and belief." After this affidavit had been filed, an order to show cause was issued by the judge of the department, requiring petitioner to appear in another department of the same court and show reason why he should not be punished for contempt. Of the several objections urged to the sufficiency of the commitment but two seem to have any serious foundation, and both of these are completely answered by the decisions of our Supreme Court adversely to the claim of petitioner.

[1] The contention is: First, that the whole proceeding is void because no affidavit was presented to the judge who ordered the citation to be issued prior to the issuance thereof; and, second, that in no event could the imprisonment of petitioner extend beyond the period of five days, which is the maximum period where imprisonment alone is prescribed as the form of punishment under section 1218 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In the case of Ex parte Karlson, 160 Cal. 378, 117 Pac. 447, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1334, this latter contention was advanced, and the Supreme Court there held that a judgment in substantially the same form as was contained in the commitment under which petitioner is here held was regular, and that petitioner there was not entitled to be discharged, after having endured imprisonment for a period of five days.

[2] The other contention, to wit, that it was necessary, before the court was empowered to issue its citation against petitioner, that the facts constituting the alleged contempt be made to appear by affidavit is not well founded. The decision in the case of Lamberson v. Superior Court, 151 Cal. 458, 91 Pac. 100, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 619, deals extensively with that subject and a reading of it leaves no room for question that the law is well established to the contrary of this objection urged by petitioner to the sufficiency of the commitment.

[3] The right of the petitioner to have asked for a change of venue upon the grounds relied upon by him was a statutory right which is both granted and limited by the terms of subdivision 4 of section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Those provisions do not authorize the moving party to include with his statements concerning the judge who is about to try the case, an attack upon other judges of the court. The statements made with reference to the other judges were immaterial to the motion, and were a scurrilous and wanton attack, wholly beyond the right or privilege of the petitioner.

No sufficient cause appears entitling petitioner to be released from custody.

The writ is discharged, and petitioner remanded to the custody of the sheriff.

TOMASINI v. SMITH et al. (Civ. 1407.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⇨173—RATIFICATION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for the purchase price of machines bought by defendant's agent, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding of the trial court that defendant had ratified previously unauthorized acts of her agent in buying the machines.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 659-661; Dec. Dig. ⇨173.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1002—REVIEW—FINDINGS OF FACT—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Where there is sufficient evidence to sustain a finding either for or against a ratification of the unauthorized acts of an agent, a finding by the trial court that there was a ratification cannot be disturbed on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by A. F. Tomasini against Mabel Burdell Smith and her husband. Judgment for the plaintiff, and defendant Mabel Burdell Smith appeals. Affirmed.

Frank K. Lippitt, of Petaluma, for appellant. F. A. Meyer, of Petaluma, and Jas. P. Sweeney, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff and against defendant in an action to recover the sum of $509.35, the balance alleged to be due upon the purchase price of goods, wares, and merchandise sold by plaintiff to defendant Mabel Burdell Smith.

[1] Said defendant was engaged in operating as her separate property a dairy ranch in the county of Marin, consisting principally of grazing land and about 120 cows. Early in the year 1908, while she was absent from California, her foreman, one D. A. Walker, without her knowledge, changed the method of operating the ranch by the introduction of milking machines, purchased from the plaintiff; the milking up to that time having been performed by hand. In support of her appeal she contends, first, that it appears from the evidence that her agent Walker had no authority, express or implied, to purchase the machines; and in this contention we are inclined to agree. It is true that Walker previous to the transaction here involved, had purchased on her account a great many small articles, sometimes with express authority and sometimes without; but whenever this was done without authorization his action, by implication at least, was ratified. There is, however, nothing substantial in the record to warrant the conclusion that he was her actual agent in such matters, or that she had ever permitted anything to be done which would make him her ostensible agent, with power to change the method of operating the dairy in an essential respect, and to incur an indebtedness in one transaction of over $500, which, considering the small extent of the business, would be very large.

We do think, however, that there is sufficient in the evidence to sustain the finding that Mrs. Smith ratified the transaction, and so is bound by it. It appears from the evidence that, prior to the installation of these machines, Walker was having trouble to get men to milk the cows; and it is inferable from the record that the use of these machines in a measure, if not wholly, obviated this difficulty, of which Mrs. Smith could not fail to be aware. Moreover, on her return after the absence mentioned, she did not repudiate the transaction, but permitted the machines to be operated for a while, and did not return them nor offer to return them to the plaintiff until 18 months after their purchase.

The record further discloses that in fact she paid $30 on account of their purchase price; that on one occasion she attempted to sell them; and that her first serious objection to them was not until she was pressed for payment.

[2] There is, it is true, evidence in the record which would sustain a contrary view; but, the trial court having accepted plaintiff's version of the facts, we are not at liberty to disregard its action and to say that a different conclusion should have been reached.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

MERCANTILE TRUST CO. OF SAN FRANCISCO v. DOE. (Civ. 1309.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 31, 1914. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court March 1, 1915.)

1. PLEADING ⚡362—STRIKING OUT—OPEN ACCOUNT—PAYMENTS.

Where a complaint alleged that the coal, for the price of which recovery was sought, was furnished upon an open account between the parties, and that the defendant had paid on the account two sums, which exactly equaled the charges for coal furnished during the first two months of the account, that fact does not establish, as a matter of law, that the payments were made in discharge of those two items, so that the allegations respecting them should be stricken from the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 1147-1155; Dec. Dig. ⚡362.]

2. PAYMENT ⚡38—APPLICATION—OPEN ACCOUNT.

Under Civ. Code, § 1479, the creditor on an open account can apply payments to the account generally, in the absence of a direction from the debtor for application to particular items.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Payment, Cent. Dig. §§ 99-103, 128; Dec. Dig. ⚡38.]

3. PLEADING ⚡49—COMPLAINT—"ACCOUNT STATED"—OPEN ACCOUNT.

A complaint which alleged that coal was furnished on an open book account, which account, on a certain date, was closed, and the balance struck, and the total sum thereof became due and payable on that date, does not allege an "account stated," which requires an agreement, express or implied, that the balance is correct, an action on which would be barred in two years by Code Civ. Proc. § 339, subd. 3, but states an action upon an open book account, which, under Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 2, is not barred for four years.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Account Stated.]

4. ACCOUNT, ACTION ON ⚡7—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action for the price of coal delivered to defendant at intervals, evidence held to establish that the coal was furnished, not in several separate transactions, but upon an open book account.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Account, Action on, Cent. Dig. §§ 13-17; Dec. Dig. ⚡7.]

5. ACCOUNT, ACTION ON ⚡2—"OPEN BOOK ACCOUNT."

An "open book account" is one which is continuous or current, uninterrupted or unclosed by settlement or otherwise, and it need not be proved that the defendant expressly agreed that the account should be an open one, if the circumstances attending the dealings between the parties show that it was.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Account, Action on, Cent. Dig. §§ 1, 2; Dec. Dig. ⚡2.]

6. ACCOUNT STATED ⚡6—MONTHLY STATEMENTS.

The fact that each transaction in a long series of sales was a separate sale and delivery, and that an account thereof was rendered to defendant each month, did not change the account from an open account to an account stated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Account Stated, Cent. Dig. §§ 30-39; Dec. Dig. ⚡6.]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡197—PRESENTING QUESTIONS IN LOWER COURT—VARIANCE.

Where plaintiff, in an action on an open account, offered evidence of statements rendered to the defendant, to show delivery and nonpayment, for which they were admissible, defendant cannot on appeal object for the first time that the evidence showed an account stated, and was therefore a variance from the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. ⚡197; Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 1428-1441.]

8. SALES ⚡360—ACTION FOR PRICE—VERDICT—AMOUNT.

Where a complaint sought recovery for the agreed purchase price of certain quantities of coal, specifying the number of tons delivered each month, but omitting fractions of a ton therefrom, and the total amount due for the coal delivered, and the evidence showed the price of the coal per ton, which amounted to the sum claimed in the complaint, which was computed on the amount of the coal furnished, including the fractions of tons, a verdict for that amount was not excessive to the extent of the price of the fractions of tons not mentioned in the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1060-1062; Dec. Dig. ⚡360.]

9. ACCOUNT, ACTION ON ⚡7—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY—PRIOR DEALINGS.

In an action on an open account, which the defendant contended was an account stated, evidence as to the course of business between the parties prior to the first item on the account was admissible to show the existence of the open account.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Account, Action on, Cent. Dig. §§ 13-17; Dec. Dig. ⚡7.]

10. EVIDENCE ⚡354—ACCOUNT BOOKS—DAY BOOK.

Where it was testified that entries as to sales of coal were made in the scale book at the time the coal was weighed, and on the same day transferred to the day book by the witness, and then checked with the tags given to the teamsters and returned by them after delivery, which tags were thereafter destroyed, the books were admissible to show the account.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1432-1483; Dec. Dig. ⚡354.]

11. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡930—PRESUMPTIONS—CONSIDERATION OF EVIDENCE.

Where the record shows that account books were received in evidence over defendant's objection, and they formed part of defendant's bill of exceptions, it must be presumed, in the absence of a record showing to the contrary, that the books were read to or by the jury and considered by them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3755-3761; Dec. Dig. 693.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. E. Prewett, Judge.

Action by the Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco, trustee under the last will and testament of Richard D. Chandler, deceased, against Charles P. Doe. Judgment for the plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hl. W. Glensor, of San Francisco, for appellant. Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. The cause of action is stated in two counts, in the first of which it is alleged, in the amended complaint, that Richard D. Chandler, at the instance and request of defendant, sold to defendant and delivered to the steamer Eureka, of which he was the managing owner, certain coal, to wit: Between December 4, 1907, and December 30, 1907, 203 tons, at the agreed price of $1,423.20; between the dates of January 4, 1908, and January 29, 1908, 212 tons, at the agreed price of $1,490.40; between February 3, 1908, and February 28, 1908, 197 tons, at the agreed price of $1,381.20; and between March 4, 1908, and March 28, 1908, he sold and delivered to defendant 184 tons for which defendant agreed to pay the sum of $1,292.15. It is alleged:

"That the total sum, so agreed to be paid by defendant on account of said coal bargained, sold, and delivered as aforesaid, is the sum of $5,586.95; that on or about the 28th day of March, 1908, said open book account was closed and a balance upon said open book account was struck and ascertained and the total sum due, owing, and unpaid on account of said balance was the sum of $5,586.95, and said last-named sum became due and payable on or about said last-named date;" that defendant paid on account of said balance the sum of $1,423.20 on July 20, 1908, and the further sum of $1,490.40 on November 13, 1908, and there remains due and unpaid the sum of $2,673.35.

The second count differs from the first count principally in alleging that the coal was of the reasonable value of the amount as in the first count stated. It is further alleged:

"That on or about the 28th day of March, 1908, the balance upon said open book account was struck, and the total sum due, owing, and unpaid on account of said balance was the sum of $5,586.95, and said last-named sum became due and payable on or about said last-named date."

The amended complaint is verified and was filed February 16, 1913. A special demurrer to the amended complaint, alleging uncertainty and ambiguity, and also pleading subdivision 1, § 339, Code of Civil Procedure, in bar of the action, was overruled. A motion to strike out certain parts of the amended complaint was denied, and defendant answered, making specific denials to most of its averments, denied that the amounts therein claimed were carried on the books of account of said Chandler "as an open book account, and defendant denies that said sum of $2,673.35 is and constitutes, or is, or constitutes the unpaid portion of a balance due on an open book account." As a separate defense alleges:

"That for many years prior to the death of said Richard D. Chandler defendant purchased certain goods, wares, and merchandise from said Chandler, to wit, coal; that each and every item of coal so purchased * * * was and constituted a separate and distinct transaction; and that, long prior to the commencement of this action, this defendant paid, or caused to be paid, to said Chandler, the purchase price in full for all coal sold and delivered by said Chandler prior to his death."

Defendant also pleaded that the action is barred by subdivision 1 of section 339, Code of Civil Procedure.

The cause was tried before a jury, and plaintiff had a verdict for the amount prayed for. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

It was admitted at the trial that, if there is any claim against defendant, plaintiff is the holder thereof.

Appellant's points are: That his motion to strike out should have been granted and his demurrer sustained; that the evidence does not sustain the verdict; that the judgment is excessive; and that the court erred in giving certain instructions and in certain rulings on the admission of testimony.

[1] The motion was to strike out the averments "respecting the delivery of coal alleged to have been made in December, 1907, and January, 1908, upon the ground that they were sham, irrelevant, and redundant matter, and further that the said amended complaint showed upon its face that the amounts therein sued for had been in fact paid." The argument is that "no other inference can be drawn from the pleading than that these were each separate items"; that "the items became due as the coal was delivered," and, as "the payments corresponded to the exact amount of the two items, it follows as matter of law they discharged the oldest obligation in point of time." Civ. Code, § 1479, par. 3, subd. 3.

The sufficient answer to these contentions, it seems to us, is found in the amended complaint which distinctly claims that the account was a continuing one and constituted an open account, and, whether or not this was true, plaintiff had the right to establish the fact by the evidence, and this right was not taken from him by the circumstance that payments, made long after all the coal was furnished, corresponded exactly with the value of coal furnished in a given month. Such coincidence would not necessarily change the account from an open to a closed account.

[2] If the account was an open one, as plaintiff alleged it was, it would be immaterial whether payments were applied to the earliest items or not. Plaintiff had the right to apply the payments to the account generally, under the section of the Code cited, unless the defendant, at the time of payment, indicated an intention that it should be applied to the extinction of a particular obligation, and defendant makes no contention that he gave any such directions. The evidence was that he gave none. It was not error to deny the motion.

[3] The demurrer is urged upon somewhat similar grounds. The contention is that "the complaint shows that the alleged account had become an account stated and is barred by the statute of limitations." Subdivision 1, § 339, Code Civ. Proc. It is argued that the averment of the amended complaint that on March 28, 1908, "the balance upon said open book account was struck and the total sum due, owing, and unpaid on account of said balance was the sum of $5,586.95, and said last-named sum became due and payable on or about said last-named date," can only be taken "to mean that the account was stated by the parties on that date"; that the "account could not be open and closed at the same time." If the case were here on the special demurrer alone, there might be some ground for invoking the rule that, where there is doubt or uncertainty as to the meaning of the complaint, it is construed most strongly against the pleader. But the case is here on this very issue alleged by plaintiff and denied by defendant, and evidence was taken on that issue. We do not think, however, that the amended complaint is open to the objection urged. A fair construction of the language used in stating what was done is entirely consistent with the account remaining an open book account on the day the balance was struck. The sufficiency of the complaint to state a cause of action on an open account is not challenged otherwise than as to its uncertainty.

It appears, from defendant's answer, that defendant had been purchasing coal from Chandler for many years, and the evidence was that the account had been carried along on Chandler's books sometimes for months; defendant paying from time to time, not always, an amount equaling deliveries for any given month or months. When the averment referred to is given full consideration, it means that the parties had ended their dealings with each other on March 28, 1908, and naturally a balance was struck, but it cannot fairly be said that, in doing so, what had been an open book account was, by so doing, changed to a stated account. Nor can we see how by any reasonable meaning given to the pleading that either count states a cause of action on an account stated. An account stated requires that there be an agreement, express or implied, that the balance is correct, and this agreement constitutes a new contract which takes the place of the original contract, whether open or closed. 1 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 437. The action was on an open book account and was commenced within four years and was not barred by the statute of limitations. Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 2.

[4] There was sufficient evidence, in our opinion, to justify the verdict that the quantity of coal of the value charged was delivered to defendant by Chandler at the times alleged, and that no payment, other than as alleged in the amended complaint, has been made. The only question about which there can exist any controversy is whether the account was, as alleged by plaintiff, an open book account, or whether, as defendant claimed in his answer, "each and every item of coal so purchased by defendant from said Chandler was and constituted a separate and distinct transaction," from which, as is contended, the inference necessarily followed (though it is not so alleged) that the account was a stated account and hence barred by the statute.

Defendant offered no evidence. What we know of the transaction comes entirely from the testimony of persons in the employment of Chandler at the time and from entries in his books of account. While defendant did not plead a stated account and alleged only that each item "constituted a separate and distinct transaction," it is perhaps immaterial whether, from defendant's standpoint, the account was stated or not, if in fact it was shown to be something other than an open book account, upon which latter character of the account plaintiff relied for recovery.

[5] There is no disagreement among the authorities as to what constitutes an open book account. In Anderson's Law Dictionary an open account is thus briefly defined:

"An account with one or more items unsettled; also an account with dealings still continuing."

Among the cases cited is Tucker v. Quimby, 37 Iowa, 17, to the effect that:

"An account to be 'continuous' must be without break or interruption. * * * 'Open' means 'not closed; 'current,' * * * 'running,' 'passing,' a 'connected' series. * * * A 'continuous, open, current account' is an account which is not interrupted or broken, not closed by settlement or otherwise, * * * a running, connected series of transactions."

In 1 Ruling Case Law, p. 207, it is said: "The expression 'outstanding and open account' has a well-defined and well-understood meaning. In legal and commercial transactions it is an unsettled debt arising from items of work and labor, goods sold and delivered, and other open transactions, not reduced to writing, and subject to future settlement and adjustment. It is usually disclosed by the account books of the owner of the demand, and does not include express contracts or obligations which have been reduced to writing, such as bonds, bills of exchange, or promissory notes."

In 1 Ency. L. & P. p. 363, it is stated:

"An open account is one which is continuous or current, uninterrupted or unclosed by settlement or otherwise, consisting of a series of transactions; also one in which some item in the contract is left open and undetermined by the parties, in which sense it may exist whether there be but one item or many."

It is stated in 1 Am. & Eng. Ency. of L. 435:

"An account is also open whenever there have been current dealings between the parties, which are kept unclosed with the expectation of further transactions between them."

Appellant contends that an open account cannot exist without the mutual agreement of the parties that the account between them shall be so treated, and that, as there is no direct evidence that defendant ever so agreed, there is no open account established. To constitute an account stated there must be an agreement, express or implied, between the parties as to the correctness of the items of the account and that the balance struck is correct, together with a promise, express or implied, for the payment of such balance. Id. p. 437. But herein lies the chief distinguishing characteristic differentiating a stated account from an open, current account. An open account does not necessarily arise from the agreement of the parties. One definition is that "an open account is an account not stated or agreed upon between the parties." Id. p. 435. It was not necessary that plaintiff should prove an express agreement by defendant that the account should be treated as an open account. As stated in Ruling Case Law, supra, "it is usually disclosed by the account books of the owner of the demand," and may be shown by the circumstances attending the dealings between the parties.

The evidence showed that the general course of business between the parties, which had been followed for a long time before December, 1907, and was continuous thereafter up to March 28, 1908, when coal was no longer delivered to the steamer Eureka, was that coal was furnished to defendant from time to time during each month on credit and indicating a continuous credit account on which defendant paid for previous deliveries more or less of the balance due from time to time.

[6] It is not reasonable to hold, as defendant contends should be held, that the account was a stated account because each separate delivery in this long series of sales constituted a separate transaction; there having been each month many separate sales and deliveries. As we have already suggested, the rendering of account each month did not change the character of the items from an open book account into a stated account or account rendered. The evidence was that the deliveries continued right along whether the monthly deliveries were paid for or not, and there was evidence tending to show that the parties did not contemplate that their dealings were to be closed at the end of each month. It appeared that no part of the claim now made was paid until in July, 1908, although the balance was struck in March. The method of deliveries was shown to have been as follows: The coal was run over the scales in delivery wagons. Tags in duplicate of the weight were taken and given to the teamster who delivered one to defendant and returned the other to Chandler. The weights were entered in a scale book at the time the weights were taken, and on the return of the tags they were checked up with the scale book. The weights and price were entered in the day book shortly after being entered in the scale book. These facts were testified to by the clerks who did the weighing and made the entries in the books of account and by the teamsters who delivered the coal to the steamer. The day book of original entries was introduced in which were entered the sales and deliveries commencing December 7, 1907, and ending March 30, 1908. These entries show several different deliveries each month. In December, January, and February, for example, there were six and in March five. The weight is given in each instance and the price $7 per ton, and the amount due carried out, being the same as stated in the complaint.

[7] Evidence was given of the rendition of the items of account, and appellant contends that this circumstance shows the account became an account stated and that the variance is fatal. No objection was made to the evidence, when offered, on this latter ground. The evidence was offered by plaintiff as tending to show delivery and non-payment and was admissible for that purpose, though not admissible to show an account stated, because it would for that purpose have been outside the issues. The rule generally is that, where a variance is claimed, it should be claimed at the trial. Stover v. Stevens, 21 Cal. App. 261, 263, 131 Pac. 332. Furthermore, the rendering of the account is only a circumstance which with others may or may not establish an account stated. We have already pointed out that, to turn an account into an account stated, it must have been rendered with a view of ascertaining the balance and making a final adjudication of the matter involved in the account, or, in other words, to bring about a meeting of the minds of the parties. We think the evidence fairly established an open book account.

[8] It is further contended that the verdict is excessive in the sum of $14.95. This result is arrived at by taking the gross tons stated in the complaint and multiplying by $7, the value per ton. The day book showed the exact tons and fractions of tons carried out at $7 per ton, as delivered to defendant, and amounted to the sum claimed in the complaint. The value is fully shown, although in alleging the tons some fractions were omitted. The evidence supported the verdict.

[9] A witness, Chandler's bookkeeper, over defendant's objection, was permitted to state the amount of balance shown by Chandler's ledger to be due. The witness stated merely what appeared from the day book subsequently introduced. This witness was also permitted to state the course of the business between the parties prior and up to December, 1907. As tending to show the existence of an open account, the evidence was admissible.

[10] We think the books of account were properly admitted. The testimony of witness Robert Chandler was that the entries made in the scale book were made by him and very soon thereafter and on the same day transferred to the day book and were all in his handwriting, and the coal was either weighed by him or by witness Wright. These entries were checked up and compared with the tags which had been given to the teamsters, who reported back that the coal had been delivered and returned the tags signed by defendant to show delivery. These tags, it was shown, had been destroyed. Appellant cites San Francisco Teaming Co. v. Gray, 11 Cal. App. 314, 104 Pac. 999, in support of his objection. In that case, said the court:

"The witness clearly showed that the facts were obtained first by the oral statements of the various teamsters, then transferred by him to a memorandum or temporary paper, and then afterward entered by him in a work book, which was the book offered and received in evidence."

Commenting upon the objection, the court said:

"The first entry or memorandum made by the witness on paper was but the oral statement of the teamsters," and that the evidence "was purely hearsay."

Respondent takes issue with some statements made in the opinion which need not concern us. The facts in that case were so unlike the facts in the present case that it furnishes no guide for us here.

[11] Defendant urges that the pages of the day book which constituted the account "were not read to or by the jury, nor was the reading admitted or waived. They, therefore, cannot be considered as in evidence." The record shows that these pages, as testified to by Mr. Chandler, were offered and were admitted, over defendant's objection. They form a part of the bill of exceptions stipulated by defendant as "settled, allowed, and certified as and for defendant's bill of exceptions on its (his) motion for a new trial and on its (his) appeal from the judgment herein." There is nothing in the record to show that the jury did not consider this evidence and we must presume that they did.

The court gave the following instruction, at the request of the plaintiff:

"If you shall find that the various deliveries of coal to the steamer Eureka, as charged upon the books of Richard D. Chandler, were entered upon the books as parts and items of running and continuous dealings between Richard D. Chandler and the defendant, and that the account was kept unclosed prior to the date of the last entry on March 28, 1908, with the anticipation of further transactions on the part of Mr. Chandler and the defendant, then I instruct you that the book account which contains these charges is an open book account."

At the request of the defendant the court gave the following instruction:

"You are instructed that the mere entry of items in books does not constitute an open book account, but there must be either an express agreement between the parties to maintain an open book account or some acts from which such an agreement may be reasonably inferred."

Of the first of these instructions it is claimed that it is ambiguous and misleading inasmuch as "it may be interpreted to mean that, if Chandler made the entries in the books because he anticipated future business transactions with Mr. Doe, that act of itself made it an open book account."

We think the instruction is a correct statement of the law. The contention was that an open book account could not be established without showing that defendant had agreed that the account should be so treated. We have already said that the nature of the account was not necessarily the subject of previous agreement, but was to be determined from all the facts and circumstances which, in our opinion, were sufficient to show that the account was an open book account.

Of the second of these instructions it may be true "that the mere entry of items in books does not constitute an open book account," but, where we have these entries and an explanation as to how and when they were made, they may constitute a strong circumstance tending to show the true character of the account, and in the present case there were other circumstances pointing in the same direction and sufficient to show that the account was an open book account.

We discover no just ground for ordering a new trial. The judgment and order are affirmed.

RALEIGH et al. v. LEE. (Civ. 1306.)
(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 24, 1914. Modification of Opinion Jan. 23, 1915.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE — 25 — AGENCY — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

A contract by a wife for the purchase of lots had its origin in a memorandum signed in her name by her husband, who paid a deposit on account of a contract to be given upon a further payment. The husband represented that he was acting for the wife and by his direction the contract was drawn in her name in duplicate. He took a copy and procured her signature thereto and returned it to the vendor. The copy signed by the vendor was witnessed by him and delivered to him, and he later made affidavit to the genuineness of defendant's signature, caused the instrument to be acknowledged, and had it recorded. He subsequently made monthly or bimonthly payments on the contract. The wife never appeared personally in the transaction. Held, that the facts justified a finding that in making the contract and the payments the husband was acting as his wife's agent.

In a suit for specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, evidence held insufficient to support a finding that plaintiff's husband, who made the contract and made payments thereon as her agent, was authorized to agree subsequent to the execution of the contract that money loaned to him by the vendor should be added to the purchase price of the land.

4. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⚡25—AGENCY—NOTICE TO AGENT—IMPUTING TO PRINCIPAL.

Where, though a husband acted as his wife's agent in making a contract for the purchase of lots and in making payments thereon, he was not authorized to agree that money borrowed by him from the vendor should be added to the purchase price of the lots, his knowledge that he had done so could not be imputed to the wife, under Civ. Code, § 2332, providing that, as against a principal, both principal and agent are deemed to have notice of whatever either has notice of and ought in good faith and the exercise of ordinary care and diligence to communicate to the other.

5. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⚡25—CONTRACTS—PARTIES BOUND.

Where a husband had no authority, actual or ostensible, to agree that money loaned him by a vendor of lots which the wife had contracted to purchase should be added to the purchase price thereof, such agreement was not binding on the wife.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡1177—REVERSAL—DIRECTING JUDGMENT.

In a suit for specific performance of a contract for the sale of lots for $400 payable in monthly installments with interest, the trial court erroneously found that $550.12 loaned the purchaser's husband by the vendor had by agreement been added to the purchase price, and further found that $548.70 had been paid on the contract as changed, and that there was still due $728.84. Held, that it was not within the province of an appellate court to determine the interest for a period of six years, or to determine that the payments found by the trial court to have been made on the contract as changed should be treated as made on the original contract, and hence, though the interest added to the principal apparently would not amount to $548.70, the cause would be remanded for a determination as to whether plaintiff had paid in full the original contract price, instead of directing a judgment for specific performance.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡1172—REVERSAL IN PART.

A judgment may be affirmed as to one cause of action and reversed as to another.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William S. Wells, Judge.

Action by Florence I. Raleigh and husband against George H. Lee. From a judgment for defendant and an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part.

Austin Lewis, of San Francisco, and R. M. Royce, of Oakland, for appellants. Clinton G. Dodge, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. The complaint embraces two counts: First, for the specific performance of a contract to convey certain real property, lots 2 and 3, Fruitvale Boulevard Tract, Alameda county, "Exhibit 1"; second, for damages for breach of a contract to convey lots 73 and 74, in above tract, "Exhibit 2." Concerning the lots 2 and 3, it is alleged that plaintiff Florence I. Raleigh, on May 3, 1906, entered into a contract with defendant whereby he agreed to sell and transfer to plaintiff Florence or her assigns, and she agreed to purchase, said lots for the sum of $400, payable in monthly installments, together with interest; that said plaintiff, Florence, has complied with the terms of said contract on her part, and has paid thereon the sum of $548.90, and on April 24, 1912, demanded of defendant to comply with said contract on his part, which he refused to do; and that on said last-named day the said lots were of the value of $1,800. In the second count it is alleged that on January 18, 1907, one Frances A. Raleigh entered into a contract, similar in its terms to that above mentioned, for the purchase of said lots 73 and 74, for which she agreed to pay to defendant the sum of $500, payable in monthly installments; that on February 7, 1907, she assigned her interest in said contract to said L. A. Raleigh, and said L. A. Raleigh, on April 18, 1912, assigned his interest therein to plaintiff Florence I. Raleigh, all with the knowledge of defendant; that plaintiff Florence and her assignors have complied with all the terms of said contract; that on April 24, 1912, plaintiff Florence tendered to defendant the sum of $300, being more than the balance then due on said contract, and demanded a deed which defendant refused to execute; that, at the time of said demand, the value of said lots was the sum of $1,500; that plaintiff Florence and her assignors have paid the sum of $355 on said contract. Defendant denies that plaintiff has complied with all the terms of said contract, "Exhibit 1," and on this behalf alleges "that on or about December 14, 1910, plaintiffs borrowed from defendant, and defendant loaned to plaintiffs, the sum of $550.12, and that, as a condition of said loan and as security for the payment of the same, it was then and there agreed by and between plaintiffs and defendant that said sum of $550.12 should be added to and become a part of the contract price for the real property described on page 2 of said complaint ('Exhibit 1'), and it was then and there further agreed by and between plaintiffs and defendant that plaintiffs should pay to defendant the sum of 8 per cent. per annum interest upon said $550.12 and upon the unpaid purchase price of said lots (describing them), and that said sum of $550.12 and interest thereon should become payable according to the terms as set forth in said contract' (plaintiffs' 'Exhibit 1'); that on April 17, 1912, there was due and owing on account of said contract the sum of $728.94, principal and interest, no part of which has been paid; that on said last-named date defendant demanded of plaintiffs payment of said sum and tendered a deed to said lots, upon the payment of said sum; and that to pay the same or any part thereof plaintiffs and each of them refused. Defendant admits the payment to him of $548.70 on said contract as changed as hereinbefore stated, but there remains due the said sum of $728.94; denies that the value of said lots is $1,800, or of any greater sum than $800. For answer to the second count defendant denies that he is the owner of lot 74 mentioned in "Exhibit 2," and as to said lot alleges that, by direction of the then owner, he conveyed said lot to one T. B. Draper, on or about March 24, 1909, who now owns said lot, and that on said date there had been paid on said contract the sum of $306.99; denies that plaintiff and her alleged assignors have complied with all or any of the terms of said contract, attached to plaintiffs' complaint ("Exhibit 2"); and alleges that there is now due on said contract the sum of $306.99, and that defendant is ready and willing to convey said lot 73 upon payment thereof; denies the alleged tender; and denies that the value of said lots is $1,500, or of any sum greater than $800. The court found that plaintiff Florence has not complied with the terms of the contract, "Exhibit 1"; that said contract was changed, on or about December 10, 1910, as alleged in the answer; and that the sum of $548.70 was paid thereon as changed; and that on April 24, 1912, there was unpaid and still due the sum of $728.84, for which payment was then demanded and deed tendered, but payment was refused; that defendant has been at all times and now is able, ready, and willing to comply with the said contract as the same has been changed; that said lots mentioned in "Exhibit 1" were not, on said date, of the value of $1,800, or of any value greater than $800. As to the lots mentioned in the second count of the complaint, the court found: That defendant is not the owner of lot 74, but that ever since March 24, 1909, T. B. Draper has been and now is the owner thereof; that on February 7, 1907, Frances A. Raleigh, named in said contract, assigned her interest to said L. A. Raleigh, and on April 18, 1912, said L. A. Raleigh assigned all his interest therein to said Florence I. Raleigh; that neither of said persons has complied with the terms of said contract, "Exhibit 2"; that neither of said persons, on April 24, 1912, nor at any other time, tendered to defendant $300 or any money for a deed from defendant to said Florence; that about March 24, 1909, there had been paid on said contract $355, and said L. A. Raleigh was then the owner thereof, and while such owner he directed defendant to convey lot 74 to said Draper, and thereupon defendant did convey said lot to said Draper, who paid $150 on account of said contract, "Exhibit 2," making a total of $505 paid on account thereof, and there is now unpaid thereon the sum of $132.51; that said lots mentioned in "Exhibit 2" were not, on April 24, 1912, nor at any time, of the value of $1,500, or of any value greater than $800. As conclusion of law the court found that plaintiffs are not entitled to recover anything from defendant nor to any relief prayed for, and that defendant is entitled to recover his costs.

The contention of appellants upon the first count of the complaint is: That plaintiff Florence I. Raleigh paid all the money she had agreed to pay under the contract, "Exhibit 1"; that her husband, L. A. Raleigh, was not a party to it, and no written or other authorization to him by her to change said contract was shown; that she was not present at any of the interviews between her husband and defendant or his attorney in fact and son, George F. Lee, who attended to much of the business of defendant; that the change made in this contract, or novation claimed by defendant, was without her knowledge or consent and was signed by L. A. Raleigh acknowledging the loan to him of $550.12; that the writing was admitted over plaintiffs' objections; and that any declarations he may have made in the matter were not in the presence of the plaintiff, his wife, and were incompetent and were insufficient to sustain the findings.

Respondent's reply is: That there is ample evidence to establish an ostensible agency on the part of plaintiff L. A. Raleigh to bind his wife Florence, the other plaintiff, in changing the contract so as to add $550.12 thereto "and to show that such change was fully executed according to the law of this state."

The findings and judgment hinge upon the agency of plaintiff L. A. Raleigh. "An agency is either actual or ostensible." Civ. Code, § 2298. "An agency is ostensible when the principal intentionally, or by want of ordinary care, causes a third person to believe another to be his agent who is not really employed by him." Id. § 2300. Within the scope of his ostensible authority, the agent represents the principal and all liabilities which would accrue to the agent within such limits accrue to the principal (Id. § 2330); and, as against a principal, both principal and agent are deemed to have notice of whatever either has notice of, and ought in good faith and the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, to communicate to the other (Id., § 2332). "A principal is bound by the acts of his agent, under a merely ostensible authority, to those persons only who have in good faith, and without want of ordinary care, incurred a liability or parted with value, upon the faith thereof." Id., § 2334.

[1, 2] It seems to us that, in view of the foregoing principles, the facts fully justified the court in its findings that in making the contract, "Exhibit 1," and the payments for the lots indorsed thereon, L. A. Raleigh was acting as his wife's agent. There was evidence that this contract had its origin in a memorandum to which plaintiff L. A. Raleigh signed the name of plaintiff Florence I. Raleigh and his own name as a witness, and he paid a deposit to defendant on account of a contract to be given upon a further payment. Plaintiff Florence was not present, but her husband represented that he was acting for his wife, and by his direction the contract was subsequently drawn in her name as the purchaser. This contract was in duplicate. Raleigh took a copy and got his wife to sign it and returned it to defendant. The copy signed by defendant was witnessed by Raleigh and was delivered to him, and he later made affidavit to the genuineness of the signature of defendant and caused the instrument to be acknowledged, and he himself had it recorded. His wife never appeared personally in the transaction. Neither defendant nor his attorney in fact knew Mrs. Raleigh personally, and they testified that they had no recollection of ever having seen her; that they dealt with her husband in good faith, fully believing that he was her agent and authorized to represent her in all the transactions concerning the contract. The payments were made monthly or bimonthly by Raleigh, personally, from its date, May 3, 1906, to February 9, 1912.

The more serious question relates to the $550.12 which defendant loaned to L. A. Raleigh and which defendant claims was secured by the contract, "Exhibit 1." Witness Chas. F. Lee, defendant's attorney in fact, testified for defendant as follows:

"Mr. Raleigh came into my office. Mr. Nead was either there or came in—and asked me if I would loan him $550; that he wanted to give Mr. Nead $200. He wanted to get $350 more. I rather demurred to it; didn't want to do it. Finally, through the persuasion of Mr. Nead, or Mr. Raleigh, Mr. Nead seemed to be quite angry, and Raleigh seemed to be very much perturbed and Raleigh said, 'You can apply it on account of my lots 2 and 3,' and, after thinking it over for some little time, I said: 'Well, Raleigh, all right. I don't like to do it, but I will do it, but I want you to give me some little paper that will show that you have the right to get this money, so that I will have the right to apply it to the account.' I said: 'Does your wife know about this transaction? Have you the right to go to work and apply this money to her contract?' I said 'this contract,' and he says: 'I have; I am her agent, and I have the right to do it because I am her husband and am interested in the property as much as she is.' Said I, 'If those are the conditions, I will go to work and let you have the money,' which I did. The money was loaned to him with the understanding that it was to run on the contract then in existence, and bear the same rate of interest, to be repaid in the same way. * * * Q. Just finish this conversation. A. I loaned him the money on those conditions. Mr. Nead was present. I turned around to my stenographer, and I dictated this agreement here. She took it off in a stenographer's book, and then brought it on the typewriter, and brought it back, and I read it in the presence of Mr. Raleigh and Mr. Nead both, and he said, 'That is all right,' and signed it. Q. In what way did you give him the $550? A. It is pretty hard for me to tell you that right now, Mr. Dodge, unless I look further into it. $200 of it, I can tell by my books, I applied to the account of Mr. J. M. Nead. Q. Have you got your book here? A. Yes. Q. Which book do you want? A. The large one. On December 14th I gave Mr. Nead a receipt for $200, of the $550. Q. Now, state whether or not, to make this clear, whether that was done at Mr. Raleigh's request? A. Yes, sir. And Mr. Nead at that time gave me $104 in addition, for which I gave him a separate receipt, because I didn't know anything about Mr. Nead's and Mr. Raleigh's transactions at all. Q. Did you let Mr. Raleigh have the sum of $550.12 at that time? A. Yes, sir. Q. Now, the paper that he signed is the one that you say he gave to you? A. One that I gave to him and he gave back to me; yes, sir."

The paper referred to reads as follows:

"Fruitvale, Cal. December 14, 1910. Mr. George H. Lee. Dear Sir: Kindly apply to my account the sum of five hundred fifty and 12/100 dollars, this day received from you. In consideration of which sum, I hereby agree to pay 8 per cent. per annum upon lots Nos. 2 and 3, in block P, of the Fruitvale Boulevard Tract, to be repaid in accordance with several contracts now in existence in the Fruitvale Boulevard Tract, Fruitvale, Alameda County, California. Witness my hand and seal this 14th day of December, A. D. 1910."

The letter referred to was written by Mr. Lee, April 17, 1912, long after this money was borrowed and shortly before the complaint was filed. On Plaintiffs' Exhibit 1 is the following indorsement: "Dec. 14, 1910. $550.12 added to this debt. L. A. R." As to which plaintiff L. A. Raleigh testified:

"Mr. Dodge: Q. There is one matter I overlooked, I think, Mr. Raleigh, in regard to this contract on lots 2 and 3. I call your attention to an indorsement on there, dated December 14, 1910: '$550 added to this debt. L. A. R.' Who wrote that? * * * A. I think I wrote that without my wife knowing anything about it, or without my telling Mr. Lee that my wife knew anything about it. * * * Q. That is the $550.12 that Mr. Lee testified to about your borrowing, isn't it? A. I believe so, and the same money that I was paying, according to the agreement and up to the time I received the letter from Mr. Lee. Q. Did you have any authority, as agent for your wife, to borrow that sum of $550.12 on that contract for lots 2 and 3, and make it a part of that contract? * * * A. I had no conversation with my wife about it whatever, and she knew nothing about it. Q. Did you have any authority? Answer 'Yes' or 'No.' A. What is the question? The Court: Q. Did you have any authority? A. No, sir. Mr. Dodge: Q. You wrote that indorsement on that, '$550.12 added to this contract,' on that date, December 14, 1910, did you not? A. It looks like my writing."

Witness Lee testified that he paid Nead $200 of this money by crediting him with that amount on a contract for the purchase of a lot by Nead from defendant and the balance was paid to Raleigh.

All this evidence was admitted over plaintiffs' objection that it was irrelevant, immaterial and incompetent; that no authority was shown from plaintiff Florence to borrow this money, either in writing or otherwise, nor was there any evidence that she had any knowledge of the transaction. Witness Lee testified that he told Raleigh:

"I want you to give me some little paper that will show that you have the right to get this money, so that I will have the right to apply it to the account."

It seems, however, that defendant did not insist upon Raleigh's getting authority from his wife, as defendant at first required, but acted upon Raleigh's assurance alone that he was his wife's agent and "had the right to do it." It clearly appears that the money was loaned to Raleigh individually, of which $200 was to pay a debt Raleigh owed to Nead and by Nead to defendant. The evidence tending to show an ostensible agency related to the original contract for the purchase of lots 2 and 3 for plaintiff Florence, to whom alone the sale was made and with whom alone defendant contracted and in whose name receipts were given by defendant. There is no evidence that plaintiff Florence had any knowledge of or interest in this loan and plaintiff Raleigh testified that she had none. The evidence to the contrary rests entirely upon the declarations of Raleigh to defendant at the time the latter made the loan. It is true that Raleigh made an indorsement on the contract which tended to show that this money was to be added to the debt represented in the contract for the sale of lots 2 and 3, but no authority from his wife to enter into any such contract or knowledge to her that he had done so was shown.

[3-5] "The rule is well established," said the court in Kast v. Miller & Lux, 159 Cal. 723, 727, 115 Pac. 932, 933, "that the fact of agency when it rests in parol may be established on the trial by the testimony of the agent himself. His testimony is admissible and competent to prove the agency and the nature and scope of his authority and to bind his principal thereby"—citing numerous cases. "It is equally well established that extrajudicial statements or declarations in pais of one assuming to act as agent are inadmissible and incompetent to establish the fact of agency"—citing many cases. We do not feel warranted in assuming from the facts and circumstances, which in our opinion established an ostensible agency in Raleigh to represent his wife in the purchase of the lots and to make the payments and otherwise act as her agent in respect of the purchase, that he also had authority to borrow money for his own use and pledge these lots as security for payment. The only fact shown which would seem to indicate that plaintiff Florence must have had some knowledge of these loans to her husband is the indorsement on the contract, "Exhibit A," made part of her complaint, to wit: "Dec. 14, 1910. $550.12 added to this debt. L. A. R." But there is no evidence that Mrs. Raleigh ever saw this duplicate copy of the contract signed only by defendant, or that she had any knowledge of this indorsement at any time prior to the filing of the complaint in the action. Her husband attended to all the business relating to the making of the contract and of payments on it, and, so far as appears, kept it in his possession. It is not claimed by defendant that the husband was a party to this contract or had any interest in it. He was joined as plaintiff because he was the husband of Florence.

We do not think that notice to plaintiff Florence can be imputed under section 2332, Civil Code, supra, for the reason that there is no evidence that Raleigh was his wife's agent or authorized by her to borrow money from defendant, except the declarations of the agent, which, as we have seen, were neither admissible nor competent to prove agency. Nor can it be said that this was an executed agreement binding upon Mrs. Raleigh, for the reason that her husband had no authority, actual or ostensible, to make the agreement, and he could not bind her by executing a contract he had no authority from her to make. If Raleigh had been the general agent of his wife there would be some ground for holding that both "are deemed to have notice of whatever either has notice of, and ought, in good faith and the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, to communicate to the other." Civ. Code, § 2332; Gallagher v. Eq. Light & Gas Co., 141 Cal. 699, 705, 75 Pac. 329. But we think the evidence does not warrant our holding that Raleigh was the general agent for his wife or that any agency was established to act for her beyond matters pertaining to the making and execution of the contract as signed by her.

As to lots 73 and 74 there is but little to be said. There was evidence sufficient to justify the finding that while L. A. Raleigh was the holder and owner of the contract, "Exhibit 2," and long before he assigned it to his wife, Florence, he directed defendant to convey lot 74 to Draper, and defendant credited what he received from Draper on the contract; that there remains still due defendant on this contract the sum of $132.51. No question of agency is involved, and it is admitted by plaintiffs that:

"The last assignment (of this contract to Florence) was subject to any equitable set-off or claim of Geo. H. Lee against L. A. Raleigh existing at the time of the assignment."

[6] Plaintiff contends that:

"The judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to specifically enforce the contract set forth in the first count of the complaint."

We do not see our way to do this in view of the findings. The amount found to be due on this contract is made up in part, erroneously, we think, of the money borrowed by L. A. Raleigh from defendant and interest thereon. There is a finding that plaintiff Florence paid $548.70 on the contract, but payments after December 14, 1910, the court found were made on the contract as changed. We are not authorized to make findings that these payments should be treated as made on the contract unchanged.

By the terms of the contract plaintiff Florence was to pay $400 for the lots, and this by installments of $10 monthly with interest at 8 per cent. upon unpaid balances. What this interest would amount to for a period of six years it is not our province to determine. Apparently, the interest added to the principal would not amount to $548.70. The court found that plaintiff has not paid in full, and, although this finding is erroneously based on the further finding that she is liable under the contract as changed, we think the cause must be remanded for a determination as to whether or not plaintiff has paid in full on the contract unchanged.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

Modification of Opinion.

PER CURIAM. [7] Our attention is called to the fact that in deciding this case we in effect reversed the judgment as to the second cause of action, set forth in the complaint, relating to lots 73 and 74 therein described. Respondent asks that the judgment be so modified as to affirm the judgment of the superior court on said second cause of action. We think this may be done. The judgment heretofore rendered reversing the judgment and order is modified to read as follows:

"The judgment and order are reversed as to the first cause of action stated in the complaint and are affirmed as to the second cause of action therein stated."

RAUER'S LAW & COLLECTION CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (S. F. 6986.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 11, 1915.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE ⇨159—APPEALS—UNDERTAKING.

Where an appeal bond complied with the statute, the failure of the affidavit accompanying such bond to show, in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. § 1057, whether the sureties were householders or freeholders, did not deprive the court of jurisdiction of an appeal from justice court, for the affidavit constitutes no part of the contract of the sureties; hence, the appeal need not be dismissed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 544, 550-578; Dec. Dig. ⇨159.]

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE ⇨159—APPEALS—BONDS.

Where the original undertaking for an appeal from justice court is fatally defective, the superior court obtains no jurisdiction, and cannot allow the filing of a new undertaking.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 544, 550-578; Dec. Dig. ⇨159.]

In Bank. Application by Rauer's Law & Collection Company, a corporation, for a writ of certiorari to be directed against the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco and another, begun in the District Court of Appeal, and transferred to the Supreme Court. Writ denied, and order of superior court affirmed.

Wm. Tomskey, of San Francisco, for plaintiff. H. D. Newhouse, of San Francisco, for defendants.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is a proceeding in certiorari, instituted originally in the District Court of Appeal for the First District. It was sought thereby to annul an order of the superior court denying a motion to dismiss an appeal attempted to be taken thereto from a judgment of the justice's court of the city and county of San Francisco. The ground of the motion to dismiss was that the undertaking on appeal filed in the justice's court did not comply with the requirements of the statute, and that the superior court consequently was without jurisdiction. The superior court, in denying the motion to dismiss, allowed the appellant to file a new bond within three days, providing that otherwise the motion would be granted.

The District Court of Appeal gave judgment vacating, annulling, and setting aside the order of the superior court. Within the time allowed an order was made by this court vacating said judgment of the District Court of Appeal, and transferring said proceeding to this court for hearing and determination.

In the justice's court judgment was given in favor of plaintiff in said action, who is also the plaintiff here, against the defendant David Salfeld. Within the time provided by law Salfeld filed his notice of appeal to the superior court, and also a purported undertaking on appeal in the sum of $100 for the payment of the costs on appeal, and a stay of proceedings being prayed, also in a sum equal to twice the amount of the judgment, including costs. This undertaking was in all respects as required by the provisions of section 978 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The affidavit of sureties accompanying the bond, under section 1057, Code of Civil Procedure, was defective solely in omitting to show that the sureties were either householders or freeholders within the state. Said affidavit read, as to each of said sureties:

"That he is a resident of said state and city and county and is a * * * holder therein."

[1] Section 1057, Code of Civil Procedure, provides:

"In any case where an undertaking or bond is authorized or required by any law of this state, the officer taking the same must * * * require the sureties to accompany it with an affidavit that they are each residents and householders, or freeholders, within the state, and are each worth the sum specified in the undertaking or bond," etc.

This section is based on section 650 of the old Practice Act, as amended in 1854.

The question presented, as we conceive it to be, is whether the undertaking so given, defective only in the respect aforesaid mentioned, was sufficient to confer jurisdiction of the appeal upon the superior court. Unless it was absolutely void, we are satisfied that it must be held that it was sufficient for that purpose. It has at least twice been held by this court substantially that the affidavit required by section 1057, Code of Civil Procedure, is no part of the contract of the sureties, and that the sureties may not successfully resist the enforcement of the undertaking against them on account of any defect in such affidavit, or, indeed, on account of the entire absence of the affidavit. In People v. Shirley, 18 Cal. 121, sureties, when sued upon their recognizance of bail for the appearance of a defendant, claimed that they were not liable for the several amounts for which they justified, because they did not equal double the sum for which the bail was fixed by the order of the court, section 1057, Code of Civil Procedure, providing that the affidavit should so show. The court said:

"The justification forms no part of the defendants' contract, and in no manner affects their liability. The insufficiency of the amounts would have been good ground for the county judge to refuse his approval of the instrument, but it does not lie in the mouth of the sureties to object, when the approval is given."

Again, in Carpenter v. Furrey, 128 Cal. 665, 669, 61 Pac. 369, 370, it was said:

"The requirement of section 1057 of the Code of Civil Procedure that the sureties shall justify by affidavit accompanying the bond is intended solely for the protection of obligees; and it does not lie in the mouth of the sureties to object to the sufficiency of the bond because of their failure to comply with this provision of the law."

We think it is clear that, as is held in these cases, the affidavit required by section 1057, Code of Civil Procedure, constitutes no part of the contract of the sureties, and that the undertaking filed in the justice's court furnished ample protection to the plaintiff as to the matters specified in section 978, Code of Civil Procedure. There is nothing in the language of section 1057, Code of Civil Procedure, which can be held to fairly imply that such an affidavit as is referred to therein must accompany an undertaking on appeal in order to give the appellate court jurisdiction of the appeal. In so far as the matter of jurisdiction is concerned, the requirements, in order to make the appeal effectual, are contained in sections 978 and 978a of the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 1057, contained in another title, simply provides, generally, that the officer taking any undertaking or bond required by law "must * * * require the sureties to accompany it with an affidavit," etc. It is, of course, incumbent on any officer taking an undertaking or bond to see that the requirements of this section are complied with. Of course, as has been suggested, such an officer is not only justified in refusing to accept or approve any such bond unless the necessary affidavit is made, but it is his manifest duty to do so. As we have said, however, we do not think the imperfection in the affidavit, or, indeed, the entire absence thereof, can affect the question of the jurisdiction of an appellate court, where the undertaking is in all other respects sufficient.

The case of Tibbet v. Tom Sue, 122 Cal. 206, 54 Pac. 741, is relied on by plaintiff as sustaining his contention that the superior court is without jurisdiction of the appeal. In that case there was an appeal from an order refusing to discharge a writ of attachment; the motion therefor having been based on the ground that the writ of attachment was improperly and irregularly issued. The statute required that, "before issuing the writ, the clerk must require a written undertaking on the part of the plaintiff in the sum of not less than $200, and not exceeding the amount claimed by the plaintiff with sufficient sureties, to the effect," etc. The undertaking received by the clerk was accompanied by an affidavit that was defective in the very respect existing here; viz., it did not show the sureties to be either householders or freeholders. It was substantially held that the clerk, a ministerial officer, had no right to issue a writ of attachment except upon the presentation of an undertaking in all respects as required by section 539, Code of Civil Procedure, and section 1057, Code of Civil Procedure, and that a writ of attachment issued without such an undertaking accompanied by such an affidavit is "irregularly and improperly issued, and should be discharged upon application." The case is plainly distinguishable from the case at bar. There is nothing therein from which it can fairly be implied that an undertaking on appeal, without the accompanying affidavit, would be insufficient to confer jurisdiction on an appellate court. In that case the clerk, a mere ministerial officer, in issuing the attachment without complying with the requirements of section 1057, Code of Civil Procedure, was doing so "irregularly and improperly," and the motion to dissolve the attachment on that ground was held to be sufficiently well based.

[2] Whether or not the superior court is authorized to allow a new undertaking to be filed on an appeal from the justice's court where the undertaking originally given is defective in some respect not going to its validity is a question that it is not necessary to discuss in this proceeding. Of course, if the original undertaking is fatally defective, "a second, could not be filed in the appellate court with jurisdictional effect." Bennett v. Superior Court, 113 Cal. 440, 45 Pac. 808. As we have said, we think that the undertaking filed was sufficient to give the court jurisdiction of the cause, and also to furnish the plaintiff all the protection to which it is entitled under section 978, Code of Civil Procedure, and that no second undertaking was required. If a new bond has been filed in accord with the authorization given therefor by the superior court, it still remains that the original bond is still in force, and that it furnishes plaintiff adequate protection. Plaintiff can in no way be prejudiced by that portion of the order authorizing the filing of the second bond.

The order of the superior court is affirmed.

WALKER v. NASON.

(L. A. 3814.)

Rehearing denied, March 18, 1915.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §17 —
RIGHT TO APPOINTMENT — RELEASE — CON-STRUCTION OF AGREEMENT — "AGAINST THE OTHER'S ESTATE."

An agreement between husband and wife recited that, whereas each was desirous of dividing and segregating the property rights of each, and desired that each should hold, control, and manage his or her separate property, it was agreed that the estate real and personal owned by either or both, is hereby divided and distributed as follows, and that part of one be segregated from the part of the other, and this was followed by a list of the property each divided. Second, that the parties released each to the other all claim for support or any claim against the other's estate now or in the future. Fifth, that this agreement shall operate as and be a complete adjustment, settlement, and division of all their property rights, and that divorce should not affect the agreement which was intended as a final settlement of the property interests, whether or not the parties remained husband and wife, and that the wife thereby expressly waived any and all claims, whether in law or equity, she might now have or subsequently acquire against the husband for alimony, etc., or other claims whatsoever. Held, that the agreement was a valid release of the wife's right in the personal estate of the husband, operating after his death, so that under Code Civ. Proc. § 1365, granting administration to certain relatives only when entitled to succeed to the personal estate or a portion thereof, the wife was not entitled to letters of administration; the words "against the other's estate," according to common usage, clearly refers to and includes the right of inheritance, and also claims of the wife against the estate of the husband accruing upon his death in her lifetime.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

Application by Mabel A. Nason and Mabel E. Walker for letters of administration on the estate of Cornelius Walker, deceased. From an order granting letters to Mabel A. Nason, a daughter, Mabel E. Walker, the wife, appeals. Affirmed.

Schmidt & Riggins, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Geo. M. Harker, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Cornelius Walker died, intestate, on November 20, 1913. Mabel A. Nason, his daughter, applied for letters of administration upon his estate, claiming to be his sole heir. Mabel E. Walker, the widow of the deceased, also applied for letters. The two applications were heard together, and the court thereupon made an order granting letters to the daughter and denying the application of the widow. From this order the widow appeals.

Mabel A. Nason was the daughter of the decedent by a former marriage and was not the daughter of Mabel E. Walker. The case turns on the right of the widow to succeed to a part of the personal estate of the decedent, under a written agreement between her and the decedent, executed on November 8, 1911. Under section 1365, Code of Civil Procedure, if she is not entitled to succeed, by reason of that instrument, letters of administration could not, of right, be issued to her upon his estate. At the time of the execution of the agreement, the decedent and Mabel E. Walker were husband and wife. The agreement was in effect as follows: The opening clause recited that the parties were engaged in the piano business, and that:

"Whereas, each of said parties is desirous of dividing and segregating the property rights of each, and the rights of the other, and desire that hereafter each shall hold control and manage his or her property separate from the control of the other, now, therefore, it is agreed: First. That the estate, both real and personal, now owned or controlled by either or both of said parties, is hereby divided and distributed as follows, and that the part of the one be segregated from the part of the other."

Then follows a list of the property given to each, and a release by each to the other of the property so partitioned. The second paragraph is as follows:

"Second. And the said parties hereby release each to the other, all claim for support, or any claim against the other's estate that he or she might have or assert, now or in the future, to any estate now assigned, or hereafter acquired by either, whether received by purchase, descent, inheritance or otherwise."

The only other material paragraph is the fifth, which reads as follows:

"Fifth. It is further agreed and understood that this agreement shall operate as and be a complete adjustment, settlement and division of all their property rights, relations and affairs. This agreement is not made in fact, or is it intended as an agreement for separation or for a divorce between the parties hereto, but in the event that either of said parties should hereafter institute divorce proceedings, such action shall not, in any way, affect this agreement which is intended as a final settlement of property interests, whether said parties remain husband and wife, or whether they assume some other or different relation toward each other, and said Mabel E. Walker, in consideration of this property agreement, hereby expressly waives any and all claims, whether in law or equity, she may now have or subsequently acquire against said Cornelius Walker for alimony, support, maintenance, attorneys' fees, or other claim whatsoever."

The appellant's argument is that the instrument, taken as an entirety, shows that the wife did not release or waive her right of inheritance from the husband or to his estate, but merely relinquished to him all right or interest she might have in his property during his lifetime and all claims she might have against him personally, during the marriage, growing out of such property interest or out of the marital relation. This claim is based particularly upon the language of that part of the fifth clause of the agreement wherein she waives any and all claims, whether in law or equity, "against said Cornelius Walker for alimony, support, maintenance, attorneys' fees or other claim whatsoever." This, it is contended, is a specific statement of the particular claims waived, which controls the more general statement of the second clause and confines the waiver to personal claims accruing and enforceable against Walker during his lifetime, and excludes from the operation of the waiver the right of succession to his estate.

We do not think these expressions were intended to qualify the provisions of the second clause in this manner. The second and fifth clauses evidently relate to somewhat different subjects. In drawing the fifth clause the writer appears to have been guarding against probable or possible claims by her in a contemplated action for divorce and the language was selected with a view to bar such claims. The language of the second clause shows an intention to cover a broader subject. By its terms it not only includes claims of either against the other for support during the lifetime of the other, but also all claims by each against the estate of the other whether such estate was then held or was thereafter acquired. The phrase "against the other's estate," according to common usage, clearly refers to and includes the right of inheritance, and also claims of the wife against the estate of the husband accruing upon his death in her lifetime, such as a family allowance and the like. The instrument in this respect is stronger as a release of the right to succeed than was the contract held to be sufficient for that purpose in Estate of Davis, 106 Cal. 453, 39 Pac. 756. There the release by the wife was "of all claims she may have as the wife of said W. W. Davis on any property he now has or may in any manner acquire." The claim to the husband's property by inheritance does not vest until death, and is, technically, a claim as widow, or heir, not as wife. Yet the release was held to bar the right of succession to the husband's estate and the right to administer thereon. In like manner the agreement above quoted bars the right of Mabel E. Walker to administer upon the estate of the husband.

It appears that after the making of this agreement an interlocutory judgment of divorce between them was made in the superior court of Los Angeles county, but that the same had not become final at the time of Walker's death. Consequently, the marital relation had not been severed, and had it not been for the agreement aforesaid the wife would have been entitled to administration. Estate of Dargie, 162 Cal. 51, 121 Pac. 320. The court properly refused to grant the widow letters of administration.

The order is affirmed.

MAXWELL v. CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al.
(S. F. 6757.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 13, 1915.
Rehearing Denied March 15, 1915.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—197—CIVIL SERVICE—CLASSIFICATION—EXAMINATION.

Under San Francisco charter providing for a classified civil service, and declaring that all places of employment in the departments shall constitute the classified service, and that applicants for places therein shall be subject to examination which shall include, "when appropriate," tests of physical qualifications, the commission holding an examination for promotion in the fire department from the rank of battalion chief to the rank of assistant chief engineer may dispense with physical tests, and the court will not interfere with its discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 541; Dec. Dig. ☞ 197.]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ☞ 197—CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE—DISCRETION OF COMMISSION.

Under San Francisco charter, providing for a classified civil service and for a fire department consisting of a chief engineer and assistant chief engineers, and declaring that the first assistant shall receive a specified salary while the second assistant shall receive a less salary, the commission may, in providing for an examination to fill the offices of first and second assistant chief engineers, provide for an examination from the rank of battalion chief to the rank of assistant chief engineer without classifying the positions of assistant and second assistant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 541; Dec. Dig. ☞ 197.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by John R. Maxwell against the Civil Service Commission of the City and County of San Francisco and others. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Herbert Choynski and John T. Williams, both of San Francisco (Allen G. Wright and Edgar D. Peixotto, both of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant. William J. Kelly, John J. O'Toole, Sullivan & Sullivan, Theo. J. Roche, Percy V. Long, and Maurice T. Dooling, Jr., all of San Francisco, amici curiae, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. In this action a demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and judgment was thereupon entered for the defendants, from which the plaintiff appeals.

The plaintiff, as a taxpayer of San Francisco, sued to enjoin the civil service commission of the city from holding an examination for promotion in the fire department. The members of the commission are joined as defendants. It is alleged that the commission intends to hold such examination without including as part of it any tests of physical fitness or health of the persons applying to be examined. The claim is that the city charter requires such tests to be made a part of the examination, that the commission is without power or discretion to have such examination held without including these tests, and that it would needlessly and illegally expend the public funds if it did so.

In classifying the civil service of the city and in organizing the fire department, the officers of that department ranking above superintendents of engines are divided into four classes or ranks, namely: (1) Chief engineer;

(2) first assistant chief engineer; (3) second assistant chief engineer; (4) battalion chiefs. The chief engineer is not selected under the civil service rules. The officers ranking below him must be so selected.

The two offices of first assistant chief engineer and second assistant chief engineer became vacant, and notice of that fact was given to the civil service commission. The charter provides that, upon receiving notice that a place is vacant, the commission shall certify to the appointing officer the names of one or more persons, not exceeding three, standing highest on the eligible list for the office to be filled, from which persons the appointment to the place shall be made by the appointing officer. Article 13, §§ 9 and 10.

For the purpose of providing an eligible list from which to certify the names of persons to fill the said places, the commission thereupon, as provided in section 6 of article 13 of the charter, gave notice that at a time and place mentioned "an examination for promotion in the fire department from the rank of battalion chief to the rank of assistant chief engineer" would be held by the commission.

Section 2 of article 13 provides that the civil service commission shall classify "all the places of employment in or under the offices and departments of the city and county" which the charter has placed under civil service regulations, which places "shall constitute the classified civil service of the city and county, and no appointment to any place shall be made except under the rules hereinafter mentioned and the rules adopted thereunder by the civil service commission."

Section 4 of article 13 is as follows:

"All applicants for places in the classified civil service shall be subjected to examination, which shall be public, competitive and free. Such examinations shall be practical in their character, and shall relate to those matters only which will fairly test the relative capacity of the persons examined to discharge the duties of the positions to which they seek to be appointed, and shall include, when appropriate, tests of physical qualifications, health, and of manual or professional skill."

[1] While it cannot be denied that physical fitness and health are prime requisites for a fireman, whatever his work in the service, it does not follow that in all examinations, those to determine the fitness of applicants for promotion, as well as those having for their object the selection of eligible men for entry into the department, there should be included tests of physical qualifications and health. Section 4 of article 13, quoted above, does not require physical tests in all cases or even in any specifically defined cases. Such tests are to be included "when appropriate." It would seem that, under this language, the decision whether physical tests are appropriate is committed to the civil service commission, and that it is difficult to say, in any particular case, that the appropriateness is so clear and obvious that a court would be justified in controlling the determination of the board. But, if we say that physical tests are essential to an original appointment as fireman, must we not say, inasmuch as all men in active service have presumably satisfied the physical tests, the board might reasonably conclude that further or repeated physical tests were not "appropriate" when the question of promotion only was involved? Courts should let administrative boards and officers work out their problems with as little judicial interference as possible. They may decide a particular question wrong—but it is their question. Such boards are vested with a high discretion, and its abuse must appear very clearly before the courts will interfere.

It was held by the learned judge of the superior court that section 4 of article 13 applies only to original applicants for places, and not to those seeking promotion. It is not necessary to determine whether or not such distinction exists. Assuming that examinations for promotion must conform to the requirements of section 4, the determination whether physical tests are appropriate rests in the sound discretion of the commission—a discretion which might fairly be exercised one way in the case of original appointments and the other way if promotion only were involved.

[2] Appellant contends that the commission was mistaken in its classification of the positions for which examinations were to be held. This question was correctly decided by the learned judge of the superior court in his written opinion as follows:

"It is further urged by the plaintiff that in providing for the examination in question the commission made an erroneous classification in this: That it provided for examination from the rank of battalion chief to the rank of assistant engineer, whereas, in fact, the first assistant engineer and the second assistant engineer are of independent grade, and the examination should be held separately for each of such positions, and cites the fact that the first assistant engineer is given by the charter a salary of $3,000 per annum, while the salary of the second assistant engineer is $2,400 per annum.

"Upon the matter here involved the charter is uncertain. It nowhere in express language creates the position of assistant engineers or defines their duties or prescribes their number. The first mention of such an officer is in the section providing that the board of fire commissioners shall appoint a chief engineer, in which it is recited that it shall be his duty, and that of the 'assistant chief engineers,' to see that all laws concerning the fire department are enforced. The next reference is in this language: 'The chief engineer, or in his absence the assistant chief engineers' may during a conflagration order buildings to be removed. Again, it is provided that the 'chief engineer and assistant chief engineers' shall be members of the board of fire wardens. The next and last time they are named is in the section declaring the salaries of the officers of the department, in which is found the only reference to the number of, or to any distinction between assistant chief engineers and is in these words: 'First assistant chief engineer three thousand dollars. Second assistant chief engineer, twenty-four hundred dollars.'

"While difference in salary may be considered with other elements in determining whether two persons are of the same rank, it is not conclusive, even, I believe, where they are engaged in the same field of employment. Rank depends as well upon the duties to be performed, and upon the language creating the positions. The examinations for both places would necessarily be alike, the duties of each officer being similar. If the examination must be confined to the position of second assistant engineer, there never can be held a competitive examination for the position of first assistant engineer; for in the event of a vacancy in that place, it must be filled by promotion from the next lower rank, and that would mean necessarily the elevation of the man who held it; which would be contrary to the spirit of the charter. * * *

"At any rate, the examinations for the positions being necessarily the same, I am of the opinion that the classification as made was within the discretion of the board."

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. WESTON. (Cr. 1889.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 17, 1915.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW —1169—HARMLESS ERROR —ERRONEOUS ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Error in admitting the testimony of a witness, given on the preliminary examination, because of the failure to show that he could not with due diligence be found in the state, must, as required by Const. art. 6, § 4½, be disregarded, where the testimony, if not regarded, would not have changed the result.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 754, 3088, 3130, 3137-3143; Dec. Dig. —1169.]

2. HOMICIDE —166—EVIDENCE—MOTIVE.

Evidence of the relation between accused and his mistress and as to quarrels between them was admissible on the question of motive in connection with other evidence that accused believed that his mistress was being estranged from him by decedent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 320-331; Dec. Dig. —166.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW —519—EVIDENCE—STATEMENTS BY ACCUSED—CONFESSION.

Statements by accused while in custody, denying any participation in the crime, and setting up an alibi, are not confessions, and may be proved by the prosecution without first showing that they were freely and voluntarily made without improper inducement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1163-1174; Dec. Dig. —519.]

4. HOMICIDE —233—MOTIVE—EVIDENCE.

While proof of motive of accused is admissible, it is not indispensable, and where the jury are satisfied, beyond all reasonable doubt, that accused committed the homicide, they must find him guilty without finding what the motive of the homicide was, for the essential thing is that the jury are satisfied, beyond all reasonable doubt, that accused committed the crime.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 481; Dec. Dig. —233.]

5. CRIMINAL LAW —810 — INSTRUCTIONS — CONFLICTING INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction that, where the identity of accused as the person who killed decedent is in dispute, evidence of the motive of accused to commit the crime is material, is not inconsistent with an instruction that, while proof of motive is admissible, it is not indispensable, and the jury, satisfied, beyond all reasonable doubt, of the guilt of accused, may find him guilty without finding the motive of the killing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1968; Dec. Dig. ¶810.]

6. CRIMINAL LAW ¶1137—INVITED ERROR—RIGHT TO COMPLAIN.

Accused may not complain of an instruction given at his own request.

7. HOMICIDE ¶174—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where there was evidence that accused was at the house of a third person before and after the homicide, and that he had opportunity, after the killing, to enter a shed near the third person's house, evidence of finding, after the killing, in the shed, a revolver with one exploded shell and five loaded shells of the same caliber as that with which decedent was shot, was competent.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Bradley V. Sargent, Judge.

Nat Weston was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

L. Sledge and O. Hudson, both of San Francisco, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., and W. H. L. Hynes, Dist. Atty., of Oakland, for the People.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. The defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree, and appeals from the judgment pronounced on such conviction and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

1. It is suggested that the evidence implicating defendant as the person who shot and killed the deceased, one Jerry Logan, is so uncertain as to leave the verdict without sufficient support. While no one actually witnessed the occurrence, the evidence was of such a character as, in our opinion, to leave no doubt of the guilt of the defendant.

2. Upon the trial the depositions of Alice Logan, the widow of deceased, and one N. H. Brown, taken upon the preliminary examination of defendant, were read in evidence; said witnesses not being present. It was claimed in the trial court, and is claimed here, that it was not satisfactorily shown that these witnesses could not with due diligence be found within the state (no claim being made by the people that either was dead or insane), and that therefore it was error to allow their depositions to be read in evidence. Pen. Code, § 686, subd. 3. Defendant's claim is not seriously pressed here as to the witness Alice Logan, as to whom the evidence shows satisfactorily enough to sustain the conclusion of the trial court that she could not with due diligence be found in the state, and that very shortly after the death of her husband she left the state to go to New Orleans. As to the witness Brown, the showing was not quite as satisfactory, as the evidence disclosed that the deputy sheriff seeking the witnesses, although informed that Brown had gone to "Scotia," had failed to follow up that information with any attempt to reach such witness at Scotia, in Humboldt county, in this state. Whether this was the place to which Brown had gone does not appear, but in view of the information, reasonable diligence might well be held to have required that an effort should be made to find him at the place of that name in this state.

[1] But the testimony of Brown was, under the circumstances of this case, of very little importance, and we do not see how it could have affected the verdict. The witness did not know the defendant, and had never seen him, so far as he knew, until he saw him in the city prison after his arrest. He was on the street a short distance from Logan's home, at the time of the shooting, about 8 o'clock p. m., heard the shot, and just thereafter saw a man running very fast from Logan's place west on Eighth street toward Pine, and then across a field toward the Southern Pacific tracks. He stated quite positively that he could not say that defendant was this man. He could not say what kind of a hat the man wore, soft or stiff, but thought it was a stiff hat, while all the other evidence showed that defendant did not have such a hat that day. He did, however, say that the man he saw had light clothes, and that "in height and build and general appearance" he resembled the defendant. Such testimony of identification on the part of one observing a stranger to him running very fast along a street in the dusk of the evening is of very slight importance, and it is hardly conceivable that, under the circumstances of this case, it could have influenced the jury in arriving at a verdict. Entirely regardless of this testimony, the evidence as a whole pointed so clearly to the defendant as the guilty party that we are satisfied that the verdict would not have been other than it was, had the deposition not been admitted. Therefore, even if error was committed in receiving it, its admission should not be held to be ground for reversal, especially in view of the provisions of section 4½, art. 6, of the Constitution. It is worthy of note that defendant was represented, when Brown testified at the preliminary examination, by Mr. Sledge, who was one of his attorneys at the trial, and that Mr. Sledge cross-examined the witness at that time.

[2] 3. Certain evidence given by Nettie Dykes, Frank Dykes, and Sarah French, as to the relations existing between defendant and Sarah French and as to certain quarrels between them, was all admissible, in our opinion, on the question of motive. All of this evidence, taken in connection with other evidence in the cause, fairly tended to show that defendant believed that Sarah French, who was living with him as his mistress, was being estranged from him by deceased, and that he would ultimately be deprived of her society and companionship, and that he greatly resented this and was determined to prevent it, if possible. It cannot be fairly held, in view of the record, that it does not appear that the defendant believed that deceased was the person who was becoming a successful rival for the affection and society of Sarah French. It is thoroughly settled, as said in People v. Soeder, 150 Cal. 15, 87 Pac. 1017, that:

"Evidence having a direct tendency, in view of the surrounding circumstances, to prove motive on the part of a person for a crime, and thus to solve a doubt 'either as to the identity of the slayer, the degree of the offense, * * *' is admissible against a defendant, however discreditably it may reflect on him, and even where it may show him guilty of other crimes."

We do not think that the evidence as to these matters went into detail any further than was proper.

[3] 4. The trial court did not err in refusing to strike out certain testimony of W. J. Emigh, assistant inspector of police, as to certain statements made by defendant while in custody. Defendant never made any statement in the nature of a confession or acknowledgment of guilt. In all of his statements in the presence of Officer Emigh he denied having had anything to do with the killing of deceased, and constantly insisted that he was not in Alameda county at all on the day the homicide was committed. His statements consisted of an attempt to account for all his movements on that day, all being in San Francisco, and of absolute denials of the statements of many witnesses both in Oakland and San Francisco as to his whereabouts and conduct on that day, and of denials as to any participation in the homicide. He did admit that a certain hat, which it had been testified had been left by him with one Neil in Oakland on that day, was his, but denied that he left it there, and attempted to account for its getting into Neil's possession by a statement to the effect that it must have been stolen from him. Such statements do not constitute confessions, and the law does not require a showing that they were freely and voluntarily made, without improper inducement, in order to entitle them to be admitted in evidence. There was, however, explicit testimony to the effect that at none of the conversations did any one hold out to defendant any hope of reward or immunity from punishment as an inducement for any statement, and that no force, threat, duress, menace, or coercion was used to induce or compel defendant to make a statement, and that all he said was freely and voluntarily said.

[4] 5. We find no error in the instructions of the trial court as to motive. The general instruction as to motive, given by the court on this subject, correctly stated substantially that, while proof of motive is always admissible, it is never indispensable, and that, if the jury were satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt that defendant was guilty, they might find him guilty without finding what the motive of the killing was. The essential thing is that the jury should be satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt that the defendant committed the crime charged against him, and, if so satisfied, it is immaterial what the motive is. The presence or absence of a particular motive is only a circumstance to be considered by the jury in connection with other circumstances in the case, in determining whether the defendant is guilty. This is all the instruction given by the court could be fairly understood to mean.

[5] At the request of the defendant made at the conclusion of the charge, the court further instructed the jury that:

"Where the identity of the defendant as the person who committed the crime is a fact in dispute, evidence of the motive of the defendant to commit the crime is material."

This instruction was not at all inconsistent with what the court had previously said on the question of motive. It did not intimate that proof of motive was indispensable. It was simply an instruction as to evidence, specifically pointing out that evidence tending to show motive is material in a case of this character. The court had said substantially the same thing in its general instruction on the subject. The statement was correct.

[6] It is urged that the court erred in giving this instruction, but, even if it had done so, defendant could not complain here of an instruction given at his own request.

6. There was no error in admitting evidence to the effect that the defendant was apparently in a state of some "mental excitement" just prior to the homicide. However, the testimony on this subject was unimportant in character, and could not have affected the verdict one way or the other.

[7] 7. There was no error in admitting the evidence as to the revolver found on May 10th in the woodshed back of Neil's house. This shed was on the lot occupied by Neil. There was evidence to the effect that defendant was at Neil's house for some time before and immediately after the homicide, and that he had opportunity of access to this shed after the homicide. When found, the revolver contained one exploded shell and five loaded shells. It carried the same caliber bullet as that with which deceased was shot. All this was material and competent evidence. The objections made by defendant to all this evidence went rather to its weight than to its admissibility.

No other point for reversal is made in defendant's brief. We have carefully examined the record on appeal, and find no reason to doubt that defendant had a fair and impartial trial or that he was properly convicted.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

BELL v. KRAUSS et al.

In re BELL.

(L. A. Nos. 3826, 3879.)

1. ADOPTION ⚭7—CONSENT OF PARENT.

A decree of divorce granted to a wife on the ground of failure of the husband to provide for her, which awards to her the custody of a child of the parties, and which requires the husband to make a monthly payment for the child's support, does not deprive him of the custody of the child, within Civ. Code § 224, providing that a child cannot be adopted without the consent of its parents, except that consent is not necessary from a father deprived of civil rights, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adoption, Cent. Dig. §§ 7-10; Dec. Dig. ⚭7.]

2. PARENT AND CHILD ⚭2 — CUSTODY OF CHILDREN—STATUTORY RIGHTS.

Under Civ. Code § 197, providing that the father of an unmarried minor child is entitled to its custody, services, and earnings, and section 246, specifying rules for awarding the custody or appointing a general guardian of minors, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1751, defining who may be guardian, a father on the death of the mother, to whom a child has been given by a decree of divorce, is entitled to the custody of the child.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parent and Child, Cent. Dig. §§ 4-32; Dec. Dig. ⚭2.]

3. PARENT AND CHILD ⚭2 — CUSTODY OF CHILDREN—STATUTORY RIGHTS.

Prima facie a parent is presumed competent and is entitled to the custody of his child, unless found by the court to be incompetent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parent and Child, Cent. Dig. §§ 4-32; Dec. Dig. ⚭2.]

4. ADOPTION ⚭16—ABSENCE OF NOTICE TO FATHER—EFFECT.

Where a father is deprived of the custody of a minor child without knowledge of any proceeding for the adoption of the child, and without a hearing, he is entitled to relief from the judgment of adoption taken against him because of surprise, and through his excusable neglect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adoption, Cent. Dig. §§ 27, 28; Dec. Dig. ⚭16.]

5. ADOPTION ⚭16—ABSENCE OF NOTICE TO FATHER—STATUTORY RIGHTS.

Where a parent makes a prima facie showing that proceedings for the adoption of his child were taken against his will and without notice, the court must set aside the award and give the parent a hearing and an opportunity to oppose the adoption.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adoption, Cent. Dig. §§ 27, 28; Dec. Dig. ⚭16.]

6. ADOPTION ⚭16—PROCEEDINGS TO VACATE—TIME OF APPLICATION.

The six months' time prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 473, within which an application must be made for relief against an order of adoption made without notice to the father, runs from the date of the filing of the order of adoption.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adoption, Cent. Dig. §§ 27, 28; Dec. Dig. ⚭16.]

7. ADOPTION ⚭16—PROCEEDINGS TO VACATE—TIME OF APPLICATION.

An action by a father against his minor child and his adoptive parents for setting aside the order of adoption because made without notice is in effect an application, within Code Civ. Proc. § 473, for relief against a judgment taken through mistake or excusable neglect, and, if brought within the statutory time, is available.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adoption, Cent. Dig. §§ 27, 28; Dec. Dig. ⚭16.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by Jesse M. Bell against Hugh I. Krauss and others, and petition by Jesse M. Bell against Hugh I. Krauss and another, to revoke an adoption. From judgments denying relief, Jesse M. Bell appeals. Reversed in part, and affirmed in part.

J. L. Fleming, W. S. Knott, and C. W. Hatton, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. Schweitzer & Hutton, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. On September 4, 1913, Hugh I. Krauss and Birdie M. Krauss, his wife, petitioned for permission to adopt Aileen Bell, a minor child then six years of age. On the same day the court made an order of adoption, which was signed and filed September 4, 1913, but docketed and entered on the 8th day of September 1913. On March 2, 1914, Jesse M. Bell, father of the minor child, served and filed notice of a motion to be relieved from the consequences of said order, specifying in said notice Monday, the 9th day of March, 1914, as the day upon which he would make the motion. In his said notice of motion he announced that he would apply for the desired relief on the grounds that he was not a party to the adoption proceeding; that he had no notice thereof and did not consent thereto; that he was able and willing to care for his daughter and to provide her with a suitable home; that he was entitled to the custody of the infant; was a proper person to have such custody; and that he had never been judicially deprived of the possession of said minor on account of cruelty or neglect nor by reason of failure to provide. He also averred that he had not been dispossessed of civil rights nor divorced upon the grounds of cruelty or adultery, and that he had not been adjudged habitually intemperate. At the hearing of this motion petitioner introduced in evidence an affidavit setting forth the same matters in more elaborate form.

The motion of Mr. Bell was resisted, and Mr. Frank S. Hutton, one of the attorneys for Mr. and Mrs. Krauss, filed an affidavit in which he set forth, among other things, that on October 15, 1913, Jesse M. Bell had commenced an action against Mr. and Mrs. Krauss to set aside and vacate the order of adoption theretofore made. He averred that in the said action Bell had sought to annul the order of adoption on the same grounds as those afterwards specified in his notice of motion to vacate said order; that the defendants had demurred to the complaint; that the demurrer had been sustained; and that judgment had been duly entered, upon default of plaintiff, in January, 1914. The affidavit of Mr. Hutton also contained the statement that, in an action for divorce between Leila F. Bell and Jesse M. Bell, the latter, by the judgment of the court, had been judicially deprived of the custody of his daughter by reason of cruelty and neglect.

Jesse M. Bell thereupon introduced in evidence the complaint and the decrees in said action for divorce. By order made March 9, 1914, the motion to vacate the order in the adoption matter was denied. From said order denying his motion Jesse M. Bell appeals. He also appeals from the judgment mentioned in Mr. Hutton's affidavit, and by stipulation of the parties both appeals were considered by this court at the same time.

The action commenced as aforesaid by Jesse M. Bell was against Mr. and Mrs. Krauss and the minor child Aileen Bell. It set forth substantially the same facts appearing by the affidavits and the exhibits in the later proceeding upon his motion under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure to be relieved of the order of adoption. The pleadings and decrees in the action for divorce, the awarding of the minor child to her mother, the death of the mother on August 19, 1913, and the adoption proceedings held without any notice to Jesse M. Bell and without his knowledge or consent were all set forth in the complaint as well as allegations of his fitness for and right to the custody of his child. It was alleged that, at the time when the adoption proceedings were instituted, Jesse M. Bell resided in Los Angeles, his place of residence being well known to Mr. and Mrs. Krauss, but that they made no effort to secure his consent to the adoption, nor did they give him any notice thereof, but, "on the contrary, willfully and intentionally concealed from him the fact that they were about to institute such adoption proceedings and kept the same carefully concealed from him until after the order of adoption had been made therein."

The prayer was that the order of adoption be declared to be null and void, that it be vacated and set aside, that the minor child be restored to the plaintiff, and for general equitable relief.

We are not favored by a brief from the respondents, and therefore are not informed regarding the theory upon which the demurrer was sustained or the application for relief in the adoption proceedings denied.

[1] Examining the application for relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, we will first consider the order which is attacked. There was no denial by the petitioner for leave to adopt Aileen Bell that the court's order was made without the presence or consent of the child's father and that he knew nothing of the proceeding. The recital in the order regarding the father of Aileen Bell is:

"That the father of said child has been judicially deprived of the custody of said child by reason of neglect and failure to provide."

The corresponding allegation in the petition is:

"That the said parents were, on the 21st day of July, 1909, divorced one from the other, and, in the interlocutory decree of divorce bearing the said date, the custody of said minor child was awarded to the mother upon the ground of neglect, failure to provide, and desertion of said mother and said minor child."

But the interlocutory decree and the final decree in the divorce action fail to support either the allegation in the petition or the finding of the court. The divorce was granted to Leila F. Bell from Jesse M. Bell upon the ground of failure to provide; the custody of Aileen was awarded to the mother; and payment of a monthly sum for the child's support was ordered. There was no finding that the father was an unfit person to have possession and control of the child. The placing of the infant in charge of the mother was not such judicial deprivation of the custody of the child on account of the neglect of the father as is contemplated in section 224 of the Civil Code. Divorces are not granted for offenses against children, and the bestowal of the custody of a minor in a divorce action is not, unless otherwise provided by statute, an adjudication of the fitness of the parent who is for the time denied the right to retain possession of the child. It is nothing more than the expression of the court's belief that, under the circumstances then existing, the welfare of the child would be best subserved by placing said child with one of the parents rather than the other.

[2] Upon the death of a mother to whom a child has been given by a decree of divorce the father becomes entitled to the custody of the child. Schammel v. Schammel, 105 Cal. 261, 38 Pac. 729; sections 197 and 246, Civ. Code; section 1751, Code Civ. Proc.

[3] Prima facie a parent is presumed competent, and he is entitled to have the custody of his child, unless found by the court to be incompetent. In re Campbell, 130 Cal. 383, 62 Pac. 613.

[4] Where a father is deprived of the custody and control of a minor child without knowledge of any proceeding in that behalf and without a hearing, he is entitled to be relieved from the judgment or order taken against him because of surprise and through his excusable neglect.

[5] Where a parent makes a prima facie showing that proceedings were so taken against his will and without the notice to which, under the law, he was entitled, the court should set aside the award of custody and give the parent a hearing and an opportunity to oppose the efforts of other people to deprive him of his child. Guardianship of Van Loan, 142 Cal. 428, 76 Pac. 37.

The showing made by Jesse M. Bell in the adoption proceeding, when he asked for relief, under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure was, in our opinion, sufficient prima facie to establish the fact that he had been denied the care and custody of his daughter without due process of law. The affidavit of opposition did not deny the allegation in his affidavit that neither by service of notice upon him nor otherwise did he have any knowledge of the adoption matter until after the order was made.

[6] It occurs to us, however, that perhaps the order denying his application was based upon the theory that the request for relief was not made within the time limited by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. If the date of filing the order of adoption be regarded as the time when it was "taken," then unquestionably the application was made too late because the order was filed September 4, 1913, and the motion was heard March 9, 1914. True, the notice of motion was filed March 2, 1914, after service upon counsel for Mr. and Mrs. Krauss, but the court was not asked to do anything for the relief of the petitioner until March 9, 1914. This, under the authorities, was too late, if we take September 4th as the starting point. Spencer v. Branham, 109 Cal. 337, 41 Pac. 1095; Brownell v. Superior Court, 157 Cal. 705, 109 Pac. 91; Thomas v. Superior Court, 6 Cal. App. 630, 92 Pac. 739. If we consider September 8, 1913 (the day upon which the order of adoption was docketed and entered), as the date from which Mr. Bell's right to apply for relief must be reckoned, then the last day of the six months fell on March 8, 1914, a Sunday, and the motion made on the following day was within the statutory time. Section 12, Code Civ. Proc. In Brownell v. Superior Court, supra, it is suggested that in probate proceedings the formal signing and filing of an order ought to set the time running against an interested person who was not present and was without notice. In that case a determination of this question was not necessary, for the reason that the formal order was signed, filed, and entered on the same day; but, applying the reasoning of the opinion in that case to the matter before us, we are constrained to hold that the period of six months available to petitioner began on February 4, 1913, and that therefore the order denying his motion was properly made.

[7] We are of the opinion, however, that the complaint in the action against Mr. and Mrs. Krauss and the child was good as against the general demurrer, which was interposed. That action was in effect an application for all that might have been granted upon a timely motion under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and for more. It pleaded facts sufficient to show that Mr. Bell was denied notice of the adoption proceeding either through fraud or mistake of law and fact on the part of Mr. and Mrs. Krauss. All that we have written in the discussion of the contents of the petition of Mr. Bell applies with equal force to his complaint.

Therefore the judgment based upon the court's ruling sustaining the demurrer is reversed. The order denying petitioner's prayer for relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure is affirmed.

WISLER v. TOMB. (L. A. 3448.)

1. GIFTS — 32 — INTER VIVOS — DONOR'S NOTE — ENFORCEMENT.

A gift by a donor of his own note to a trustee in trust for the donee is not enforceable against the donor's estate, though the donor, on the day of the giving of the note, executed a declaration of trust reciting that the donor has placed a sum, the face of the note, in the hands of the trustee, and that the declaration is made to more particularly declare the purpose for the execution of the note; it being a mere promise without consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Cent. Dig. §§ 63, 64; Dec. Dig. — 32.]

2. GIFTS — 32 — INTER VIVOS — DONOR'S NOTE — REVOCATION.

A note intended as a mere gift, with no other consideration than natural affection, is not enforceable at law, for the gift is revocable until executed.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by Henry M. Wisler, as trustee, against Maria Gartrell Tomb, executrix of Thomas B. Tomb, deceased. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

N. Blackstock and S. E. Vermilyea, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. George L. Sanders, L. W. Moultrie, and A. E. Dunning, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Defendant demurred generally and specially to plaintiff's second amended complaint. The demurrer was sustained, plaintiff refused to amend, and judgment for defendant was entered accordingly. This appeal is taken by plaintiff from said judgment.

Plaintiff averred in his unverified complaint that he was the duly appointed, acting, and qualified trustee of the trust estate of Thomas Tomb Harbeson, a minor. He sued as such trustee and sought judgment against defendant in her capacity as executrix of the last will of Thomas B. Tomb, deceased. According to the allegations of the complaint, the following facts appear: On March 3, 1910, Thomas B. Tomb made and delivered to plaintiff, as trustee for the former's nephew, Thomas Tomb Harbeson, a promissory note payable on or before one year after date, with interest at 6 per cent, per annum. The principal was never paid, but on April 3, 1910, the maker of said note paid $150 as interest. On January 26, 1911, the plaintiff, as trustee, presented to the defendant, as executrix of the estate of Tomb, his verified claim on said promissory note for principal and interest then due, and the said executrix rejected the claim. On the day and date of the execution of the note, Thomas B. Tomb, the more particularly to declare the purpose for the execution of said instrument, made a written declaration of trust in which he stated that he had placed in the hands of Henry M. Wisler, the sum of $30,000, to be used, as provided in the declaration, for the support and education of the beneficiary, Thomas Tomb Harbeson. The instrument was signed by Tomb and Wisler; the latter by the terms of the writing accepting the trust. Maria G. Tomb signed as a witness. Maria G. Tomb was then and there informed (to quote from the complaint) "that she had been appointed executrix of the last will and testament of said Thomas B. Tomb, deceased," and she then and there (to quote further) "consented to the said declaration of trust, and agreed that on the death of the said Thomas B. Tomb, deceased, she would in full, and in every particular, and without any exception whatsoever, carry out the said trust, and then and there agreed that, upon the death of the said deceased, she would immediately set apart the said $30,000 for the express purpose of carrying out the said declaration of trust, and would, as soon as she had qualified as executrix, pay over to the said Henry M. Wisler the said $30,000, to be invested by him as provided in the said declaration of trust." We may say, in passing, that the ghostly implication of the earlier quotation that her deceased husband not only signed the declaration, but talked to her about it, is cleared by the later excerpt from the pleading. Evidently the conversation at least was inter vivos, and she was not really "appointed executrix" until after her husband had died, for we think a well-known maxim may be varied to read, "Nemo est executrix viventis."

The complaint contains further averments that, "pursuant to said understanding," Mrs. Tomb, "both in and out of the probate department of the superior court of the county of Los Angeles, state of California, expressly admitted and consented that the said $30,000 was, as hereinbefore alleged, set apart and considered as a segregated fund from all of the other funds and moneys of the estate of the said deceased, Thomas B. Tomb, and on divers times and occasions offered to pay the said fund into the hands of a trustee, to be selected by herself, or a trustee to be nominated by the probate court of said county, other than the said Henry M. Wisler, to whom she objected as trustee"; that the said Maria Gartrell Tomb in all of the proceedings in and about the estate of Thomas B. Tomb, deceased, "recognized and treated the said $30,000 as a segregated trust fund belonging to said minor"; and that she never claimed that she was administering the $30,000 as a part of her deceased husband's estate, but treated it as a trust fund, and offered to pay it into court, should the court order her to take such course. It is further alleged that, during guardianship proceedings instituted by the father of the minor Thomas Tomb Harbeson, Mrs. Tomb consented in open court and offered to pay the segregated fund of $30,000 to the father, and, on his resignation as guardian, she offered to take the guardianship of the minor for the express purpose of holding the fund for his use and benefit. It is further averred in the complaint that, upon petition and proceedings duly had thereunder, the superior court on January 11, 1911, determined and adjudged that the trust was legal, and that the appointment of Henry M. Wisler was confirmed. It is averred that, since the death of Thomas B. Tomb, defendant, as executrix of his estate, has held the $30,000 as a trust fund belonging to the minor Thomas Tomb Harbeson.

[1] Upon the authority of Tracy v. Alvord, 118 Cal. 655, 50 Pac. 757, the judgment must be affirmed. In that case it was held that the gift of the donor's own promissory note, either inter vivos or causa mortis, does not create an enforceable obligation in favor of the donee against the donor or his estate. Being a mere promise without consideration to give a sum of money in the future, such a note is of no legal consequence. Appellant seeks to differentiate the facts averred in his complaint from those considered in Tracy v. Alvord, supra. He calls attention to the language of the declaration by which Thomas B. Tomb states that he "has placed" $30,000 in the hands of the trustee. This amounts to a statement, say appellant's counsel, that Tomb had placed in the trustee's hands $30,000 in cash, and justifies the assumption that afterwards Wisler, as trustee, loaned the $30,000 to Tomb. Such an assumption, even if it logically arose from the supposed facts indicated by the declaration of trust, would not save the complaint, because the mere incorporation of the declaration into the pleading does not amount to an allegation of the matters therein set forth as facts. If, indeed, Tomb paid the money to the trustee, and afterwards borrowed it, giving the promissory note as evidence of the debt, it would be easy to plead such a state of facts. No such pleading is presented. On the contrary, we find the averment that the declaration of trust was made "on the day and date of the execution" of the note and "in order to more particularly declare the purpose for the execution of the said note." Any presumption of consideration which might arise in an action on the note itself is overcome by the allegations regarding the trust. The claim against the estate was upon the note itself, and therefore the action may not be supported by a mere introduction of the declaration of trust which, by the tense of one of the verbs, might support a theory that Thomas B. Tomb paid the money to Henry M. Wisler, as trustee, and immediately borrowed it. Even construing the complaint in the light most favorable to the pleader, it appears that the whole transaction was on paper. The attempt to donate the money in trust lacked the essential of all gifts—unconditional delivery. Wanting that requisite element, it was "no more than an unexecuted and unenforceable promise to make a future gift." Beebe v. Coffin, 153 Cal. 177, 94 Pac. 768.

[2] A note intended as a mere gift, with no other consideration than natural affection, cannot form the basis of an action at law. The gift is always revocable until it is executed, and a promissory note intended as a gift is but a promise to make a gift in the future. The gift is not executed until the note is paid. Williams v. Forbes, 114 Ill. 171, 28 N. E. 463.

The judgment is affirmed.

HOLLAND v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO
et al. (S. F. 7084.)

1. MANDAMUS ☞57—CORRECTION OF BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

The action of the court in permitting incorporation in the bill of exceptions of matters subsequent to the entry of the judgment appealed from is erroneous, but, where such recitals were not material to the question of the validity of the judgment, they will not be considered by the appellate court; and hence their inclusion in the bill cannot prejudice petitioner's substantial rights, so that mandamus to correct the bill of exceptions will not be granted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 68, 114-120; Dec. Dig. ☞57.]

2. MANDAMUS ☞7—PURPOSE OF RELIEF.

The granting of a writ of mandate is within the discretion of the court, and the writ should issue only when necessary to protect a substantial right.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 5; Dec. Dig. ☞7.]

3. MANDAMUS ☞57—CORRECTION OF BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

Mandamus will not lie to compel the striking of matter from a settled bill of exceptions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 68, 114-120; Dec. Dig. ☞57.]

In Bank. Petition by Patrick Holland for writ of mandate, prayed to be directed against the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco and others. Writ denied.

W. E. Cashman, of San Francisco (R. M. F. Soto, of San Francisco, of counsel), for petitioner. William A. Kelly, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Patrick Holland applied for a writ of mandate to require the respondent judge of the superior court to certify as correct a certain offered bill of exceptions (a copy of which is included in the petition) if he finds it to be correct, or to fix a time and place for the settlement of a proper bill of exceptions, excluding therefrom all matters occurring after the entry of a certain purported judgment of December 19, 1913, and particularly those things which happened after January 9, 1914. Respondents filed both a demurrer and an answer to the petition.

From the petition it appears that Patrick Holland filed a complaint in equity, naming Julia McCarthy as the principal defendant. Issue was joined, and the case was tried before Hon. George A. Sturtevant, judge of the superior court, and a jury. A verdict on three of the counts was rendered in favor of defendant McCarthy on December 18, 1913, and on the following day the clerk of the court entered that which purported to be a judgment based thereon. On January 2, 1914, Patrick Holland, the plaintiff, appealed from said judgment. On January 3d he filed his undertaking on appeal, and on the 14th of the same month gave notice of such filing to the defendant Julia McCarthy. Later he served upon the said defendant his proposed bill of exceptions, and on April 20, 1914, she served upon Patrick Holland her proposed amendments thereto, which were not accepted by him. On April 30, 1914, the bill and the proposed amendments were delivered to the clerk for the judge, and later counsel met the respondent judge for the purpose of settling the bill of exceptions. By his attorney, Patrick Holland consented to one of the amendments, but objected to all of those proposed which related to matters occurring after December 19, 1913, and after the service of the proposed bill of exceptions. The respondent judge overruled these objections and directed the attorney for Julia McCarthy to rewrite the bill of exceptions, including the proposed amendments and such written formal objections as might be submitted by the representative of Patrick Holland. He also directed counsel for the respective parties to return at some other time. On May 1, 1914, Patrick Holland served his formal written objections to defendant's proposed amendments. On May 5, 1914, the attorney for Mr. Holland wrote to the attorney for Julia McCarthy, telling him that the judge was ready to sign a certain bill of exceptions, a copy of which was sent with the letter, and informing him that the engrossed bill would be presented to the said judge at a certain hour of that day. Julia McCarthy's attorney did not attend at the hour named, and the judge signed and certified a document which was intended to be the engrossed bill for the use of Patrick Holland on his appeal from the judgment of December 19, 1913. Subsequently Patrick Holland served notice of motion to strike out the bill of exceptions filed May 5, 1914; to authenticate and certify a form of a bill of exceptions served with the notice; or to fix a time for the settlement of said Holland's proposed bill. This motion was fully heard, and the judge stated that he would not settle nor allow any bill of exceptions to be used on the appeal from the judgment of December 19, 1913, unless said bill should contain a statement of matters which occurred subsequent to that date. These matters were: (1) An ex parte order made by the court of its own motion on April 1, 1914, purporting to vacate and set aside the judgment of December 19, 1913, and directing counsel for Mrs. McCarthy to prepare findings of fact and conclusions of law; (2) findings of fact and conclusions of law signed and filed April 1, 1914; and (3) a judgment based upon said findings and conclusions, and entered on April 2, 1914.

Petitioner also asserts that during the hearing of his motion on June 26, 1914, the judge wrote upon the bill of exceptions previously signed by him the words, "And the said bill is hereby settled and allowed as such," and that said bill was never refiled after said addition to it.

The ex parte order which petitioner desires to have eliminated from the bill of exceptions recites that the judgment of December 19, 1913, was inadvertently entered, the inadvertence "consisting in this: That said judgment was entered by said clerk before making and signing and filing of findings of fact and conclusions of law in said action, and before the rendition by said court of any judgment in said action; said judgment so entered as aforesaid having been entered by said clerk upon the verdict of the jury in said action."

Petitioner contends that by the perfecting of his appeal from the judgment of December 19, 1913, the court lost all jurisdiction over the judgment, and was divested of all power to impair the efficacy of that appeal by supplying omitted findings or in any other manner. In this behalf he cites such cases as Livermore v. Campbell, 52 Cal. 76; People v. Center, 54 Cal. 236; Parkside Realty Co. v. MacDonald, 167 Cal. 343, 139 Pac. 805; and Peycke v. Keefe, 114 Cal. 213, 46 Pac. 78.

Respondent, on the other hand, contends that the judgment in question was a nullity, and that therefore the lower court retained jurisdiction to set it aside and to enter a proper judgment based upon the decisions, findings, and conclusions of the court, rather than upon the verdict upon which the clerk erroneously acted without direction from the court. Respondent's position is this:

1. In an equity case the trial is not terminated when the jury renders its verdict, but when the court renders a judgment—citing Eates v. Gage, 49 Cal. 128; Warring v. Freear, 64 Cal. 56, 28 Pac. 115; Bell v. Marsh, 80 Cal. 414, 22 Pac. 170; Spottiswood v. Weir, 66 Cal. 529, 6 Pac. 381; Reclamation District v. Thisby, 131 Cal. 574, 63 Pac. 918.

2. The premature entry of the judgment of December 19, 1913, was a clerical misprision.

3. Such an error, being clerical, rather than judicial, may be corrected by the trial court at any time after appeal, if such correction do not affect substantial rights of the appellant—citing Brady v. Burke, 90 Cal. 4, 27 Pac. 52; City and County v. Brown, 153 Cal. 648, 96 Pac. 281; Egan v. Egan, 90 Cal. 21, 27 Pac. 22; San Joaquin L. & W. Co. v. West, 99 Cal. 346, 33 Pac. 928; Fay v. Stubenrauch, 141 Cal. 575, 75 Pac. 174; Boust v. Superior Court, 162 Cal. 345, 122 Pac. 956; and other authorities.

4. This correction, or rather this entry of a directed judgment in place of the unauthorized one entered by the clerk, did not materially affect the rights of Patrick Holland.

[1] Apparently the judge of the trial court has acted in the matter of settling a bill of exceptions to be used on the plaintiff's appeal from the purported judgment of December 19, 1913, and has settled such a bill. We are of the opinion that the judge erred in allowing to be inserted therein the matters occurring subsequent to the date of such judgment, which are hereinbefore specified, viz.: An order made April 1, 1914, by the court, purporting to vacate and set aside the judgment of December 19, 1913, etc.; findings of fact and conclusions of law signed April 1, 1914; and a judgment made April 2, 1914, based on such findings. These things have nothing to do with the question of the correctness of the clerk's attempted judgment of December 19, 1913, and are absolutely immaterial considerations on the appeal therefrom. Being immaterial, their recital in the bill of exceptions cannot prejudice plaintiff, for they will be disregarded in the disposition of the appeal, and therefore plaintiff needs no relief in regard thereto. If, on the appeal, the clerk's judgment is determined to have been invalid, it will be reversed. The question whether the lower court, assuming such a judgment to be, and treating it as, a nullity, had the power, after the appeal therefrom, to make findings and render its judgment, is one that will be determined on the appeal from the latter judgment, which appeal the petition shows has been taken by the plaintiff.

[2, 3] The granting of a writ of mandate is a matter within the discretion of the court. It should be granted where necessary to protect a substantial right, but should not be granted where no useful purpose will be subserved thereby. Besides, we do not understand that mandamus will lie to compel the striking out of matter from a settled bill of exceptions.

It follows from the foregoing discussion that the writ must be denied, and it is so ordered.

CROUCH v. H. L. MILLER & CO.

1. JUDGMENT $\hookrightarrow$ 485—COLLATERAL ATTACK—
"JUDGMENT ROLL."

On collateral attack, a judgment must be held valid unless it is shown to be void by the "judgment roll," which, where the complaint was not answered by defendant, consists, under Code Civ. Proc. § 670, of the summons, the affidavit of proof of service, the complaint with a memorandum indorsed thereon that defendant's default for not answering was entered, and a copy of the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 919; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 485.]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Judgment Roll.]

2. JUDGMENT $\hookrightarrow$ 497—COLLATERAL ATTACK—
RECITALS IN RECORD.

On collateral attack on a default judgment in a street assessment proceeding, and upon the judgment recital that "defendant H. L. Miller & Co., a corporation," had been regularly served with a copy of the summons and complaint, etc., it will be assumed that the defendant had been regularly served with summons.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 937, 938; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 497.]

3. JUDGMENT $\hookrightarrow$ 497—COLLATERAL ATTACK—
PRESUMPTION IN FAVOR OF JUDGMENT.

Where the record is silent as to what service was had on defendant, it will be presumed in favor of the judgment that what ought to have been done was not only done, but rightly done, but where the record shows what was done, it will not be presumed that something different was done; but such rule has no application where the record does not purport to show all that was done, and the judgment states that all that was necessary to be done was done.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 937, 938; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 497.]

4. JUDGMENT $\hookrightarrow$ 131—DEFAULT JUDGMENT—VALIDITY.

It is not essential to the entry of a valid default judgment against a defendant that the default should have been actually entered by the clerk, as a valid default judgment may be rendered by the court though no formal judgment has been rendered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 160, 245; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 131.]

5. CORPORATIONS $\hookrightarrow$ 514 — ALLEGATION OF CORPORATE EXISTENCE.

An allegation in the complaint of the corporate existence of a defendant corporation is not essential to jurisdiction over either the person of the defendant or the subject-matter of the action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2052-2081; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 514.]

6. JUDGMENT $\hookrightarrow$ 503—COLLATERAL ATTACK—
STATEMENT OF CAUSE OF ACTION.

On a collateral attack on a judgment it is immaterial whether the complaint sufficiently stated a cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 943; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 503.]

7. JUDGMENT $\hookrightarrow$ 497—COLLATERAL ATTACK—
STREET ASSESSMENT—JURISDICTION.

Where the complaint in a street assessment case showed a subject-matter and a demand for relief within the jurisdiction of the superior court, and the judgment roll recited that defendant corporation had been served with summons, the default judgment was valid as against a collateral attack, on which the court is concerned solely with questions of jurisdiction; and even if the assessment action did not "commence" against defendant until it was actually served with summons, and such service was not had until, under the statute, the assessment lien had expired by the lapse of two years from the date of record, this was immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 937, 938; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 497.]

8. JUDGMENT $\hookrightarrow$ 503—COLLATERAL ATTACK—
COMPLAINT—NAME OF PARTY.

On collateral attack it was immaterial that the name of a defendant in a street assessment case had not been actually substituted in the complaint for the fictitious name of "John Doe," or even that no order was made for such substitution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 943; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 503.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by Harry H. Crouch against H. L. Miller & Co. Judgment for plaintiff, motion for new trial denied, and defendant appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Davis & Rush, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Crouch & Crouch, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is an action to quiet title to a lot of land in the city of Long Beach, Los Angeles county. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendant appeals from such judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

It was stipulated that on July 20, 1910, the defendant was the owner in fee of the property here involved. Plaintiff claims to have acquired defendant's interest by virtue of certain proceedings for the enforcement of an assessment lien for street work on such land, culminating on March 25, 1912, in a deed executed by the sheriff of Los Angeles county to him, such deed having been executed to him as the purchaser at the sheriff's sale made in execution of the judgment given in the action brought to enforce the lien of the assessment. The only questions in this case are as to the validity of such judgment. If valid, plaintiff acquired the complete title to the property by the sheriff's deed. If invalid, defendant is still the owner of the property.

[1] Defendant's attack upon such judgment being collateral, the judgment must be held to be valid unless the record thereof, the judgment roll, shows it to be void—unless, as the authorities put it, it is void upon its face. In determining the question, we are restricted to the evidence afforded by the judgment roll. The rules applicable in determining such a question are stated, so far as material here, in such cases as Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391, 94 Am. Dec. 742, and Sacramento Bank v. Montgomery, 146 Cal. 745, 81 Pac. 138.

Where, as here, the complaint is not answered by a defendant personally served, the judgment roll as to him consists of the summons, the affidavit of proof of service, the complaint with a memorandum indorsed thereon that the default of the defendant in not answering was entered, and a copy of the judgment. Section 670, Code Civ. Proc.

The complaint in the street assessment case did not name defendant as a defendant therein, nor was the summons addressed to it. One C. G. Wilcox was made defendant; it being alleged that he was the owner of said land. The other defendants were John Doe, Richard Roe, James Black, and Sarah Green, as to whom it was alleged that each of them claims some interest in or lien on the property, which is subject to plaintiff's lien, and that plaintiff is ignorant of their true names, and therefore sues them by such fictitious names, asking that when the true name of any of them is discovered the complaint be amended accordingly. The summons was directed to all of these defendants. The affidavit of service attached to the summons, made by one Agnes Crouch, substantially states that on October 11, 1910, she personally served the summons on "H. L. Miller & Co. (sued herein as John Doe) by leaving copy of summons with H. L. Miller, its president." Another portion of the affidavit indicates that a copy of the complaint was attached to the copy of the summons so left with H. L. Miller. The summons, with such affidavit, was filed in the clerk's office on December 23, 1910, and on that day the clerk indorsed on the complaint a memorandum, reciting the service on "H. L. Miller & Co., sued as John Doe," and its failure to appear and answer within the time allowed by law, and declaring that "the default of said defendant * * * is hereby duly entered according to law." The judgment of the court rendered January 27, 1911, recites as follows:

"In the above-entitled action, the defendant H. L. Miller & Co., a corporation, having been regularly served with a copy of the summons and complaint in this action, and having suffered default to be entered against them, and upon a hearing had upon this day," etc.

There is nothing to indicate that any order was ever made for the amendment of the complaint so as to substitute the name of H. L. Miller & Co. for that of John Doe as defendant, except in so far as this may be implied from the foregoing recital. It is stated by appellant's counsel in their brief that this action was commenced on July 20, 1910, and it appears that the assessment and diagram were recorded on July 24, 1908.

[2, 3] In view of the rules declared in the cases we have cited, and the recital in the judgment that "defendant H. L. Miller & Co., a corporation," had been regularly served with a copy of the summons and complaint, etc., the claim of defendant that the affidavit of service is defective, and that there was no sufficient proof of service on file to warrant the clerk in entering the default, and that the entry of default by the clerk was ineffectual for any purpose, even if well based, is immaterial. It must still be assumed on this collateral attack in view of the recital in the judgment, that the "defendant H. L. Miller & Co., a corporation," was regularly served with summons. It is true, as claimed by defendant, that while, where the record is silent as to what was done, it will be presumed in favor of the judgment that what ought to have been done was not only done, but rightly done, yet when the record shows what was done, it will not be presumed that something different was done. But, as we said in Sacramento Bank v. Montgomery, supra, this statement "has no application where the record does not purport to show all that was done, and the judgment states that all that was necessary to be done was done." And we there quoted from Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391, 407 (94 Am. Dec. 742) as follows:

"To illustrate: Suppose that portion of the judgment roll denominated the 'affidavit or proof of service' shows that personal service was made upon the son of defendant, and the remainder of the roll says nothing about service. We then have a want of jurisdiction * * * upon the face of the record. But suppose the judgment states that the defendant appeared, or that personal service was made upon him, or something else that is equivalent, as it frequently does, the opposite result follows, for the record cannot lie, and it appears that the father as well as the son had been served, which may well have been the case. The record in such a case does not blow hot and cold, as might be supposed; on the contrary, both acts may have been done. On presentation of the return of service upon the son, the court may have declared it no service, and service upon the father may have been subsequently made, and the wrong return may have found its way into the judgment roll. To hold thus would be consistent with the record, while to hold otherwise would be to contradict the judgment."

The views thus expressed have never been departed from by this court. A recital in the judgment itself controls in so far as, taken as true, it is necessarily inconsistent with the idea that the portions of the record other than the judgment show all that was done in the way of attempting to acquire jurisdiction of the person of the defendant. If a judgment recital is such as to affirmatively show that it is based on an attempted service which is, in fact, a nullity, or if such recital is consistent with the idea that the other portions of the record show all that was done, of course a different situation is presented. In the case at bar, conceding for the purposes of this decision that the proof of service of summons contained in other portions of the judgment roll was insufficient, the recital in the judgment itself as to service is such that it cannot be true, if such other portions of the record show all that was done in the matter of service of summons.

[4] It was not essential to the entry of a valid judgment against said defendant that its default should have been actually entered by the clerk. Drake v. Duvenick, 45 Cal. 455, 462. "A valid judgment by default may be rendered by the court, though no formal default has been entered." Herman v. Santee, 103 Cal. 519, 522, 37 Pac. 509, 42 Am. St. Rep. 145. Whether or not the clerk's entry of default was ineffectual for any purpose is therefore immaterial.

[5] It has never been held, so far as we know, that an allegation in the complaint of the corporate existence of a defendant corporation is essential to the jurisdiction of the court over either the person of a defendant or the subject-matter of the action, and we do not see how it could be so held.

[6] It was held in People v. Central Pacific R. R. Co., 83 Cal. 395, 23 Pac. 303, that such an allegation is essential to a statement of a cause of action, but this ruling was shown to be erroneous and was disapproved in Los Angeles Ry. Co. v. Davis, 146 Cal. 179, 79 Pac. 865, 106 Am. St. Rep. 20. However, on a collateral attack on a judgment, it is absolutely immaterial whether the complaint sufficiently stated a cause of action.

[7] Jurisdiction of the person of a defendant is acquired by the service of process—the fact of service, and dates from such service. Herman v. Santee, 103 Cal. 519, 522, 37 Pac. 509, 42 Am. St. Rep. 145. As we have seen, the court in the street assessment case expressly found that the defendant corporation had been duly served with summons. Whatever imperfection there may have been in the complaint in the street assessment case, it certainly showed a subject-matter and a demand for relief that were within the jurisdiction of the superior court. This is all that is essential on a collateral attack. See Le Mesnager v. Variel, 144 Cal. 463, 77 Pac. 988, 103 Am. St. Rep. 91.

Even if it be conceded that the street assessment action should be held not to have been commenced against defendant corporation until such corporation was actually served with summons (see, however, Farris v. Merritt, 63 Cal. 118), and that such service was not had until after the street assessment lien had expired, the statute providing that such lien shall continue "for a period of two years from the date of said recording," such concession would be immaterial on this collateral attack on the judgment. What is said in Crane v. Cummings, 137 Cal. 201, 69 Pac. 984, and Le Mesnager v. Variel, supra, clearly shows this to be so. These cases but declare rules that have been stated over and over again by the courts. There is no conflict in the authorities on the proposition that the failure of a complaint to sufficiently state a cause of action in no way affects the jurisdiction of the court. And on this collateral attack we are concerned solely with questions of jurisdiction. It certainly cannot be disputed that the superior court had jurisdiction of actions for the foreclosure of street assessment liens, and it is immaterial on this attack that the complaint itself may have shown that the alleged lien had in fact expired. Page v. W. W. Chase Co., 145 Cal. 578, 79 Pac. 278, cited by defendant, in no way assists it. In that case the judgment attempted to be asserted against Page was given in an action from which he had been dismissed, and, of course, was thenceforth no longer a party. This court expressly said that if he had remained a party and judgment had been rendered against him, his interest in the land would have been bound by the judgment. Holt Manufacturing Co. v. Collins, 154 Cal. 265, 97 Pac. 516, also cited, is along the same lines as Page v. W. W. Chase Co., supra.

[8] It is also immaterial on this collateral attack that the name of defendant corporation was not actually substituted in the complaint in the street assessment case in the place and stead of the fictitious name of "John Doe," or even that no order was actually made by the court for such substitution. This was directly decided in Baldwin v. Morgan, 50 Cal. 585. Conceding that such omission was an irregularity, for which the judgment would have been reversed on appeal, it was said:

"The inquiry here, however, as to the validity of the decree, is not direct, as upon appeal, but collateral merely. The true inquiry, therefore, is not as to whether jurisdiction has been irregularly exercised, but is limited to the question whether it was obtained at all. The personal service of a summons upon Baldwin certainly vested the court without [with] jurisdiction over him, and however irregular its subsequent exercise, the validity of the decree rendered is not now open to inquiry."

See, also, Campbell v. Adams, 50 Cal. 203; Tyrrell v. Baldwin, 67 Cal. 1, 6 Pac. 867; Johnston v. San Francisco Sav. Union, 75 Cal. 134, 139, 16 Pac. 753, 7 Am. St. Rep. 129.

Defendant had no right on this collateral attack to introduce evidence outside the record of the judgment to show that it was not, in fact, served with summons.

What we have said substantially disposes of all the points made by defendant on this appeal. We have no doubt on the proposition that the judgment is not void on its face, and therefore that the sheriff's deed was effectual to convey all of defendant's interest in the land.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

KUNZ v. CALIFORNIA TRONA CO. et al.
(two cases). (S. F. 6901.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES ⇨518—CONSIDERATION—MONEY BORROWED.

Where money was loaned in consideration of the execution of notes by a corporation without any fraud on the part of the lender and payee, no lack of consideration for the notes would be shown by proof that the lender and payee was at the time indebted to the corporation maker in a larger amount in another transaction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 1816-1820; Dec. Dig. ⇨518.]

2. BILLS AND NOTES ⇨489—ACTION—PLEADING—SET-OFF.

Under answer in an action on notes executed by defendant corporation alleging that on or about the date of the making of the note the payee received from defendant an amount for which he accounted to it only in part and that the note was given on receipt of a part payment under the mistaken assumption that such payment was a loan, no claim of set-off was available.

3. BILLS AND NOTES ⇨384—BONA FIDE HOLDER—SET-OFF—APPLICATION OF STATUTE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 440, providing that, when cross-demands have existed between persons under such circumstances that if one had brought an action against the other a counterclaim could not have been set up, the two demands shall be deemed compensated so far as they equal each other, and neither can be deprived of the benefit thereof by the assignment of the other, was not intended to, and does not, affect the negotiability of commercial paper, or the rights of bona fide transferees.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 957; Dec. Dig. ⇨384.]

4. BILLS AND NOTES ⇨497—BONA FIDE HOLDER—PRESUMPTION—STATUTE.

Under the express provision of Civ. Code, § 3104, the indorsee of a negotiable instrument before maturity is presumed to be a bona fide holder for value.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 1448, 1675-1681, 1683-1687; Dec. Dig. ⇨497.]

5. BILLS AND NOTES ⇨509—ACTION—EVIDENCE—CONSIDERATION.

In an action on a note, evidence that plaintiff's attorney in fact, who signed for him certain notices of dishonor, was plaintiff's law partner and a nephew of the original payee, was inadmissible to show that there was no consideration for the payee's transfer of the notes to plaintiff.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by John F. Kunz against the California Trona Company, E. J. Boyes, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants Boyes and Simon appeal. Affirmed on hearing after judgment.

Action by John F. Kunz against the California Trona Company, E. J. Boyes, and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants California Trona Company and Boyes appeal. Affirmed on hearing after judgment.

Perry Evans, of San Francisco, for appellants. Arnold W. Liechti and R. H. Countryman, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. A further hearing in this court was granted after decision by the District Court of Appeal affirming the judgments and orders appealed from in the above actions. Three separate suits were brought by plaintiff as transferee of three different promissory notes to recover thereon, such separate suits being necessary by reason of the different defendants in each suit. The issues between the plaintiff and defendants in each action being identical, the cases were tried together. Judgment in each case was for plaintiff on the notes against the California Trona Company and some of the other defendants, and the latter appealed in each case from the judgment and order denying their motions for new trials. In two of these actions—those above entitled—the appeals were taken directly to the District Court of Appeal as within its appellate jurisdiction. The appeal in the other action was taken originally to this court on account of the amount involved, the California Trona Company having filed a cross-complaint in that particular action making the payee of the notes sued on a cross-defendant and asking judgment against him for $7,500. The judgment in that case was in favor of the plaintiff and also in favor of the cross-defendant. By order of this court that appeal was transferred to the District Court of Appeal. That court disposed of the appeals in all three actions—the two above in one opinion, and the appeal which was transferred to it from this court in a separate one. A further hearing was also granted in this court from the decision of the District Court of Appeal respecting the appeal last mentioned, but that matter will be considered by us separately. Addressing ourselves now to the appeals in the cases above entitled, a further consideration of them satisfies us that they were correctly disposed of by the District Court of Appeal, and we adopt the opinion of that court written by Justice KERRIGAN as a correct determination of the points there involved. That opinion is as follows:

Plaintiff sued as a transferee in due course on three promissory notes dated respectively December 27, 1910, January 5, and January 11, 1911. The note of January 5th was for the principal sum of $500, and the two others were for $1,000 each. All of the notes were executed by the defendant California Trona Company to the order of E. H. Merrill, as payee; but, as each was indorsed by different parties, three different actions were brought. These were consolidated for trial, and in each case judgment was given for the plaintiff. The maker and those indorsers against whom judgment was rendered have appealed from the several judgments and from orders denying motions for a new trial. In the action involving the note of January 5, 1911, the appeal was originally taken to the Supreme Court because of the amount involved. We shall in this opinion consider the appeals in the other two actions; and as the same questions are presented in each case we will, as counsel have, discuss them as though both notes were involved in the one action.

The only defense offered by the answer in each case is lack of consideration for the notes. In this behalf the answer alleges that on or about the date of the making of the note the payee, E. H. Merrill, "had and received on behalf of" the defendant California Trona Company the sum of $10,000; that he has paid or accounted to it for only $2,500; that of this amount $1,000 was paid on or about the date of the note in suit; and that the note was given upon the receipt of that amount "under the mistaken assumption of the officers of the said California Trona Company that the said payment was a loan." In a proposed amended answer, which the trial court did not permit to be filed, the defendants specified somewhat more particularly the circumstances of the alleged "mistaken assumption" by averring that at the time the note was given the defendants did not know Merrill to be at all indebted to the defendant company, and that the note was executed "under the mistaken assumption that the said E. H. Merrill was at the date thereof not indebted to the California Trona Company." The answer also alleged on information and belief that the matters averred in it were known to the plaintiff before the notes were transferred to him, and that there was no consideration for such transfer.

There are various assignments of error in the exclusion of evidence, but these with one exception (which is hereinafter mentioned) relate to evidence intended to show that the payee was "at or about" the time of the execution of the notes indebted to the maker of them. The evidence shows that one of the notes at least was executed by the officers of the defendant company under express authority of a resolution of its board of directors, authorizing them to borrow $1,000 of Merrill, and to execute the note of the corporation therefor. It is not questioned that both were corporate acts.

[1] The one question presented is, therefore, whether a note executed for money borrowed is without consideration where, at the time, the payee has received and holds money belonging to the maker of the note in an equal or greater amount, without that fact being known to the maker of the note.

In the opinion rendered upon the first hearing of this case (a rehearing having been subsequently granted), this question was answered affirmatively, upon the principle that the mere doing of that which one is legally bound to do is not consideration for a new promise. On further consideration, however, we do not regard that principle as determinative of the case presented by this record. Payment by Merrill of money which he owed to the California Trona Company would not be consideration for the execution of a note; but it was not payment of the pre-existing indebtedness unless so intended, and it is not claimed in this case that the money which the California Trona Company received from Merrill as consideration for the notes in question was delivered by him or received by it as payment of any indebtedness between the parties. Indeed, the opposite is claimed. The money was loaned by Merrill in consideration of the execution of the notes, and these were executed by the corporation in consideration of such loan. No fraud on the part of Merrill is alleged; and no lack of consideration for the notes would be shown by proof that Merrill was, at the time, indebted to the corporation in even a larger amount on another transaction.

Where a note is given for an amount due the payee from the maker on a certain contract, this is a sufficient consideration for the note, although the payee may owe the maker at the time more than the face of the note on other contracts. Knox v. Clifford, 38 Wis. 651, 20 Am. Rep. 28.

[2] It may be suggested that a different rule is established by section 440 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in providing that: "When cross-demands have existed between persons under such circumstances that, if one had brought an action against the other, a counterclaim could have been set up, the two demands shall be deemed compensated, so far as they equal each other, and neither can be deprived of the benefit thereof by the assignment or death of the other." Conceding that some of the evidence offered would have been admissible if a valid defense had been pleaded by the answer, we are of the opinion that the defense pleaded, as already stated, showed no lack of consideration for the notes, and that no claim of set-off was available under the pleadings in this action even if the evidence had been received. The date of accrual of the claimed liability from Merrill to the California Trona Company is alleged only as "at or about the time" the several notes were executed, and the existence of that liability at the dates of the earlier notes is pleaded only by inference if at all. The evidence offered, so far as it discloses any dates, does not indicate the existence or admission of any liability prior to January 17, 1911, which is the date of the latest of the notes.

[3, 4] But apart from these considerations, section 440, Code of Civil Procedure, is not intended to and does not affect the negotiability of commercial paper, or the rights of bona fide transferees of such paper. The plaintiff, being admittedly an indorsee before maturity of a negotiable instrument, was presumed to be a bona fide holder for value. Civ. Code, § 3104; Luning v. Wise, 64 Cal. 410, 1 Pac. 495, 874; Giselman v. Starr, 106 Cal. 651, 40 Pac. 8; Palmer v. Goodwin, 5 Cal. 458. The answer, it is true, alleged on information and belief that he took with knowledge of the facts which are relied upon as showing want of consideration for the notes, and that the transfer to him was without consideration. But no evidence was offered upon this allegation which was either relevant or worthy of consideration.

If want of consideration for the notes had been pleaded and proved, it might be that the burden would have been shifted to plaintiff to prove his status as a bona fide holder for value; but that defense, as we have seen, was not established.

[5] The defendants sought to introduce evidence that the attorney in fact of plaintiff, who signed for him certain notices of dishonor of the notes, was the law partner of plaintiff and a nephew of Merrill, the original payee. Defendants' counsel stated that this was "offered as proof of the fact that there was no consideration for the transfer of the notes by Merrill to Kunz." It obviously had no relevancy or probative value on this issue, and was properly excluded. This being the only evidence offered in support of the allegations of the answer which negatived plaintiff's status as a bona fide holder for value, and there being, as we have seen, no pleading or proof of facts showing a want of consideration for the notes themselves, we see no error in the rulings of the trial court.

The judgments and orders appealed from are affirmed.

KUNZ v. CALIFORNIA TRONA CO. et al.
CALIFORNIA TRONA CO. v. MERRILL.

(S. F. 6379.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 15, 1915.

1. PARTIES ⇨93—OBJECTION—WAIVER.

In an action by the indorsee of a note against the corporation maker, wherein the maker filed a cross-complaint against the original payee by stipulation of the other parties, the payee, who appeared but did not object to being brought into court or move to dismiss the cross-complaint, but demurred and then answered and suffered judgment in the superior court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the objection that the filing of the cross-complaint was improper was waived.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨926 — REVIEW — CONSIDERATION OF EVIDENCE.

In such action, where the action on the note and on the cross-complaint were tried together on the issue whether the cross-defendant was indebted to the maker when it executed its note to him as payee, and where it was stipulated in the trial that all objections to evidence made by plaintiff should be available to the cross-defendant, and where at the close of trial, when the plaintiff's attorney asked for judgment, the defendant rested as against the cross-defendant, the evidence offered and pertinent to the issues raised by the cross-complaint would be deemed as offered to sustain them.

3. BILLS AND NOTES ⇨503—ACTION—EVIDENCE.

In an indorsee's action on a note, wherein the defendant, maker, filed a cross-complaint against the payee, tried together upon the issue as to whether the payee had been indebted to the maker, for money received by him from a third party for the maker's benefit, evidence for the maker of a resolution of its directors authorizing an option to such third party, and of its delivery to that party's attorney for signature by a writing from the payee authorizing the maker to charge him with $10,000 in case of his sale of the maker's property, and evidence sought by questions as to whether the payee had ever admitted the receipt of the $10,000, as to what the payee said when he delivered such writing, and as to whether witness knew if the payee was indebted to the defendant, was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 1733-1739; Dec. Dig. ⇨503.]

4. WITNESSES ⇨240—EXAMINATION—LEADING QUESTIONS.

Such questions were not objectionable as leading questions.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by John F. Kunz against the California Trona Company, E. J. Boyes, and others, with cross-complaint by the company against E. H. Merrill. Judgment for plaintiff and for Merrill, and the company and defendants Boyes and Lucien Simon appeal.

On hearing after judgment in District Court of Appeals, affirmed as to plaintiff Kunz and reversed as to the cross-defendant Merrill.

Perry Evans, of San Francisco, for appellants. Arnold W. Liechti and R. H. Countryman, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This is the appeal referred to in the opinion filed this day in the other appeals in the case of John F. Kunz, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. California Trona Co. et al., Defendant and Appellants (S. F. No. 6901) 146 Pac. 883, and reference is made to the opinion on that appeal for a more particular statement of the circumstances under which this and the actions embraced therein were tried in the superior court. This action was to recover on one of the three promissory notes mentioned in the appeal in the other cases—the note of January 5, 1911, for the sum of $500. The pleadings and issues between the plaintiff and defendants as to this note are the same as there. The actions were all tried together, and the points made for a reversal of the judgment and order denying a new trial, as far as the right of the plaintiff to recover on the note in this action is concerned, are identical with those presented and considered in the other appeals, and for the reasons therein given the judgment in favor of the plaintiff and the order denying the motion of the defendant for a new trial are affirmed.

This appeal, however, involves questions other than those arising between plaintiff and defendant respecting the note sued on. After the defendants had answered the complaint, a stipulation was entered into between them and the plaintiff that an order of court might be made bringing in one E. H. Merrill, the payee and indorsee to the plaintiff of the note sued on, as a party defendant, and to that end that a cross-complaint might be filed by the defendant California Trona Company and served on said Merrill as cross-defendant. The court so ordered, and a cross-complaint was accordingly filed by the California Trona Company against Merrill, alleging that about December 27, 1910, he had received from the Western Securities Company for and on behalf of the cross-complainant, the Trona Company, the sum of $10,000; that he had paid cross-complainant $2,500 thereof, of which $500 was paid when the note sued on in the complaint in the action was executed and delivered to Merrill by said Trona Company; that there never was any consideration for said note; that it was given on the receipt of said $500 under a mistaken assumption of the officers of the cross-complainant company that said payment was a loan; that $7,500 was still due, owing, and unpaid from said Merrill to the cross-complainant company; and prayed judgment against him for that amount. Merrill appeared and answered the cross-complaint denying its allegations. Under the issues made by the cross-complaint and answer thereto, the trial court gave judgment for the cross-defendant Merrill against the Trona Company, and the latter appealed from that judgment and an order denying its motion for a new trial, as well as from the judgment against it in favor of the plaintiff.

[1] On the oral argument before this court, and for the first time, it was urged by the attorney of the respondent cross-defendant Merrill that under section 389 of the Code of Civil Procedure a stranger to an action already before a trial court may not be brought into it except for the purpose of making a determination of the controversy between the parties already before the court complete; that Merrill was such a stranger, not being a party to the action brought by plaintiff to recover on the note; that as the controversy between the California Trona Company and Merrill was merely to recover a balance of money alleged to be due from Merrill to said company, and this matter was in no way related or relevant to the controversy between the parties plaintiff and defendant already before the court, which was solely as to the note, that the filing of the cross-complaint was improper, and the issues raised thereunder were not properly in the case. For these reasons it was urged by counsel for respondent Merrill that this court should decline to consider the merits of the appeal of cross-complainant, but should reverse the judgment with directions to the trial court to dismiss the cross-complaint. But the answer to this point or proposition is that it is now urged too late. It may be true that, if timely objection had been made in the trial court by any of the parties to the action against the filing of the cross-complaint or by Merrill when it was sought to bring him in as a cross-defendant, it would have been improper for the trial court to have permitted the filing of that pleading or to have overruled a motion made by Merrill to dismiss it. But no such objection was made by any of the parties to the action then before the court. As far as they are concerned, they all stipulated that the cross-complaint might be filed and Merrill brought in as a cross-defendant. Merrill himself, when he appeared, raised no objection to being brought in nor did he make any motion to dismiss the cross-complaint, but on the contrary demurred and then answered to it. Even on this appeal counsel for Merrill in his briefs filed made no attack whatever on the action of the trial court in permitting the filing of the cross-complaint against him. The superior court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter embraced in the cross-complaint, and, if it be conceded that it acquired jurisdiction under an improper filing of that pleading, still as no objection whatever was made by Merrill against being brought in as a cross-defendant under it, but on the contrary he answered to it, it is too late for him after judgment rendered by the court on the issues raised under it to make any claim that the filing of the cross-complaint was improper. He is deemed to have waived that point by failure to make it at the opportune time in the trial court. Santa Barbara v. Eldred, 95 Cal. 381, 30 Pac. 562. The justice of applying that rule is exemplified in this case, where it appears from the record that, if the point urged could prevail now and the cross-complaint be dismissed, the cross-complainant would be without any redress against Merrill as its right of action on the indebtedness has become barred by the statute of limitations.

[2] The sole question presented in the briefs is the correctness of certain rulings of the court in rejecting evidence which it is claimed by appellant cross-complainant was offered by it in support of the cross-complaint. We say claimed because it is insisted by counsel for respondent Merrill that the assigned errors respecting the exclusion of evidence have no relevancy in this particular appeal because he asserts that such excluded evidence was not offered on the issues raised by the cross-complaint and answer thereto, but were offered solely on the issues made by the complaint and answer respecting the note sued on in the action. Meeting this claim, appellant insists that the rejected evidence was offered on all the issues to which it was relevant whether made under the complaint and answer, or cross-complaint and answer thereto, and that it was so understood to be offered on the trial. The record is not as satisfactory on this question as it might be, but we think from a careful examination of it that it supports the claim of appellant. All the actions were tried together, and the main issue in the actions between plaintiff and defendant, as well as between the cross-complainant and cross-defendant, was whether Merrill was indebted to the California Trona Company on December 27, 1910, for money received by him from the Western Securities Company for the benefit of the Trona Company. The defendants and the cross-defendant Merrill were represented by different attorneys. It was stipulated early in the trial, however, that all objections made by the attorney for plaintiff to the introduction of evidence should be considered as made by and available to the attorney for the cross-defendant. It is true that at one point in the case the attorney for plaintiff insisted that the evidence which was then being introduced by the Trona Company should be considered solely as addressed to the issues between plaintiff and defendant and the court so limited the offer. But thereafter, when other evidence was being introduced by the Trona Company, counsel for the cross-defendant interposed objections to that evidence which were sustained. If the evidence upon that subject was being introduced solely on the issues between the plaintiff and defendants, it was none of the business of counsel for cross-defendant to object. Whether the evidence then being offered was admissible or not did not concern his client. The only theory with which the action of the attorney for cross-defendant in making objections to the introduction of evidence is consistent is that, as the actions were being all tried together, it was considered that the evidence offered, if material, was deemed offered on all issues involved except in the one instance referred to. But any doubt on this subject is, we think, removed by what occurred at the close of the trial on the issues between plaintiff and defendants. The court having rejected practically all the evidence offered by the defendants, their attorney announced that he rested his case. The attorney for plaintiff asked for judgment in favor of the plaintiff. Thereupon the attorney for the cross-defendant inquired of the attorney for cross-complainant whether he rested also on the cross-complaint. The reply was:

"Yes, the matter already offered by us is offered in support of the cross-complaint, and in view of his honor's rulings we rest."

Counsel for the cross-defendant without any reply to this statement then moved the court for judgment in favor of cross-defendant which was ordered. No objection was made to this offer of the evidence by the attorney for cross-complainant or the court, and, if the evidence which had already been offered in the case was also pertinent to the issues raised by the cross-complaint, we think it must be treated and deemed as offered to sustain the issues made under that pleading. It was not necessary for cross-complainant to recall its witnesses, and renew its attempt to get the same evidence before the court unless opposing counsel refused to accept the offer made and required it to be done. His failure to make any objection at all to the offer was an acquiescence in it, and we must consider it and the various rulings of the court upon it as evidence offered on the issues raised under the cross-complaint.

[3] Now as to the evidence offered and the rulings of the court in excluding it: Cross-complainant offered a resolution of the board of directors of the Trona Company passed at a meeting held January 17, 1911, authorizing its president and secretary to execute in the name of the company an option for the sale of its property to the Western Securities Company, proffered proof of the execution of said option by the Trona Company, and delivery of it to its attorney to have it signed by the officers of the Western Securities Company. The terms of the option do not appear in the resolution. The following writing was also offered:

"San Francisco, Cal. January 17, 1911. California Trona Company, Central Bank Building, Oakland, Calif.—Gentlemen: I hereby authorize you to charge up as paid by you against my commission contracts the sum of ten thousand (10,000) dollars in case sale of your property is made by me to the Western Securities Company. Very truly yours, E. H. Merrill."

It was admitted that the signature to this letter was that of the cross-defendant Merrill, and it was stipulated that the sale was never made and that the option referred to in the resolution had expired. An objection to the introduction of the resolution and the letter was made on the ground that they were immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent, and not responsive to the issues, and sustained. The secretary of the Trona Company was asked in his examination as a witness on behalf of said Trona Company this question:

"Did E. H. Merrill ever admit to you that he received any money from the Western Securities Company?"

Further:

"On January 17, 1911, did E. H. Merrill state to you that he had received the sum of $10,000 from the Western Securities Company and for that reason the option of the Western Securities Company which he required the company to give would be for $990,000 and that he wished you would not ask him what he had done with the $10,000?"

Objections to these questions on the ground, to the first, that it was immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent and calling for the conclusion of the witness; to the second, for the same reason with the additional ground that it was leading—were sustained by the court. To the next inquiry made of this same witness, "Has Colonel E. H. Merrill stated to you that he had received the sum of $10,000 from the California Trona Company?" the same objections were urged and sustained. The president of the Trona Company, as a witness, testified that the letter from Merrill above set forth was delivered to him by Merrill, and he was then asked, "What, if anything, did Colonel Merrill state to you when he delivered that letter?" Objection was made to this question that it was immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent and not responsive to any issue, and sustained. Another question to this witness, "At the meeting of January 17, 1911, did E. H. Merrill state anything bearing upon his connection with the option given by the California Trona Company to the Western Securities Company?" was objected to on the ground that it was irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent, called for the conclusion of the witness, and was leading, and the objection sustained. A further question to this witness, "Do you know if on January 17th Colonel E. H. Merrill was indebted to the California Trona Company?" was sustained by the court on the ground that the inquiry was not responsive to the issue, though it was objected to on the further grounds urged against the last preceding question. This constitutes the evidence offered and excluded.

[4] It will be noted that some of the evidence was excluded as not responsive to the issues. That ground had reference solely to the offered evidence as applying to the defense of the defendants against liability on the note to which this evidence was also being offered. This objection that the evidence was not responsive to the issues could, of course, have no application to the cross-complaint against Merrill. We think that this evidence sought to be presented was relevant and competent on the issue of whether Merrill was indebted to the cross-complainant Trona Company raised under its cross-complaint and the answer thereto of Merrill. Nor is it clear that the objections to some of these questions that they were leading were well taken. Most of them, however, were not open to these objections or to any other. All were pertinent to the issue and should have been allowed to be answered, as the court should also have allowed in evidence the resolution of the Trona Company and the letter of Merrill. The refusal to do so constituted prejudicial error.

Our conclusion therefore is that, as far as the appeal herein applies to the judgment and order in the action between plaintiff and defendants involving the promissory note of January 5, 1911, that judgment and order should be affirmed.

As to the appeal from the judgment and order in favor of the cross-defendant Merrill, that judgment and order are reversed.

In re CULLBERG'S ESTATE. (S. F. 6937.)
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 15, 1915.)

1. WILLS ⇨289 — PROBATE — BURDEN OF PROOF—TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY—CONTEST.

Although the burden of proof of testamentary incapacity is on contestants of the will, nevertheless the proponent must first make a prima facie showing of due execution to satisfy the statute, though execution is not an issue under the contest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 653-661; Dec. Dig. ⇨289.]

2. WITNESSES ⇨266—WITNESSES TO WILL—CROSS-EXAMINATION BY CONTESTANTS AS TO EXECUTION.

Where a preliminary examination of the subscribing witnesses to a will, probate of which was contested for mental unsoundness, was had to satisfy the statute of wills, cross-examination by the attorneys for the contestants was proper as an aid to the court, though contestants were not strictly parties to such preliminary hearing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 907-912, 914-920, 922; Dec. Dig. ⇨266.]

3. WILLS ⇨52—TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY—PRESUMPTION OF SANITY.

Where the only evidence offered in a contest over the probate of a will bore on the regularity of the execution, an order denying probate cannot be sustained on the ground of testatrix's unsoundness of mind, since sanity is presumed in the absence of evidence disproving it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 101-110; Dec. Dig. ⇨52.]

4. WILLS ⇨302—EXECUTION — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence held sufficient to show due execution of a will to meet the prima facie requirements of the statute before contest over probate on other grounds was possible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 575, 581, 700-710; Dec. Dig. ⇨302.]

5. WILLS ⇨120—EXECUTION — REQUEST TO WITNESSES.

In the absence of words spoken by testatrix, declaring a document to be her will, or of a special request from her to the witnesses to sign it as such, it was sufficient for a proper execution if such declaration and request were unmistakably indicated by her conduct and action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 314-317; Dec. Dig. ⇨120.]

6. WILLS ⇨71 — STATUTE OF WILLS — CONSTRUCTION.

The courts cannot dispense with the statutory requisites to the making of wills; but, in determining what the requisites are, regard should be had to the purpose and spirit of the statute, rather than to a rigid reading of the words used by the Legislature.

7. WILLS ⇨120—EXECUTION—REQUISITES.

No act indicating acquiescence of testatrix in another's request that witnesses sign her will as such is necessary to find an implied request, where she knew what was going on and did not object.

8. WILLS ⇨386 — PROBATE — APPEAL — REVIEW—QUESTION OF FACT.

The question of due execution of a will is one of fact, the trial court's decision on the point not being reversible unless so clearly without support in evidence as to constitute error as a matter of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 859; Dec. Dig. ⇨386.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. S. Wells, Judge.

Application by Isaac Cullberg, Jr., for the probate of the will of Hannah M. Cullberg, deceased, contested by certain of the heirs at law. Probate was denied, and proponent appeals. Reversed, with directions.

A. J. Monroe, of Eureka, Gibson & Woolner, of Oakland, and E. Lyders, of San Francisco, for appellant. Chapman & Trefethen, of Oakland, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. This is an appeal from an order denying probate of a paper claimed to be the last will of Hannah M. Cullberg, deceased. The petition for admission to probate was filed by Isaac Cullberg, Jr., named in the alleged will as executor. Certain of the heirs at law filed a contest, specifying unsoundness of mind as their sole ground of contest. When the matter came on for hearing, the court required the proponent to make preliminary proof of the execution of the will. The subscribing witnesses and the proponent were called and examined. Over the objection of the proponent, the contestants were permitted to cross-examine these witnesses. At the conclusion of their testimony the court announced that it was satisfied that the will was not properly executed, but expressed its willingness to hear testimony on the issue of the testatrix's soundness of mind. Under these circumstances, the proponent declined to offer further testimony, and an order was entered denying probate. This order recited that the testatrix did not declare to the attesting witnesses that the instrument was her will, and that she did not request said witnesses to sign as witnesses.

[1,2] Although the contestants had the burden of proof on the issues raised by their contest, the court acted properly in first calling for a prima facie showing of due execution. Estate of Latour, 140 Cal. 414, 437, 73 Pac. 1070, 74 Pac. 441. While this was not an issue presented by the contest, the court could not admit the will to probate without a showing that it had been executed according to the statutory requirements. The contestants were not, strictly speaking, parties to this preliminary inquiry; but we cannot see that the court violated any substantial right of the proponent by permitting the contestants to cross-examine the witnesses regarding the details of the alleged execution. Whether the court questioned these witnesses itself, as it undoubtedly had the right to do, or permitted the contestant's attorneys to do in the inquiry, is not a matter of serious moment.

[3] The only question remaining is whether the evidence justified the court's finding that the will had not been duly executed. There is no merit in contestants' claim that the order may be sustained on the ground of want of proof of testamentary capacity. Soundness of mind is presumed, in the absence of evidence disproving it, and the showing before the court was not such as to overcome the presumption. Furthermore, the court made it entirely clear that its ruling was based solely on the ground of want of execution. It did not assume to pass, even preliminarily, on the issue of soundness of mind.

[4] The testimony of the persons present when the will was signed varied in some particulars. But there was little, if any, conflict on the facts which we regard as essential. Taking the version most favorable to the claim of the contestants, the showing was, briefly, as follows: Mrs. Cullberg, the testatrix, was of the age of 80 years, or more. She was in feeble health, and was residing at Oakland with her husband, Isaac Cullberg, who was some years older and was in an even more precarious physical condition. Both husband and wife were under the medical care of Dr. Clara M. Holmes (now Dr. Holmes-Brazelton), one of the subscribing witnesses. A nurse, Mrs. Nettie F. Bowen, was attending the husband. The proponent, Isaac Cullberg, Jr., was a nephew of Isaac Cullberg. On the morning of the day the will was signed, Dr. Holmes informed Isaac Cullberg, Jr., that the old gentleman was near death, that his wife might not long survive him, and that if she wanted to arrange her affairs she had better have it done at once. The nephew consulted Mrs. Cullberg, and was told by her that she wanted to make a will. She referred him to certain papers in a safe deposit box, handed him the key to the box, and directed that a will be drawn as indicated by those papers. He obtained the papers, had a will drawn by an attorney, and took the draft back to the home of Mrs. Cullberg. He, Dr. Holmes, and Mrs. Eberts, a niece of Mrs. Cullberg, went into Mrs. Cullberg's room. The will was handed to Mrs. Eberts, who began to read it aloud. After reading a part of the paper, she said she could not go on, as she was overcome by emotion. She left the room, and Mrs. Bowen was called. The only persons then in the room were Mrs. Cullberg, Isaac Cullberg, Jr., Dr. Holmes, and Mrs. Bowen. The will was handed by Mrs. Cullberg to Dr. Holmes, who proceeded to complete the reading of it aloud. The paper contained an attestation clause in the usual form, declaring that the foregoing instrument was, on its date, by Hannah M. Cullberg, "signed and sealed and published as, and declared to be her last will and testament, in the presence of us, who, at her request and in her presence, and in the presence of each other subscribed our names as witnesses thereto." This, too, was read aloud by Dr. Holmes. Mr. Cullberg then indicated to Mrs. Cullberg the place for her signature. She signed. He then asked Dr. Holmes and Mrs. Bowen to sign under the attestation clause, and they did so. During the entire proceeding, according to the testimony of Dr. Holmes, not a word was spoken by Mrs. Cullberg.

[5-7] Notwithstanding the silence of Mrs. Cullberg, we think the court should have found that due execution of the will had been shown. As we have very recently had occasion to say, it is not necessary that the testator should have spoken words declaring the document to be his will, or that he should expressly request the witnesses to sign it as such. It is sufficient if this declaration and request are unmistakably indicated to the persons signing as witnesses by the testator's conduct and action, although there is no declaration in words to that effect. Est. of Silva (S. F. No. 6772) 145 Pac. 1015. Unless Mrs. Cullberg was incapable of understanding what was going on—and this was not shown and is not presumed—the whole course of proceedings was inconsistent with any other conclusion than that she intended to have those present know that she gave effect to the paper as her will, and that she desired Dr. Holmes and Mrs. Bowen to sign it as attesting witnesses. It was perfectly apparent that Isaac Cullberg, Jr., was acting in her behalf for the purpose of assisting her to make a will. When he had her sign the paper which had been read, and then asked the physician and the nurse to sign at the end of the attestation clause which had also been read, her silent acquiescence was, under the circumstances, open to no other interpretation than that she joined in or approved the declaration and request which had been made on her behalf. The courts have, of course, no right to dispense with proof of any of the statutory requirements for the making of wills (In re Walker, 110 Cal. 390, 42 Pac. 815, 30 L. R. A. 460, 52 Am. St. Rep. 104); but, in determining what is required, regard should be had to the essential purpose of the various provisions, rather than to a strict and rigid reading of the words used by the Legislature. And so it has generally been held that, under statutes like ours, the declaration by the testator that the document is his will, and his request for its attestation, need not be stated in exact terms, but may be implied from his conduct and the attendant circumstances. 40 Cyc. 1115; Coffin v. Coffin, 23 N. Y. 9, 80 Am. Dec. 235; Rogers v. Diamond, 13 Ark. 474, 487; Moore v. Moore, 2 Bradf. Sur. 261, 265; Doe v. Roe, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 200; Savage v. Bowen, 103 Va. 540, 49 S. E. 668; Conrades v. Heller, 119 Md. 448, 87 Atl. 28; In re Miller's Estate, 37 Mont. 545, 97 Pac. 935. The cases cited afford examples of the circumstances which will give rise to the inference of declaration and request. In most of them facts parallel to those before us are held to be sufficient. In Hull v. Hull, 117 Iowa, 738, 89 N. W. 979, the court, in speaking of the evidence necessary to establish attestation, says that:

"It seems to be sufficient that in the presence of the testator and at his request a third person asked the witnesses to attest the execution of the will, and that such request was, in the presence of the witnesses, approved of by some sign or act on the part of the testator, and that the witnesses, with the knowledge of the testator, and in response to such request, signed their names. * * * Indeed, it is settled that not even an act or motion indicating acquiescence by the testator in the request to the witnesses is necessary, where it is made in his presence, and he knows that the witnesses are signing in response to such request, and makes no objection. Under such circumstances, his silence is a sufficient indication that the request is by his authority."

See, also, Matter of Nelson, 141 N. Y. 152, 36 N. E. 3; Harp v. Parr, 168 Ill. 459, 43 N. E. 113; Peck v. Cary, 27 N. Y. 9, 84 Am. Dec. 220; Bundy v. McKnight, 48 Ind. 502; Inglesant v. Inglesant, L. R. 3 Prob. & Div. 172.

[8] We are not unmindful of the consideration that the question of due execution is one of fact, and that its determination by the court below is not to be overthrown unless that determination is without support in the evidence. But we are satisfied that under the undisputed evidence, and on a correct construction of the statute, only one conclusion, that of due execution, could be drawn. The court below should have held that the proponent had met the requirements of a prima facie showing, and should have proceeded to a hearing of the contest on the issue of soundness of mind.

The order is reversed, with directions to the court below to proceed in accordance with this opinion.

PEOPLE v. VERTREES. (Cr. 1866.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 19, 1915.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW — 534 — EXTRAJUDICIAL CONFESSION—PROOF OF CORPUS DELICTI.

Conviction cannot be had on the extrajudicial confession of a defendant, unless corroborated by proof aliunde of the corpus delicti, and though all the elements of the crime charged must appear in such proof, it need not be of such a conclusive character as is required for conviction.

2. CRIMINAL LAW — 1169 — HARMLESS ERROR — ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution against V. for burglary with intent to steal, certain written evidence used in proceedings before the grand jury leading up to the indictment of K., the admission in evidence of such indictment was harmless error, where the fact of the indictment was already in evidence.

3. BURGLARY — 31 — EVIDENCE—RELEVANCY.

In a prosecution against V. for burglary with intent to steal, papers used in proceedings before the grand jury leading up to an indictment against K., evidence that defendant showed witnesses a check drawn by K. in favor of V. is not admissible; no connection between the crime and check being shown.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Burglary, Cent. Dig. §§ 83, 86, 88; Dec. Dig. — 31.]

4. WITNESSES — 372 — BIAS—COMPETENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Where, in a prosecution against V. for burglary with intent to steal papers used in proceedings before the grand jury, leading up to the indictment of K., the father of K. admitted on the stand that he was interested in the suit, as he was jointly charged with V., the prosecution could not, to show bias of witness, elicit a story as to forgery of a check by V., not connected with the burglary.

Shaw and Lawlor, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Glenn County; Wm. M. Finch, Judge.

Jesse C. Vertrees was convicted of burglary, and he appeals. Reversed.

Ben F. Geis, of Willow, and Durand F. Geis, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Claude F. Purkitt, Dist. Atty., of Willow, for the People.

MELVIN, J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of burglary of the first degree. He was sentenced to imprisonment for the term of 10 years.

It was the theory of the prosecution that the defendant, on or about July 21, 1912, entered the office of the district attorney of Glenn county with intent to commit larceny and that he stole and took away from said office certain letters, a hotel register, and a page which had been torn from the register of another hotel. These articles had been used before the grand jury during the proceedings which led to the indictment of one Otto Klemmer on the charge of contributing to the dependency of a minor. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial, urging as reasons for reversal: (1) That there was no proof of the corpus delicti aside from the confessions of the defendant; (2) that the court committed error in certain rulings on the admissibility of testimony; and (3) that there was no evidence showing the commission of the alleged offense in the nighttime, and hence no proof justifying a verdict of burglary of the first degree.

The district attorney testified that after the indictment of Otto Klemmer he took the exhibits with him to his office. The letters were placed in his files, and the hotel register, containing and folded up within it the leaf from the other hotel register, was put in a drawer in his desk. He saw the exhibits at various times until about two weeks before he discovered that they were missing. On or about July 21, 1912, he had occasion to examine the exhibits, and then found that they were not in his office. He and his stenographer made careful search, and in the course of the investigation he found that the screen to the window of the room in which the papers had been filed was cut. About three feet below the window, outside of the building, was the surface or top of a cellar door. The district attorney thus described the condition of the screen:

"There was a steel post that went through the screen into the hole in the wall. At this point here it was, which was about nine inches about, above the lower east corner of the window, and one that went through the opposite side, the west side, of the window, and also another that went through on the east side of the screen here, being the same kind of screen as this is in size, but old. [Referring to screen in courthouse window back of witness chair.] The steel post that went through this part of the window had a mark on it, corrugated marks, running lengthwise the same way as the post did, of bright, new, freshly put on there marks, and this side of the window had been forcibly torn out, splitting the wood. The screen had also been torn loose from the jamb of the window on this side of the top."

Witness also stated that he had seen tracks of a man's shoes outside of the building and passing under one of the windows of his office. These tracks were in the freshly worked ground between the building and the beaten path. He had observed these tracks a few days before he missed the exhibits from his office; his attention having been directed thereto by the janitor. This testimony which was corroborated by other witnesses, who saw the broken screen and the tracks under the window, related all the facts upon which the prosecution sought to establish the corpus delicti, aside from the alleged confession of the defendant. On the witness stand the defendant denied that he had entered the office of the district attorney, or that he had made any confession. Witness Noble related two alleged confessions, and witness Wieland testified that he overheard one of them. Noble stated that between the first and the second conversations with the defendant he went to the district attorney and told that officer that he could "produce the man that committed the crime or said he had," but did not mention any name. After the second conversation with defendant, according to Noble's testimony, he told the district attorney the name of the man who had made the confessions. The first confession, as related by Noble, was as follows:

"Mr. Vertrees told me that he entered the office of the district attorney Purkitt, and secured some papers; took some papers that was evidence pertaining to the Otto Klemmer case; that he entered through the window and he got the papers; some were on file and some were in the north drawer of the desk, and he left the office in company with Mr. Lenus Klemmer; went to the Sacramento river and burned the papers."

The conversation, he said, occurred in the yard of the premises where he and Vertrees lived. The second conversation, according to Noble, took place near the back door of the house. To quote Noble's own words:

"I asked him how he got in the office and got the papers without being detected without a light in the small hours of the morning, and he said he entered the window and got the papers, some of them were on file, and some were in the north end of the drawer, and I believe he said he had a flash light, and I am not positive about that. I asked him about the light, and whether he said he turned on the light or had a flash light, I am not positive, but he told me then that he got them and where they were and how he left with him."

Wieland said that he overheard a conversation between Vertrees and Noble as they stood near the back door of the house. Witness was in a shed connected with the house, and was concealed from the view of Vertrees. Regarding this conversation Wieland said:

"I can give the substance of it, not in any exact words or anything, but Vertrees told Noble that he had come to the courthouse with Lenus Klemmer and entered the window of the district attorney's office and took the evidence in the Otto Klemmer case while Lenus Klemmer stood guard with the machine. * * * They took the papers in the machine and took them out the Jacinto road and burned them."

The janitor and the stenographer connected with the district attorney's office testified that neither of them had taken away the exhibits, and that neither of them knew anything about the disappearance of those articles.

[1] It is the settled law that no conviction may be had upon the extrajudicial confession of a defendant unless such confession be corroborated by proof aliunde of the corpus delicti, and while slight proof of the corpus delicti has, in many cases, been properly held a sufficient basis for the admission of such confessions, it is nevertheless true that the confessions and admissions of the defendant cannot be used to establish any necessary element for the commission of the crime. People v. Simonsen, 107 Cal. 346, 40 Pac. 440; People v. Jones, 123 Cal. 68, 55 Pac. 698; People v. Tapia, 131 Cal. 651, 63 Pac. 1001; People v. Frank, 2 Cal. App. 285, 83 Pac. 578; People v. Frey, 165 Cal. 144, 131 Pac. 127. Applying these rules with all liberality, we cannot say that the corpus delicti was proven without the alleged confession of Vertrees. The district attorney's office is a public one, and the fact that papers disappeared from it would not prove that burglary had been committed. The circumstance that a window screen had been broken did not establish either an unlawful entry or the stealing of the exhibits by the person making such entry. It was not shown that the papers and the hotel register were in the office at the time the window screen was broken, or at the time when the tracks appeared on the soft earth outside of the office. Undoubtedly the corpus delicti may be proven by circumstantial evidence, but the circumstances related by the district attorney and the other witnesses who corroborate his statements utterly fail to establish the crime of burglary. The two elements of corpus delicti are: "(1) Certain facts forming its basis; and (2) the existence of criminal agency as the cause of them." People v. Jones, supra. Both of these elements were lacking until they were supplied by Noble and Wieland, who repeated alleged conversations with Vertrees. Without the details given in their testimony no one could positively say that burglary had been committed by some one entering the office of the district attorney with intent to commit larceny. While the facts related by the district attorney would properly arouse his suspicions, they would not amount to circumstantial proof of the crime charged. It has been held in this state that although all of the elements of the crime charged must appear in the proof of the corpus delicti, it is not necessary that the evidence of the criminal act should be of the conclusive character required for conviction before the confession may be admitted in evidence. People v. Spencer, 16 Cal. App. 759, 117 Pac. 1039; People v. Rowland, 12 Cal. App. 10, 106 Pac. 428. But no authority has been cited which justifies the use of the confession itself to prove one or more of the necessary elements in the commission of the crime that would be wholly lacking without such confession.

We see no reason for extending a rule based on reason and experience and intended to protect a defendant from the possibility of fabricated testimony out of which might be wrongfully established both the crime and its perpetrator. Confessions themselves as presented in court have been described by leading text-writers as the sort of testimony calculated to arouse and stimulate suspicions. Wharton's Crim. Ev. (10th Ed.) § 635; Wigmore on Ev. § 866. We should therefore preserve the safeguards surrounding their lawful introduction. It follows that the judgment must be reversed for the reasons above stated.

The defendant testified in his own behalf. On cross-examination he was asked if he had ever been convicted of a felony. He replied in the affirmative, saying that the crime of which he had been convicted was an attempt at burglary. He denied that he had ever been convicted of any other felony, and the district attorney was permitted, over the objection of defendant's counsel, to show by the record of a trial in which Vertrees had appeared as a witness that he had admitted a previous conviction of the crime of manslaughter, committed in the state of Oregon. The prosecution seeks to justify this course under section 2052, Code of Civil Procedure, while defendant's counsel insist that the fact of prior conviction may only be shown by the admission of the witness or the production of the record (section 2051, Code Civ. Proc.), and that admissions made by him at other times and places touching the matter of his former conviction may not be shown in lieu of the written record of his conviction and imprisonment. As the district attorney will have ample time before the next trial to produce the record of conviction, if one exists, we need not discuss this question. If the record is not in existence, of course the prosecuting officer will not ask the witness anything about conviction of a felony in Oregon.

[2] Against the objections of defendant's counsel the indictment against Otto Klemmer was introduced in evidence. Defendant was not injured by the introduction of this piece of evidence, as it was already in proof that such an indictment had been returned, and that the missing exhibits had been used as evidence before the grand jury that returned it. It was improper for the prosecuting officer to ask Otto Klemmer on direct examination, when he was called as a witness for the people, if he (witness) were the same person who had been tried under the name of Otto Klemmer on certain dates, and if he were the person who had been indicted at a certain time. Such questions could only have been propounded for the purpose of impeachment, and, even granting that the witness may have been hostile to the prosecution, it was not within the rights of the district attorney to call him merely for the purpose of throwing discredit upon him. When the questions were asked the witness had uttered no word of testimony showing any bias or prejudice towards the commonwealth's case.

[3] The witness Noble and Wieland testified that during a talk with the defendant the latter reached in his pocket, pulled out a paper, and said, "Gee, here is something I thought I had lost or spent." The paper, witnesses said, was a check on the Glen County Bank, apparently drawn by Otto Klemmer for $275, and made payable to Jesse O. Vertrees. The time of the conversation and the exhibiting of the check was fixed as being before Vertrees made confession of the burglary. There was no further showing with reference to this check, except that Otto Klemmer was permitted to prove by his checkbook and his canceled checks that no issuance of any check to Vertrees appeared therefrom. The prosecution made no connection between this check and the crime for which Vertrees was on trial. The learned Attorney General defends the introduction of this testimony on the ground that it tends to exhibit the motive of the defendant for the commission of the alleged burglary. As there was no showing and no attempt to prove that the check was given for any particular purpose, and as its alleged existence was attributed to a time long after the disappearance of the papers, we fail to see its relevancy as showing motive or for any other purpose.

[4, 5] Lenus Klemmer was jointly indicted with the defendant Vertrees. He was mentioned in the testimony of the witnesses Noble and Wieland as the person inculpated by Vertrees' confession in the crime of burglariously entering the office of the district attorney. He took the stand and testified that he had not participated in nor had he been cognizant of any burglary. On cross-examination he admitted that he was interested in the case, being charged jointly with Vertrees. Later, in the cross-examination of this witness, the court permitted the district attorney to ask him certain questions about a forged check not, as the court said, for the purpose of proving that the defendant Vertrees had committed forgery, but to show the bias of the witness. The prosecution on cross-examination developed the fact that Lenus Klemmer had become possessed of a certain paper purporting to be a check drawn by Otto Klemmer but really, as Vertrees confessed, written by him. This check was for $100. The grand jury was investigating the matter of that forgery—a fact, as witness admitted, which was known to him. He was then asked the following question, and after the overruling of an objection gave the appended answer:

"I will ask you then, Mr. Klemmer, if you at that time advised your son, Otto, concerning the prosecution of Mr. Vertrees about that check, referring to the matter then before the grand jury? * * * A. I told him it was his business and not mine; he could do as he pleased."

Witness also stated that he knew of an arrangement whereby Vertrees borrowed the money to make the check good, and that he agreed to pay over a small amount of this indebtedness each week to the creditor out of the wages of Vertrees, who was employed by the witness. The prosecution insists that the cross-examination of Lenus Klemmer comes within the exception to the general rule that proof of other offenses is not permissible in the trial of a person charged with crime. But this cross-examination does not come within the doctrine which admits evidence of other crimes to prove the motive of the defendant. Such cases as People v. O'Bryan, 165 Cal. 58, 130 Pac. 1042, People v. Walters, 98 Cal. 141, 32 Pac. 864, and others cited in that behalf, have no application to the facts of this case. The general rule is that the prosecution is not only forbidden to prove another crime, but may not introduce evidence designed merely to degrade and prejudice the defendant before the jury. People v. Glass, 158 Cal. 655, 112 Pac. 281. Nor may a cross-examiner do indirectly that which the law prohibits him from doing directly. People v. Vidal, 121 Cal. 222, 53 Pac. 558. Having elicited the fact that Lenus Klemmer was interested in the acquittal of Vertrees, he was not then privileged to go further and under the guise of developing bias elicit the story of a transaction, the details of which must have been injurious to the defendant, but could have no connection with the commission of the burglary charged in the indictment. In Jones' Commentaries on Evidence (vol. 5, § 829, p. 151) the rule is thus stated:

"The rule has several times been declared in judicial decisions that, where the cross-examiner ascertains from the admission of the witness that he is prejudiced against or entertains a feeling of hostility toward the adverse party, the inquiry cannot be pressed further to show the cause or ground of such hostility, or the details of the facts showing bias."

People v. Goldenson, 76 Cal. 328, 349, 19 Pac. 101, is cited by the learned author in support of the text. In People v. Breen, 130 Cal. 78, 62 Pac. 408, a witness for the prosecution was president of the company that employed a detective to ascertain the origin of the fire which, according to the indictment, was set by the defendant. Defendant's counsel asked witness how much had been paid to the detective for his services, and this court approved a ruling sustaining an objection to the question. Applying this principle to the case at bar, we must hold that after the prosecution had obtained from the witness an admission of his interest in the acquittal of the defendant, he could not be interrogated additionally to the extent of eliciting facts tending to prove a crime committed by Vertrees but having no possible connection with the offense of burglary for which the latter was on trial.

The only testimony of burglary of the first degree is found in the statement of Noble which is quoted herein. The time of entering a building is one of the essential elements of the crime of burglary of the first degree, and that constituent of the offense may not be proved by the confession of the defendant alone.

Appellant complains of the giving of this instruction:

"If any witness examined before you has willfully sworn falsely in this case to any material matter, it is your duty to distrust his entire evidence."

This form of the instruction was disapproved in People v. Delucchi, 17 Cal. App. 103, 118 Pac. 935, and if this case shall be tried again, we would suggest an adherence to the form which has been approved.

The judgment and order are reversed.

I concur: LORIGAN, J.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. I concur in the judgment. I am of the opinion that there was sufficient evidence of the corpus delicti to warrant the admission in evidence of the alleged confessions of defendant. But I have no doubt on the proposition that the lower court erred in its action relative to the cross-examination of defendant in regard to alleged statements made by him on other occasions as to prior convictions, and in allowing proof to contradict his testimony on that subject. Furthermore, it is clear to me that the court erred in allowing the cross-examination of Lenus Klemmer on the matter of the $100 check, a matter not touched upon in his direct examination, and one altogether foreign to any issue in this case. The claim that this testimony was admissible to show interest and bias on the part of the witness appears to me, under the circumstances of this case, to be absolutely without foundation. Whatever may be said as to the question of prejudicial effect of the testimony tending to show statements of defendant admitting prior convictions other than the one he had acknowledged, there is no question in my mind as to the prejudicial effect of the testimony given by Lenus Klemmer on cross-examination relative to the $100 check. An examination of the record in this case has satisfied me that the case is not one where it may fairly be said that a verdict of guilty would or ought to have been rendered in the absence of this testimony. So far as I can see, there is nothing substantial to connect defendant with the commission of the alleged offense except his alleged confessions, the making of which was denied by him, and the testimony as to which, to say the least, is not at all satisfactory. The testimony of one of the two witnesses who testified as to the alleged confession, as to the possession by defendant of a check for $275, signed by Otto Klemmer, was almost conclusively shown to be unfounded in fact. In view of the circumstances of this case, as shown by the record, I do not think that section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution warrants an affirmance.

It may be added that the foundation for conclusion that if a burglary was committed, it was burglary of the first degree, is exceedingly slight, and it is extremely doubtful if it is sufficient. I am not prepared to assent to a conclusion that such a matter may not be shown by the confession of the defendant alone.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.

SHAW, J. I dissent. I am of the opinion that the cross-examination of Lenus Klemmer concerning the $100 check was allowable to show the interest he was taking in the case, and to determine the degree of credit to be given to his testimony favorable to the defendant.

With regard to the other rulings complained of, I do not consider them sufficiently prejudicial to require a reversal, or to show that a miscarriage of justice has resulted therefrom, even if they were erroneous, which I do not concede as to all of them.

I concur: LAWLOR, J.

RICKERT v. ZOEGER et al. (L. A. 3436.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 18, 1915.)
APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐102—DISMISSAL—NOTICE OF APPEAL—NONAPPEALABLE ORDER.

An order sustaining or overruling a demurrer not being an appealable order where a notice of appeal is from a decision on demurrer and the record does not show any other notice of appeal or that any judgment was entered, the appeal must be dismissed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 688-698; Dec. Dig. ⇐102.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John Perry Wood, Judge.

Action by Fred Rickert against E. Zoeger and others. From an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Stephen Monteleone, for appellant. Howard J. Fish, Jones & Weller, and Guy Eddie, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The action is to recover a sum of money alleged to be due upon an agreement for the sale of a "saloon business" in the city of Los Angeles.

The notice of appeal states that the plaintiff appeals "from the decision of the superior court rendered in said action, whereby the said court sustains defendants' demurrer to plaintiff's fifth amended complaint without leave to amend." The record does not show that any judgment was entered, and it does not contain any other notice of appeal.

An order sustaining or overruling a demurrer is not an appealable order. Moraga v. Emeric, 4 Cal. 308; Moulton v. Ellmaker, 30 Cal. 529; Agard v. Valencia, 39 Cal. 297; Daniels v. Lansdale, 38 Cal. 567; Hibberd v. Smith, 39 Cal. 146; Ashley v. Olmstead, 54 Cal. 618. This court is therefore without jurisdiction to act upon the so-called appeal, and it must be dismissed.

The appeal is dismissed.

1. MANDAMUS ☞143—LACHES—SUSPENSION OF OFFICER.

A municipal department inspector who was suspended for nearly one year under charges, though the civil service laws limited the period of such suspension to 30 days, and who appeared daily and reported ready for duty, though his duties were being performed by another, and who presented a claim each month for his salary and instituted mandamus proceedings to compel the payment of his salary for the time he was suspended within two months after the charges were dismissed and he was reinstated, was not guilty of such laches as would bar his right to the remedy, since he was not entitled to that remedy so long as another was in possession of the office under a claimed authority.

2. MANDAMUS ☞15—GROUNDS—DEFENSES.

A city can act only through its officials, and mandamus will not be denied to an official to compel the payment of a salary for the time during which he was wrongfully suspended from duty by his superiors, on the ground that it is an injustice to an innocent party to compel the city to pay such salary.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Petition for mandamus by William G. Pennycook against Thomas F. Boyle, Auditor, and others. From a judgment directing issuance of the writ, the defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Percy V. Long, City Atty., and Harry G. McKannay, Asst. City Atty., both of San Francisco, for appellants. W. H. Smith, Jr., of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from the judgment of the superior court directing the issuance of a writ of mandate compelling the auditor of the city and county of San Francisco to audit, and the treasurer to pay, certain salary demands of the petitioner as inspector of the department of electricity of said city, said demands covering the period between February, 1911, and the major portion of the month of January, 1912.

The pleadings and proof show that during the above period the petitioner was absent from his post of duty as such inspector under suspension upon charges of neglect of duty, which charges were never heard, but were finally dismissed, and the petitioner reinstated in his position in the latter part of the month of January, 1912. Within two months after such reinstatement the petitioner instituted this proceeding to compel the payment of his salary during the period of his suspension.

[1] The chief and practically only point made for the appellants is that the petitioner was guilty of laches in not sooner instituting this proceeding, and that for that reason his application for a writ of mandate should be denied. In support of this position the appellants point out that the civil service provisions of the charter of San Francisco limit the power and period of suspension of a subordinate official to 30 days, and the appellants insist that after this period of suspension had elapsed the petitioner was in a position to have demanded and retaken his place and performed his duties, and that, not having done this, he ought not to be permitted to wait for a period of over a year before applying for a writ of mandate to compel the payment of a salary for which he rendered no service. The proofs in the case, however, show that whether or not the suspension of the petitioner was lawful for a longer period than 30 days, it was actually maintained by the persons ordering it for nearly a year, during which time another person was actually in possession of the petitioner's place, claiming title to it, and that, although the petitioner daily for a period of three months after his suspension presented himself at his proper place of service and offered to perform its duties, his offer was refused, and that in addition to this the petitioner presented regularly and during the entire year of his suspension his salary demand in due form to the city officials, whose duty it was to audit and pay the same. The record further shows that within two months after his reinstatement he instituted this proceeding. We do not think that laches can be predicated upon this state of facts, and can hardly see what more the petitioner could have done to keep alive his rights to his position and salary than he is shown to have done. He could not be expected to break into an office occupied by another by force, particularly when the intruder was there by official sanction of his superiors; nor could he have successfully applied for a writ of mandate during the period of suspension under the authority of the case of Black v. Board of Police & Fire Commissioners, 17 Cal. App. 310, 119 Pac. 674. The record shows that he filed his application for the writ within two months after the ban of his suspension had been removed, and he had been restored to his office. Clearly he was guilty of no laches.

[2] The further contention of the appellants that the writ should have been denied because its issuance would result in great loss and injury to the city and county of San Francisco, which is an innocent party to the affair, is equally devoid of merit. The city only acts through its officials, and must expect to suffer from their wrongful acts. So far as the record here shows, the petitioner herein was an innocent and injured party throughout, and was at all times entitled to his office and its emoluments, and he certainly ought not to be made to suffer any further delay in the procurement of the salary to which at all times he was shown to have been entitled.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Action by J. W. Hansbrough and another, copartners, doing business under the firm name and style of Hansbrough & Johnston, against A. L. Mann and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Louis H. Brownstone, of San Francisco, for appellants. R. L. Mann and Curtis Hillier, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

LENNON, P. J. This action was brought by plaintiffs in assumpsit to recover from the defendants a balance due as the reasonable value of labor performed and materials furnished and for the amount of moneys advanced for the benefit of the defendants in the construction of a certain building.

From the evidence it appears that the defendants were the owners of a lot in San Francisco, and had engaged one Andrew McElroy to construct a building upon the same upon a percentage basis, the cost of which was to be limited to the sum of $10,000. After the plans had been prepared, McElroy died, and the defendants then employed plaintiffs to do the work. It is the claim of plaintiffs that the contract contained no limitation as to cost, and that their compensation was to be the cost of the labor and materials, plus a commission of 6 per cent. for their services. The defendants, on the other hand, allege that the plaintiffs were engaged to do the work upon the same basis as McElroy, and to carry out McElroy's contract, the terms of which, they were informed, were the reasonable value, not exceeding $10,000, including commissions and all extras; plaintiffs having discretion in substituting cheaper materials than those called for by the plans and specifications, but they were to do a good job.

It appears in evidence that the departure from the plans and specifications was provided for on account of the limited funds possessed by the defendants, they being unable to procure any sum in excess of the $10,000 mentioned, and that a strict adherence to the plans and specifications would bring the amount of the contract beyond the means of the defendants. There was no written agreement between the parties, but the plaintiffs went on and erected the building, the cost of which they alleged amounted to the sum of $13,907.73, plus their commissions of $834.81, which brought the total amount up to the sum of $14,742.54. The defendants paid the sum of $9,520, on account, which they claim to be the reasonable value of the work; and, having refused to pay any further sum, plaintiffs sued for the alleged balance of $5,222.54.

Defendants tendered issue under a general denial, and also interposed what they termed a counterclaim, under which they set forth that by their contract the plaintiffs agreed to perform the work in a good and workmanlike manner and with good judgment and skill, and to furnish none but good materials, and to complete the building within a reasonable time, but they failed so to do, to the damage of the defendants in the sum of $2,000.

All the matters set forth in the so-called counterclaim could have been proved under the general denial, and this pleading amounts to nothing more than a general denial. The only issue, therefore, involved under the pleadings, was as to the amount of the cost of the structure, and whether or not the plaintiffs had properly completed the building under the terms of the contract or expended the money as alleged.

The case was tried before a jury, and the verdict went for the defendants. Judgment was entered thereon, from which, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs have appealed.

The evidence in support of the issues raised by the pleadings was voluminous, and a substantial conflict appears; and, unless the alleged errors complained of as having occurred during the trial were prejudicial to plaintiffs, the judgment must be affirmed.

[1] The alleged errors complained of consist in the introduction by defendants of evidence as to the value of the lot and improvements, and the amount of income derived therefrom, and also three instances of alleged misconduct on the part of the defendants' counsel during the course of the trial.

Evidence of the value of the lot and improvements was permitted by the trial court over objection. The purpose of the evidence was to show that the building should have brought in a greater revenue, and would have done so but for the defective workmanship and the difficulty of securing and retaining tenants in a badly constructed and leaky building.

While this character of evidence going to prove such facts may not have been the best, it certainly afforded some slight evidence upon the subject, and its admission can hardly be said to constitute error.

[2] The three instances of misconduct on the part of defendants' counsel which are assigned as error consisted in the demanding by said counsel of an investigation, during the course of the trial, of the result of an interview had by plaintiffs' counsel and one of the jurors; the conduct of the defendants' counsel in commenting upon this fact before the jury in his arguments; and the further act of the defendants' counsel in his argument to the jury in offering to let plaintiffs have the property for 40 per cent. of defendants' equity.

With reference to the first objection, it is sufficient to say that counsel for the defendants was acting within his rights in demanding an investigation of the circumstances which to him warranted an investigation.

[3] As to the other acts, it appears from the record that, when these matters were called to the attention of the trial court, the jury was instructed at the time that it was to exclude from its consideration everything except that which bore directly upon the issues of the case. Under these circumstances, we feel that whatever effect these statements may have had upon the minds of the jury was cured by the charge of the trial court.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; RICHARDS, J.

TALCOTT v. MEAKIN et al. (Civ. 1416.)
(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 12, 1915.)

1. PLEADING $\S$ 205—DEMURRER—COMPLAINT.

A complaint on a note and mortgage is not subject to a general demurrer, where from the allegations as a whole it can be determined that the obligation of the note had matured and was due and payable at commencement of the action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 491-493, 495, 496, 498-510; Dec. Dig. $\S$ 205.]

2. PLEADING $\S$ 10—WRITTEN INSTRUMENTS—MORTGAGE.

A complaint on a mortgage is not demurrable because the mortgage is not set out in hæc verba, where it is set out according to its legal effect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 30; Dec. Dig. $\S$ 10.]

3. PLEADING $\S$ 8—CONCLUSION—ULTIMATE FACT—NONPAYMENT OF DEBT.

In an action on a note and mortgage, an allegation of the complaint that there has been paid a certain amount, and that nothing more has been paid, is the statement of an ultimate fact, and not a conclusion, and hence does not render the complaint demurrable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 12-28½, 68; Dec. Dig. $\S$ 8.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Donohoe, Judge.

Action by Jonathan R. Talcott against William Meakin, Laura E. Meakin, and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Lomba & Ford, of Oakland, for appellants. Vance McClymonds and Dudley Kinsell, both of Oakland, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. [1] There was no error committed by the trial court in the overruling of the defendants' demurrer. The plaintiff's complaint alleged the execution of the defendants' promissory note to the plaintiff for a specified sum, and the contemporaneous execution of a mortgage by the defendants as security for the payment of the obligation of the note. The note in suit was alleged to have been made, dated, and delivered to the plaintiff on the 23d day of October, 1907; and it is not disputed that, as against a general demurrer, it appears with sufficient certainty from the allegations of the complaint as a whole that the obligation of the note had matured and was due and payable at the time of the commencement of the action.

[2] The plaintiff's complaint was not demurrable on the ground of uncertainty, etc., merely because it did not set out in hæc verba the mortgage in suit. The plaintiff's complaint purported to plead, in substance and legal effect, the terms, conditions, and covenants of the mortgage, including the covenant concerning attorney's fees; and a contract may be declared on either in hæc verba, or in substance and according to its legal effect. Stoddard v. Treadwell, 26 Cal. 294; Love v. S. N. L. W. & M. Co., 32 Cal. 639, 91 Am. Dec. 595; Murdock v. Brooks, 38 Cal. 596; White v. Soto, 82 Cal. 654, 23 Pac. 210.

[3] The demurrer upon the ground of insufficiency of facts pleaded to constitute a cause of action was general in its terms; and it is conceded to have been directed solely to the point that the complaint was fatally defective in not containing a sufficient allegation of nonpayment of the obligation evidenced by the note and secured by the mortgage in suit. The allegation of the complaint in this behalf is as follows:

"That there has been paid on said note or obligation on account of interest the sum of two hundred and fifty ($250) dollars, and that nothing further has been paid on account of principal or interest or otherwise."

This averment means more than the mere conclusion of the pleader. It was the statement of an ultimate fact, because, in effect, it declared that, of the aggregate of the sum due for principal and interest upon the note at the time of the commencement of the action, no part thereof had been paid, save and except the sum of $250.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. TSURUHE TOMINGA.
(Cr. 474.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW — §730—CONDUCT OF COUNSEL — CROSS-EXAMINATION OF WITNESS — CURE OF ERROR.

Conduct of counsel, in a prosecution for murder, in eliciting on cross-examination the fact that defendant had a venereal disease, from a witness who testified that defendant was insane, because he had a conversation with him in which defendant showed despondency, is cured by the court's admonition to the jury to disregard it, especially where counsel inadvertently asked for the fact when he wished to show that the despondency was caused by such disease.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1693; Dec. Dig. §730.]

2. WITNESSES — §277—CROSS-EXAMINATION—INSANITY.

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, defendant pleaded insanity, and a witness, to show it, recounted a conversation with defendant, in which defendant showed despondency over his troubles, in absence of objection that no foundation had been laid, a question on cross-examination as to whether defendant had not stated that his despondency was due to a venereal disease is proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 925, 979-983; Dec. Dig. §277.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Everett J. Brown, Judge.

Tsuruhe Tominga was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Philip M. Walsh, of Piedmont, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendant in this case was charged with the crime of murder. He was convicted of murder in the first degree, and the penalty therefor was by the jury fixed at life imprisonment in the state prison.

[1] In addition to his plea of "not guilty," the defendant interposed the defense of insanity. A witness for the defendant upon direct examination testified that in his opinion the defendant was insane at the time of the commission of the homicide, and among other things stated that the reason for the opinion was based upon conversations had with the defendant shortly before the commission of the homicide, wherein the defendant stated, in substance, that his mother was dead; that his wife was in poor condition; that he had no money to provide for her; that he had abandoned all hope, and would, because of these misfortunes, kill himself. Upon cross-examination this witness was asked if he did not know it to be a fact that at the time of the conversation referred to the defendant was suffering from a venereal disease. The question was answered in the affirmative, apparently before counsel for the defendant had an opportunity to object; and upon motion the answer was stricken out upon the ground that the question was not proper cross-examination. The asking of the question was assigned as misconduct. The district attorney conceded that the question as framed was improper, and explained that inadvertently he had asked for a fact when it was his purpose to ask if the defendant had not said that he was despondent because he was suffering from a venereal disease. Thereupon the trial court, at the request of the defendant, admonished the jury to disregard the question and answer.

The explanation of the district attorney apparently satisfied the lower court that the question complained of was propounded in good faith; but, even if this were not so, we are convinced that the trial court's admonition to the jury cured whatever misconduct there may have been in the asking of the question.

[2] Upon further cross-examination the same witness was asked if the defendant had not said that his despondency was due, not only to his family troubles and poverty, but also to the fact that he was afflicted with a venereal disease. An objection to this question upon the ground that it was not proper cross-examination was overruled, and the question was answered in the negative. We see no error in the ruling. The witness was properly permitted, when examined in chief, to testify that his opinion as to the insanity of the defendant was based upon certain specific declarations of the defendant as to the cause of his despondency; and the question complained of was allowed to be answered upon the theory that the prosecution was entitled to know if the defendant had given any other and further reason for his despondency. Clearly, if the defendant had said he was despondent because he was afflicted with a venereal disease, this was a fact which the prosecution would have been entitled to have in evidence; and, if the question complained of had been answered in the affirmative, it would have helped rather than harmed the defendant, because such an answer would have tended to show that, in addition to his other troubles, he had good and sufficient reason to be despondent. True, the question complained of should perhaps have been preceded by the general question as to whether or not the witness had narrated all of the reasons given by the defendant for his despondency. Such a general question would undoubtedly have been proper cross-examination. No objection, however, was made to the question complained of upon the ground that a proper foundation had not been laid therefor; and, in the absence of such an objection, the ruling under discussion was not error.

This disposes of the principal point made in support of the appeal, and what we have said in effect disposes of the one remaining point.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. TODD. (Cr. 527.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 12, 1915.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW — 338—PREJUDICIAL ERROR—EVIDENCE—ADMISSION.

On a trial for rape, the testimony of the physician attending prosecutrix, as to the manner of her delivery of a child, but in technical terms, was not objectionable as arousing the indignation of the jury against accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 752, 753, 755, 756, 787, 788, 801, 855; Dec. Dig. —338.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW — 1169—ERROR IN ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—WITHDRAWAL BY INSTRUCTIONS.

Alleged error in admitting evidence calculated to arouse the indignation of the jury against accused is cured by an instruction to disregard it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 754, 3088, 3130, 3137—3143; Dec. Dig. —1169.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW — 404—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY—EXHIBITION OF CHILD.

Where prosecutrix, prior to charging accused, a white man, with rape, had filed a complaint against a mulatto, and at the trial insisted that accused was the father of her child, and that the mulatto had on various occasions attempted to ravish her, the exhibition to the jury of the child, light complexioned, to give the jury an opportunity to compare its appearance with that of accused, to aid in determining the question of paternity, was not erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 873, 891—893, 1457; Dec. Dig. —404.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; F. B. Ogden, Judge.

W. A. Todd was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

P. M. Walsh, of Piedmont, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Rioridan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendant was charged by information with the crime of statutory rape. He was tried, convicted, and sentenced to 25 years' imprisonment in the state prison at San Quentin. The present appeal is from the judgment and order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

While the evidence is contradictory in many respects and is not as satisfactory or convincing as might be desired, it cannot be said that it is not sufficient to sustain the judgment of conviction.

[1] Defendant asserts that the court committed error in permitting the doctor who attended the prosecuting witness at the birth of the child, resulting from the alleged acts of intercourse between her and the defendant, to testify to the manner of its delivery. This evidence was not elaborate, but was short and couched in technical terms; and we are unable to agree with the defendant that it contained anything that would tend in any way to arouse in the minds of the jurors a feeling of horror and indignation against the defendant.

[2] But even if the admission of this evidence may be said to be error, the court having later ordered it to be stricken out, and instructed the jury to disregard it, it will be presumed that the jury obeyed the instruction, and that thus the error, if any, was cured. People v. Burke, 18 Cal. App. 72, 102, 122 Pac. 435.

[3] The defendant also complains that the court over his objection permitted the child of the prosecuting witness, born only a short time before the trial, to be exhibited to the jury. We think this evidence was admissible. Prior to charging the defendant with the crime, the prosecutrix had filed a complaint against one Earl Platt, a mulatto or colored youth; and notwithstanding that at the trial she insisted that the defendant had had sexual intercourse with her and was the father of her child, she still maintained that Earl Platt had on three different occasions attempted to ravish her. Naturally, under these circumstances, some doubt would be created in the minds of the jurors as to whether the defendant or the colored youth were the guilty party. The child was light complexioned; and the jury's inspection of it was for the purpose of giving them an opportunity to compare its appearance with that of the defendant as an aid to determining the question of its paternity. The competency of this character of testimony finds authority in the case of People v. Richardson, 161 Cal. 552, 561, 120 Pac. 20.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by the Pacific Improvement Company against George H. Maxwell. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. Dorsey and W. E. Cashman, both of San Francisco (R. M. F. Soto, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant. Platt & Bayne and J. P. Langhorne, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. In this action the plaintiff sued to recover from the defendant upon the latter's promissory note executed to the plaintiff in the sum of $15,452.34 on March 19, 1907, and payable one day after date. The plaintiff's complaint, in addition to counting upon the note, alleged and relied upon the defendant's two indorsements of the note made and dated, respectively, on January 31, 1901, and January 23, 1909, whereby he acknowledged the existence of the indebtedness evidenced by the note, and promised and agreed to pay the principal and all interest accrued and to accrue thereon according to its tenor and effect. The plaintiff's complaint, by appropriate allegations, further averred facts which showed the defendant's absence from the state from and after the making and maturity of the note and the indorsements thereon for a period of time sufficient to toll the statute of limitations. The answer of the defendant pleaded a want of consideration for the execution of the note and the indorsements made thereon, and further alleged that the note in suit was executed in lieu of and as a renewal of 12 prior promissory notes executed by defendant to plaintiff, which it was alleged had theretofore been fully paid and discharged, and it was further alleged, with respect to these particular notes, that the consideration for their execution had failed prior to the commencement of the action on the note in suit, for the reason, as alleged, that they were executed upon the agreed consideration "that the same should be applied on account of the purchase by the defendant from the plaintiff of the interest of plaintiff in certain lands in Sonoma county; that plaintiff had since then sold to others than the defendant a large part of said lands, so that the fact is it could not now, or when this action was commenced, carry out on its part the aforesaid agreement with the defendant." Finally as a set-off and counterclaim the answer of the defendant pleaded an indebtedness in the sum of $50,000, alleged to be due to him from the plaintiff for professional services rendered to the latter. The allegations of the defendant's counterclaim were denied in an answer filed by the plaintiff, which answer also pleaded the statute of limitations against the items of the defendant's counterclaim.

[1] At the outset the defendant and appellant asks this court to strike out, or at least disregard, the plaintiff's answer to his counterclaim. A like motion was made in the court below and there denied; but it was stipulated by the parties to the action that the answer in question might be incorporated as a part of the record on appeal. It is insisted that the plaintiff's answer was not required under our system of pleading, and is therefore not properly in the case. Section 426 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that any new matter in the answer of a defendant in avoidance or constituting a defense or a counterclaim, must be deemed denied. Under this section there was no necessity for any further pleading upon behalf of the plaintiff; nor was it necessary to formally plead the statute of limitations against the items of the defendant's counterclaim. That statute was deemed pleaded by operation of law. Cuttriss v. Sprague, 49 Cal. 301; Grangers', etc., v. Clark, 84 Cal. 201, 23 Pac. 1081; Moore v. Copp, 119 Cal. 429, 51 Pac. 630; Peck v. Noe, 154 Cal. 351, 97 Pac. 865. The case was tried and determined upon the theory contemplated by the code section last referred to, and, therefore the question as to whether the plaintiff's answer to the counterclaim should be eliminated can have no bearing upon the merits of the appeal, and is of no consequence save as a matter of practice.

The action was tried by the court below with a jury, and resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the full amount of the principal and interest found to be due and unpaid upon the note in suit. The appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying the defendant a new trial. The case comes here upon the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions.

In support of the appeal it is claimed that the court erred in the giving and refusing of certain instructions, and that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict and judgment.

[2] It is one of the contentions of the appellant that the court erred in its instructions to the jury on the question of forbearance, wherein the jury were in effect told that if they should find that the defendant's written indorsement of the note dated January 31, 1901, was made upon the consideration that the plaintiff should forbear to sue on the note, and did not in fact sue upon the note for a period of seven years thereafter, then as a matter of law such forbearance was a good consideration, which was sufficient to support the execution and enforcement of the obligation of the indorsement. It is claimed that this instruction is not only unsound in its statement of the law, but that it is based upon a theory not disclosed by the pleadings nor developed by the evidence. The contention is not well taken. As we understand the contention in this behalf, it is based upon the erroneous assumption that the instruction complained of charged that mere forbearance was a good consideration, and by implication told the jury that there was an agreement between the parties to forbear. From this it is argued that the trial court not only misstated the law and assumed a fact not in evidence, but invaded the province of the jury as well by charging upon a matter of fact. We do not think that the instruction complained of is fairly susceptible of the construction contended for. Liberally construed, it did no more nor less than state to the jury that the plaintiff's forbearance to sue, if the jury should find such to be the fact, was a good and valid consideration for the defendant's indorsement of January 31, 1901, only in the event that the jury should further find that such indorsement "was made upon the consideration that plaintiff should forbear to sue. * * *" True the proposition of law involved might have been more clearly and exactly stated, but the word "consideration" is recognized in law and is generally understood as the equivalent or return given or suffered by one for the act or promise of another, and therefore the phrase "in consideration," considered in connection with the context of the instruction complained of, may be fairly said to have been understood by the jury to mean that if they found that the plaintiff did in fact forbear to sue on the note, such forbearance would not constitute a good and valid consideration for the defendant's indorsement of the note unless they should also find as a fact that such forbearance was founded upon and induced by a preceding promise to forbear. So construed, the instruction complained of correctly stated the law, and did not assume and then charge upon the existence of a fact in the case.

[3] But apart from these considerations the trial court of its own motion, when charging upon another phase of the case which involved the law of forbearance, indicated clearly enough to the jury that, in order to constitute a good and valid consideration, forbearance must be founded upon "an agreement" to forbear. This being so, we are satisfied that the charge of the court as a whole clearly and correctly stated the law of the case in so far as the question of forbearance was concerned, and that therefore the jury was neither confused nor misled by the particular instruction complained of.

[4] That this instruction was well within the issues raised by the pleadings and developed by the evidence is manifested by the fact that the plaintiff's complaint pleaded the defendant's indorsement of the note in æc verba, which expressly declared that it was made by the defendant "for the purpose of preventing the bar of the statute of limitations." Subsequently the note and its indorsement were admitted in evidence. This being so, we are unable to perceive why the instruction complained of was not responsive to the issues and the evidence in the case.

[5] The court did not err in refusing to give the defendant's requested instruction to the effect that forbearance, to constitute a good and valid consideration, must be founded upon an agreement to forbear. This proposition we think was sufficiently covered by the instruction hereinbefore referred to and other instructions contained in the charge of the court.

[6] Complaint is made of an instruction, given at the request of the plaintiff, to the effect that the defendant's counterclaim was barred by the statute of limitations if it was found by the jury that none of the services alleged to have been rendered to the plaintiff "were rendered within four years immediately prior to the commencement of the action, and that defendant's cause of action for such services accrued prior to said four-year period." It is not contended that this instruction was erroneous in its statement of the law, but it is claimed that it submitted to the jury the question of law as to when, with reference to the commencement of the action, the defendant's cause of action had accrued, and that it should not have been given at all because the evidence shows that the employment of the defendant was continuous, and that the services rendered thereon extended over a period of time which would have taken the defendant's claim without the bar of the statute. Conceding the evidence to be as is claimed, the instruction in question nevertheless left the ascertainment of the fact as to whether or not the defendant's claim was barred by the statute of limitations to the jury, and therefore we cannot perceive how such instruction operated to the prejudice of the defendant. Issue having been joined on the plea of the statute of limitations, and the evidence upon this phase of the case being conflicting, the question as to when with reference to the commencement of the action the defendant's cause of action on his counterclaim accrued was a mixed question of law and fact, which was properly left to the jury for determination. Reed v. Swift, 45 Cal. 255; Shaw v. Yarbrough, 3 Ala. 588; Clarke v. Dutcher, 9 Cowen (N. Y.) 674; Chapin v. Warden, 15 Vt. 560.

[7] Complaint is made of the trial court's refusal to give the defendant's requested instruction which charged " * * * that in order that the plaintiff may recover in this action it must appear that there was a consideration for the execution of the note in suit." This language of the instruction is obviously ambiguous to the extent that it might have been inferred therefrom that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff to show that the promissory note in suit was executed for a valuable consideration, and for that reason the instruction was rightfully refused.

[8] It may be noted that the court elsewhere in its charge clearly and correctly stated the rule of law which places the burden of showing a want of consideration upon the maker of a promissory note, and declares that there can be no recovery upon a promissory note shown to have been executed without a consideration.

[9, 10] The trial court rightfully refused that portion of a requested instruction of the defendant which charged that: "Disputable inferences or presumptions while evidence, are evidence the weakest and least satisfactory." While this language was employed by way of argument in the opinion in the case of S. & L. Society v. Burnett, 106 Cal. 514, 529, nevertheless we are satisfied that it was not intended as the statement of a rule of law which should govern a jury in its decision of the question as to whether or not a disputable presumption had been overcome and dispelled by other evidence. This must be so because, aside from the fact that the requested instruction was argumentative in form, it was directed to the weight of the evidence, and it is the settled rule that the force and effect of presumptions of fact, and the question as to whether they have been overcome by other evidence, are for the jury to determine. Cummins v. James, 4 Ark. 616; Bigelow v. Doolittle, 36 Wis. 115; Hancock v. Supreme Council, 69 N. J. Law, 308, 55 Atl. 246; Pennsylvania v. Weiss, 87 Pa. 447; Sessions v. Newport, 23 Vt. 9.

[11] The defendant's requested instruction numbered 5 was to the effect that an agreement required to be in writing was invalid and could not be made the foundation of any obligation or liability in favor of or against either the plaintiff or the defendant, if the jury found that such an agreement had not been reduced to writing. As an abstract proposition of law this instruction was correct, but as applied to the facts of the present case it was defective and rightfully refused, because it did not contain the exception to the rule that a parol agreement for the sale and purchase of land was neither void nor unenforceable if the jury found that it had been partly performed by a part payment of the purchase price. The evidence upon the whole case is undoubtedly in substantial conflict, and we do not understand that the point is made that the evidence does not generally support the verdict and judgment, but apparently it is contended that there was some evidence in the case, offered upon behalf of the defendant, which, if it had been accepted by the jury, would have been sufficient to warrant a finding that there were services rendered the plaintiff at its special instance and request by the defendant of a value equal to, if not greater than, the sum sued for by the plaintiff, and that the jury was prevented from considering this evidence by the instruction of the court which told the jury that if they found that none of the defendant's services had been rendered within four years prior to the commencement of the action, the defendant was not entitled to an offset, because his claim would be barred by the statute of limitations. From this it is argued that the verdict and judgment were contrary to the evidence upon that phase of the case which involved the items of the defendant's counterclaim and the bar of the statute of limitations. We must confess that we cannot comprehend the force of this contention. As previously pointed out, the instruction of the court upon this particular matter was free from error, and left to the jury the determination of the question as to whether or not the defendant's counterclaim was in fact barred by the statute of limitations, and if this be so, clearly the instruction last complained of did not have the effect of withdrawing any of the evidence in the case from the consideration of the jury.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SOULEOTES. (Cr. 562.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 13, 1915.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION $\Leftrightarrow$ 196 — RAPE—WAIVER OF DEFECTS.

Defect in an information for rape in averring that the offense was committed on the person of an infant not being then and there "with wife of" accused, arising from the use of the word "with" instead of the word "the," is waived unless raised by demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 628-635; Dec. Dig. $\Leftrightarrow$ 196.]

2. MARRIAGE $\Leftrightarrow$ 5—VALIDITY—MARRIAGE OF PERSONS UNDER THE AGE OF CONSENT.

Under Civ. Code, § 69, providing for the consent of the parent or guardian to the marriage of a minor, and section 82 authorizing the annulment of a marriage if either party is below the age of consent, and the marriage was celebrated without consent of parent or guardian, a marriage of an infant below the age of consent, but with the consent of the parent, is valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Marriage, Cent. Dig. §§ 23, 24; Dec. Dig. $\Leftrightarrow$ 5.]

3. WITNESSES $\Leftrightarrow$ 61—HUSBAND AND WIFE—COMPETENCY OF WIFE.

Where prosecutrix, under the age of consent, married accused with the consent of her parent, she could not be compelled to testify against accused, in a prosecution for a prior rape upon her.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

John Souleotes was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Johnson & Schuhl, of San Francisco, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction of the crime of rape.

[1] Two points are made upon the appeal. The first is that the information is fatally defective in the following respect: Instead of averring that the offense was committed upon the person of the minor "not being then and there the wife of said John Souleotes," its words are "not being then and there with wife of said John Souleotes." There was no demurrer or other objection to the sufficiency in form of the information until after the defendant's conviction. We think the point made for the first time after conviction is without merit. The substitution of the word "with" for "the" was a mere clerical misprision by which the defendant could not have been misled, and to which he should have demurred. Not having done so, he must be held to have waived the objection.

[2, 3] The second point made by the appellant is that the court erred in overruling the defendant's objection to the action of the court in requiring the minor girl, who was the subject of the alleged crime, to be sworn, and to testify as a witness against the defendant; it appearing to the court, in support of the objection, that a marriage ceremony had been performed between the defendant and the said minor after the arrest of the former but before the trial, and that by virtue thereof they were, at the time she was called as a witness, husband and wife. It is conceded that the minor girl at the time of her said marriage was of the age of a little over 14 years, and hence below the age of consent, but it is also shown that the marriage was otherwise regularly solemnized with the consent of the mother of the said minor. The question is: Was such a marriage void, voidable, or valid? If either voidable or valid, it would necessarily follow that the trial court erred in compelling the witness to testify.

It seems clear that the marriage is not void, but at most voidable. At common law the marriage of minors below the age of consent was merely voidable. 2 Nelson on Divorce and Separation, §§ 721 to 725, and notes. The well-established rule of the common law in this regard has not been expressly changed by our Code. There are but three kinds of marriage which are expressly declared to be void by the terms of the Civil Code. This is not one of them, but, on the contrary, the fact that a minor has been married when below the age of consent is made a ground for annulment, under the provisions of section 82 of the Civil Code, under the terms of which a strong inference arises that the rule of the common law has not been changed, and that such marriages are merely voidable.

In addition to this, a reading of section 69 of the Civil Code, providing for the consent of the parent or guardian to the marriage of a minor, will show that such consent may be given when the minor girl is below the age of 18 years, but without further limitation upon the time within which such consent is required in order to validate the marriage of the minor. When sections 69 and 82 of the Civil Code are read together, they would seem to justify the conclusion that the consent of the parent may be given to the marriage of the minor below the age of legal consent, and that, when the marriage of such minor is otherwise legally solemnized, it is not even a voidable marriage. This being so, it follows necessarily that the court was in error in compelling the wife of the defendant to be a witness against him.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨933—NOTICE OF INTENTION TO MOVE FOR NEW TRIAL—TIME.

A landlord's acts in cutting off water connections with the premises and in boarding up and obstructing a porch and rear windows by which the premises received necessary light and air over his other land, so as to make the premises untenable for use as a store or residence and to compel the tenant to vacate, amounted to an "eviction."

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⇨124—USE OF PREMISES—TENANT'S RIGHT TO WATER SERVICE—"APPURTENANCE."

Water pipes and water service in place and in use in connection with the premises at the time of the lease thereby became an "appurtenance" to the premises, to the continued use of which the tenant was beneficially entitled during his term, without charge or cost, in the absence of a contrary provision in the lease.

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⇨180—EVICTION—DAMAGES.

In a tenant's action for damages for an eviction, the testimony of the tenant, who had personally conducted the business on the premises, as to her daily average profits therefrom, from her own knowledge, was competent to show the damage to the business from the eviction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

Action by Mary J. Clark and husband against K. S. Koesheyman, sometimes known as K. S. Cashin. Judgment for plaintiffs, and, from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. D. Crichton and C. K. Bonestell, both of Fresno, for appellant. Strother & Aynsworth, of Fresno, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. [1] This is an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial, in an action for damages for eviction from certain premises in Fresno. The verdict in favor of the plaintiffs was rendered February 27, 1913, and judgment was rendered and entered on the same day. On March 4, 1913, the defendant applied to the court for, and was granted, a stay of execution. On March 8th defendant served a notice of motion to strike out the plaintiffs' cost bill "upon the papers, pleadings, and records in the cause." This motion was heard in open court and decided on March 17, 1913. On March 28, 1913, defendant gave notice of intention to move for a new trial. Plaintiff moved to dismiss said motion, and at all times objected and now objects to the hearing of the same by the trial court or upon this appeal upon the ground that the notice of intention was not given in time, relying upon Gardner v. Stare, 135 Cal. 118, 67 Pac. 5, and cases cited. We think it does not necessarily appear from this record that the defendant had such notice of the entry of the judgment as would satisfy the statute. This being so, we are disposed to hear and determine the case upon its merits.

[2] The plaintiff Mary J. Clark, joining her husband, sued for damages for eviction from certain premises leased to her by the defendant. The acts of eviction of which she complained were: First, the cutting off of the water connections with the premises by the defendant; second, the boarding up and obstruction of a certain porch and of certain windows in the rear of the premises by which the leased premises received necessary light and air over other lands of the defendant. These two acts of the defendant the plaintiff claimed and the jury found rendered the premises untenable for use as a store or place of abode, and compelled the plaintiff to vacate the premises, thus causing an eviction. The plaintiff Mary J.

Clark is shown to have been a married woman, but entered into this lease in her own name, and conducted the business of a store on the premises apparently as her own business.

The appellant contends that the facts above relied upon by the plaintiff were not sufficient to constitute an eviction, but with this contention we cannot agree.

[3] As to the water, we think that the fact that the water pipes and the water service were in place and in use in connection with the premises at the time of the lease made them an appurtenant to the premises, to the continued use of which the plaintiff was beneficially entitled during her term without charge or cost to her, in the absence of a provision to the contrary in the lease. 1 Underhill's Taylor on Landlord and Tenant, p. 427, § 284; Bradbury v. Higginson, 162 Cal. 602-606, 123 Pac. 797; Gans v. Hughes (City Ct. Brook.) 14 N. Y. Supp. 930; Civ. Code, § 662. We think, also, that the defendant's interferences with the plaintiff's right to receive light and air into the rear of the premises were in violation of her contractual rights as a lessee of the premises, such as would suffice to work an eviction. The cases cited by the appellant to the effect that the owner of lands is not entitled to the easements of light and air from his surrounding owners have no application to the case of landlord and tenant; and there can be no doubt that such an interference with a tenant's light and air as materially detracts from the habitable quality and uses of the leased premises is a breach of the covenant of the lease which may amount to an eviction. McDowell v. Hyman, 117 Cal. 67, 71, 48 Pac. 984.

[4] The appellant's further contention is that the court erred in reopening the case after motion for nonsuit, and in permitting the plaintiff to prove the value of the grocery business lost by reason of her eviction. As to the right of the court upon motion for nonsuit to permit the plaintiff to strengthen her case in the respects in which the motion for nonsuit shows it to be defective, there can be no question, for that is the very purpose of the motion.

[5] Nor do we think that the court erred in permitting the plaintiff to give the testimony that she did give as to the value of her business, based upon its average daily profits. The plaintiff owned, conducted, and attended to the business herself, and personally kept all such accounts of its purchases and sales as were kept; and she testified to the matter of her daily profits therefrom from her own knowledge, and not merely as a matter of guess or opinion. This was perfectly competent evidence to show her damage suffered in the destruction of her business as the result of her eviction.

[6] The objection that the business conducted by the plaintiff Mary J. Clark upon property she had individually leased was community property, for the loss of which she was not entitled to recover, has no merit. The whole trend of the evidence goes to show that the plaintiff Mary J. Clark was acting throughout in the capacity of one dealing with her own separate property; and there is not only no showing that the husband had any community interest in the grocery business, but the strong inference arises that it was the separate property of the wife. It further appears that the husband is made a party plaintiff with her, and that the judgment is in favor of both. All that the defendant would be entitled to would be protection against another action by the husband in relation to this property; and the joining of the husband in the action and in the judgment gives the defendant that protection.

The order denying a new trial is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by A. Raymer against Susan A. Hobbs and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

J. W. Morin, of Pasadena, for appellants. Z. B. Stuart, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Action to recover damages in the sum of $500. Judgment for plaintiff, from which defendants appeal.

At plaintiff's request, defendants executed and delivered to him an option, dated April 15, 1912, to purchase a certain tract of land owned by them. This document was as follows:

"For a valuable consideration and the payment of one dollar, the receipt of which I hereby acknowledge, I, the undersigned, hereby agree to convey, or cause to be conveyed to whomsoever A. Raymer shall designate, within the time limit of this option (as stated below), all that certain piece of property, situated in the county of Orange, state of California, and known and described as follows, to wit: * * * For the sum of twelve thousand three hundred and fifty (0) 100 dollars, net to me, payable to me on terms and conditions as follows: * * * In case the provisions as set forth above, are not exercised within sixty days from date hereof, this option shall be null and void. * * *

"Signed: Susan A. Hobbs.
T. E. Hobbs.

Plaintiff testified this option was procured at the suggestion of and for his clients G. W. Schroeder and wife, to whom he, without written authority and without defendants' knowledge, had shown the property in an effort to sell the same for the sum of $18,000. Other than this option given by defendants to plaintiff, there was no written authority given by defendants to plaintiff whereby he was given the right to purchase or act as agent in the negotiation of a sale of the property. At no time prior to May 20, 1912, when Raymer, by letter, notified defendants that he was negotiating with Schroeder, to whom he had expected to sell the property, did defendants have any notice from Raymer that Schroeder was a possible buyer. On said last-mentioned date, in a letter to Hobbs, he stated that the party to whom he expected to sell the land was "one of the notion of buying your land," and stated that it was Mr. Schroeder. Also saying that he would release Hobbs from the option on condition that if Schroeder later on should conclude to buy, he plaintiff should be paid a commission on the sale by Hobbs. Prior to the receipt of this letter, to wit, about May 1st, Hobbs met Schroeder, who had purchased a piece of land adjoining that owned by de-plaintiff and defendant testimony that he desired to purchase more land. Holds at the time, as stated, having no knowledge of the fact that Schroeder was the party in whom plaintiff was acting in procuring the option, suggested to Schroeder that he purchase the stock, with the understanding that there was no sale between them and that the money advanced by plaintiff to Holds, was, by written contract, placed at the disposal of Schroeder, to pay the price and upon the basis of which plaintiff was entitled to receive the following:

"This sale is to be made about June 10, 1912, at the place where the stock is to be sold, and the proceeds are to be paid to Mr. Schroeder."

Thereafter, to wit, on or about May 22d, pursuant to this agreement, defendants executed a deed and placed the same, with certain instructions pertaining to the delivery of the same, in escrow, it being stated in these instructions that:

"The agreement is given with the understanding that J. A. Brown, who is entitled to the same, has no right to sell or convey on this property expiring on that date, and this money and the deed and agreement are to be returned to said parties respectively."

[12] It is clear from the record that the option cannot be construed as a writing authorizing an agent to sell, but even so construed, it is plain to see that plaintiff never brought Holds and Schroeder together, nor at any manner prior to May 22d, apprised Holds with the fact that Schroeder was a person desirous of purchasing the land, or one in whom a sale thereof might be made. It likewise necessarily appears that at no time during the duration of the option did plaintiff exercise his right to purchase the same or tender any money in payment thereof. Under these circumstances it is difficult to understand upon what theory plaintiff could be entitled to recover damages for breach of any contract made by Holds. Mason v. Lutz, 2 Cal. App. 2d, 67 Pac. 122.

[13] At the time defendants entered into the contract for the sale of the property to Schroeder, on or about May 1st, they had no notice or knowledge that he had ever consummated the purchase of the property through plaintiff, and recognizing the fact that plaintiff had an option to purchase the same for the price specified therein, the contract with Schroeder was made subject to plaintiff's right under said option, thus fully protecting him in case he desired to consummate the purchase in the exercise of his right so to do. Plaintiff, according to his own testimony, procured the option at the suggestion and in the interest of Schroeder. He was not the agent of defendants, but was dealing with them at arm's length and, so far as shown by the written document, solely and alone for himself. This is not affected by the fact that plaintiff reported to them the property to Schroeder at an advance price than he paid to purchase it himself. While it is true that plaintiff tendered the option to Schroeder in the sale made by defendants to Schroeder, nevertheless, if, as alleged by defendants, no consummation was made, the option was not exercised. It is contended by defendants that the exercise of the right to purchase by the plaintiff himself, would in fact, exhaust the right of the plaintiff to exercise the right to offer proof in support of the allegation. The theory of the trial court appears to have been that the period of consummation in the contract was extended and thereby as to plaintiff or not as to a consummation was paid therefor, and also that since the deed was executed and placed in escrow for delivery, subject to the instructions deposited therein, it was immaterial that it was not delivered and the sale consummated until after the expiration of the option. Subject to plaintiff's right to purchase the land under the terms of his option, defendants, without notice to plaintiff, had the right to sell to whomsoever they pleased, and in no event to plaintiff in a position to complain, without a showing that within the life of the option he tendered the amount specified therein in compliance with its terms, or otherwise signified his acceptance of the proposed offer.

PEOPLE v. RAICH. (Cr. 545.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 11, 1915.)

1. INFANTS § 27—OFFENSES AGAINST CHILDREN—EVIDENCE—CORROBORATION OF PROSECUTOR.

In prosecution for lewd conduct with a child, contrary to Pen. Code, § 268, it is not necessary that the testimony of the prosecuting witness be corroborated in order to sustain a conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Infants, Cent. Dig. § 20; Dec. Dig. § 20.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW § 553—TRIAL—QUESTIONS FOR JURY—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES.

Contradictions in the testimony of a witness do not destroy the credibility of such witness, so as to render his testimony insufficient to support a conviction, but the effect of such contradictions is purely a question affecting the credibility of the witness and for the jury.

3. INFANTS § 26—OFFENSES AGAINST CHILDREN—PROSECUTION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for lewd conduct with a child, evidence held not to show that the testimony of the prosecuting witness was so inherently incredible as not to sustain a conviction based thereon.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

John Emil Raich was convicted of lewd conduct with a child, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Pierre A. Fontaine, of Oakland, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction and from an order denying a new trial in a case where the defendant was charged with the commission of the felony defined by section 288 of the Penal Code.

But two points are presented in support of the appeal, namely, that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict, in this: That the testimony of the complaining witness, upon which the case of the people was primarily rested, was not corroborated, and that her testimony is so inherently improbable and incredible that it amounts to no evidence at all.

[1] Neither point is well taken. The statute defining the offense of which the defendant was convicted does not require that the testimony of the complaining witness shall be corroborated; and we know of no statutory or other rule of law which calls for corroboration of the testimony of the complaining witness in cases of the character under consideration.

[2] The contention that the testimony of the complaining witness is so inherently incredible and improbable is based upon the claim that her story, as told upon her examination in chief concerning the conduct of the defendant at the time of the commission of the crime, was in a measure contradicted upon cross-examination, and by a showing that her testimony upon the trial varied in certain details from her testimony given upon the preliminary examination of the defendant.

Mere contradictions of the testimony of a witness will not, standing alone, suffice to utterly destroy the credibility of such witness. It is the peculiar and exclusive province of the jury to decide upon the credibility of witnesses; and although impeaching evidence, in the nature of contradictions or otherwise, has been received, it is still not only the right but the duty of the jury to determine to what extent they will believe or disbelieve the testimony of the witness thus assailed. It is the peculiar and exclusive province of the jury to decide upon the credibility of a witness; and in so doing it is their duty to reconcile, if possible, any apparent conflict in the evidence, whether such conflict is developed upon the whole case or in the testimony of an individual witness. In other words, the jury are the sole judges as to whether or not a witness has been impeached by proof of contradictory statements or otherwise; and finally it is for them to say to what extent they will believe or disbelieve the testimony of the witness thus assailed.

[3] The complaining witness, among other things, testified, in substance, that the lewd and lascivious conduct charged against the defendant was perpetrated upon her every day for three successive months; that through all of this time she attended school every day; and that once a week during the same time she was bathed by her mother. It is insisted that this testimony of itself shows that the story of the complaining witness was inherently improbable, and therefore utterly unworthy of belief, because, as is argued, it would have been physically impossible for the defendant to have repeatedly done the things charged against him without leaving some outward evidence of his acts upon the person and clothing of the complaining witness, and at the same time visibly and injuriously affecting her health. This may be true; but the record does not show whether any observation of the person, clothing, or health of the complaining witness was made by any person at any time. True, the mother of the complaining witness had an opportunity to make the observations referred to; but the fact remains that it does not appear that she did so; and, even though she had done so and found no evidence of the crime charged against the defendant, this would not necessarily have demonstrated the improbability of the testimony of the complaining witness.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

LYNCH v. DE BOOM. (Civ. 1439.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 13, 1915.)

1. JUDGMENT $\Leftrightarrow$ 143—VACATING—EXCUSABLE NEGLECT—SUFFICIENCY OF SHOWING.

Where a showing that plaintiff, who was an attorney and at the time in charge of his own case, appeared in court the morning the case was set for trial, learned that it was not on the trial calendar for that day, and was informed by the clerk that the action would not be tried that day, and that the clerk would assign a later date for resetting the case for trial, whereupon the plaintiff left the courtroom, was uncontradicted, it was an abuse of the trial court's discretion to refuse to set aside a judgment of dismissal entered that day because of plaintiff's failure to appear, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, allowing the court to relieve a party from a judgment taken against him through his excusable neglect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 269, 270, 272–291; Dec. Dig. $\Leftrightarrow$ 143.]

2. JUDGMENT $\Leftrightarrow$ 139—VACATING—EXCUSABLE NEGLECT—EXERCISE OF DISCRETION.

While it is within the court's discretion, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, to grant or refuse relief from a judgment taken against a party by mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, that discretion should be exercised in favor of securing a determination of the case upon its merits, where the undisputed circumstances are such as would naturally cause the judge to hesitate in deciding the motion for such relief.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; B. V. Sargent, Judge.

Action by Thomas B. Lynch against William John De Boom, as executor of the estate of Romaine Camille De Boom, deceased. From an order denying plaintiff's motion to vacate a judgment of dismissal, the plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions to vacate the judgment.

Leo. J. McEnerney, of San Francisco, for appellant. W. P. Caubu and Stafford & Stafford, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. In this action the plaintiff sought to recover from the defendant, as the executor of the last will and testament of Romaine Camille De Boom, deceased, the sum of $612.50 for services rendered the deceased by plaintiff's assignor. The appeal upon a bill of exceptions is from an order denying plaintiff's motion to vacate a judgment of dismissal entered upon the request of and in favor of the defendant.

[1] The motion to vacate was grounded upon the alleged inadvertence, mistake, and excusable neglect of the plaintiff, and it was supported by the affidavit of the plaintiff and his attorney, Mr. Leo. J. McEnerney. The latter's affidavit dealt largely with matters of conversation with one of the counsel for the defendant concerning the setting of the cause for trial, and upon the whole tended to show a tentative agreement between counsel that the cause would not be set for trial nor tried until some time after the middle of July, 1913, when counsel for the plaintiff would have returned from a business engagement at Seattle. The affidavit of plaintiff, in addition to being an affidavit of merits—the sufficiency of which is not questioned here—alleged substantially the following facts: The plaintiff was an attorney at law. On July 11, 1913, at 9:55 a. m. he, in the absence of his attorney, McEnerney, appeared in the courtroom of department 12 of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, in response to an order of the court previously made setting the cause for trial on that date, and then and there called the attention of the clerk of the court to the fact that the cause was omitted from the court's calendar of causes to be tried on that date, and at the same time inquired of the clerk concerning the cause of the omission. Thereupon the clerk informed the plaintiff that the action would not be tried on that date, and that he (the clerk) would assign a later date for the resetting of the cause for trial. The plaintiff, relying upon the statements made to him by the clerk, left the courtroom at 10 minutes past 10 o'clock, fully believing that no action would be taken in the case by the court on that date. After the plaintiff had left the courtroom, however, the cause was by the court called for trial, and, there being no appearance for the plaintiff, a motion to dismiss the case was made and granted, and judgment accordingly entered for the defendant.

The only showing made upon behalf of the defendant in opposition to the motion to vacate consisted of a counter affidavit of Mr. W. M. Stafford, one of the attorneys for the defendant, which, after admitting the allegations of the McEnerney affidavit, in so far as they related to the agreement not to try the cause until after the middle of July, 1913, averred that in keeping with the agreement of counsel the cause was duly and regularly set for trial on July 11, 1913. This affidavit, however, denied that counsel for the defendant had any agreement with McEnerney to the effect that the hearing of the motion to set the cause for trial would be continued until the latter's return from Seattle. The allegations of the plaintiff's affidavit concerning the conversation with the clerk of the court were not contradicted by any evidence, oral or documentary.

Upon the showing thus made, we are of the opinion that the court below abused its discretion in refusing to vacate the judgment of dismissal. The allegations of the plaintiff's affidavit concerning his conversation with the clerk of the court constituted a prima facie showing of excusable neglect which, in the absence of a counter showing by the defendant, should have impelled the lower court to set aside the judgment.

[2] While it is true generally that the exercise of the power to set aside a judgment taken as the result of the alleged excusable neglect of one of the parties to an action is largely a matter of discretion in the court below (Code Civ. Proc. § 473), nevertheless, where the disclosed and undisputed circumstances attending the taking of the judgment are such as would naturally cause the lower court to hesitate in its decision of the motion to vacate, that discretion should be so exercised as to bring about a judgment upon the merits of the action (Grady v. Donahoo, 108 Cal. 211, 41 Pac. 41). In view of the fact that the plaintiff was an attorney at law and for the time being in charge of his own case, it may be conceded that he was guilty of neglect in not waiting for the judge of the lower court to appear upon the bench in order to ascertain with certainty what action would be taken in the case, but the fact was undisputed that he had in good faith endeavored to ascertain from the clerk of the court what was the condition of the cause upon the court's calendar, and was honestly misled by the information which he received. Under these circumstan-es, the neglect of the plaintiff was excusable within the intent and meaning of the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The facts of the case of Anaconda Mining Co. v. Saile, 16 Mont. 8, 39 Pac. 909, 50 Am. St. Rep. 472, presented a situation practically similar to the case at bar. There the Supreme Court said:

"We think Atkinson (the respondent) was excusable in relying upon the information which the clerk gave him. The clerk was the ministerial officer of the court. We think that the attorney had a perfect right to rely upon the statements of such a court officer that no business would be done until a certain time. It is not as if this information came from the sheriff, or a bailiff, or some attendant upon the court. The clerk had the records of the court, and knew its business."

The order appealed from is reversed, with directions to the lower court to enter an order vacating the judgment of dismissal entered in favor of the defendant.

McKAMY v. BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF CITY OF BAKERSFIELD et al.
(Civ. 1677.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Jan. 13, 1915. Rehearing Denied Feb. 3, 1915.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—§131, 159—OFFICERS—POWER OF BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

Where the petitioner did not question that portion of a decree depriving him of a city office, a vacancy was created, and the board of trustees may fill it by appointment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 305, 350-356, 378; Dec. Dig. §131, 159.]

2. PROHIBITION—§6—SCOPE OF REMEDY.

The function of the writ of prohibition, as shown by Code Civ. Proc. § 1102, is to restrain the doing of judicial acts, where the board or tribunal is proceeding without or in excess of jurisdiction; hence prohibition will not lie to restrain the trustees of a city from performing the ministerial act of filling a vacancy in the office of town marshal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. §§ 31-33; Dec. Dig. §6.]

3. PROHIBITION—§19—PARTIES.

Where petitioner was deprived of his office of city marshal, prohibition to prevent the appointment of a successor will not lie, where neither the judge who made the decree, nor the relator who made the complaint, were parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. § 68; Dec. Dig. §19.]

Application by James McKamy for writ of prohibition against the Board of Trustees of the City of Bakersfield and W. V. Matlack, as members. Writ denied.

See, also, 143 Pac. 752.

Matthew S. Platz, of Bakersfield, for petitioner. James F. Farragher, of Yreka, and Alfred Siemon, of Bakersfield, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Petitioner, who was city marshal of the city of Bakersfield, was by decree of court, pursuant to the provisions of section 772 of the Penal Code, deprived of his office and adjudged to pay a fine of $500 to W. C. Dorris, at whose relation the accusation was filed. The proceeding is brought against the board of trustees of the city of Bakersfield; neither the court which rendered the decree, nor Dorris, the relator, being made a party herein.

[1] The prayer of the petition is that a writ of prohibition issue directed to said board of trustees and its members, prohibiting it and them from proceeding to appoint a city marshal to fill the vacancy created in said office by the removal of petitioner therefrom, and also asking that the judgment rendered in favor of said W. C. Dorris, relator, for $500, be set aside. The proceeding is not directed against that part of the decree adjudging that petitioner be deprived of his office. It also appears from the record that petitioner unsuccessfully sought to have the proceeding reviewed in the Supreme Court both on appeal and by writ of review, the denial of which writ, since an appeal does not lie (143 Pac. 752), must be deemed an adjudication of the regularity of the proceeding in which the decree was rendered.

Since no attack is made upon the final decree adjudging that petitioner be deprived of his office, it must follow that a vacancy exists in the office of city marshal of the city of Bakersfield, which vacancy the board of trustees is empowered to fill by appointment. See Gen. Laws, Municipal Corporation, 5th class.

[2] Moreover, the act of appointing a successor to petitioner, whether ministerial or executive, at all events is not judicial in its character. The function of the writ of prohibition is to restrain the doing of judicial acts where the board or tribunal is proceeding without or in excess of jurisdiction. Section 1102, Code Civ. Proc. It does not lie to prohibit the doing of ministerial acts. See Camron v. Kenfield, 57 Cal. 550, Farmers' Union v. Thresher, 62 Cal. 410, and Hobart v. Tillson, 66 Cal. 211, 5 Pac. 83, where it is held that the act of the Legislature in attempting to enlarge the office of the writ of prohibition, so as to apply to ministerial acts, was unauthorized by the Constitution.

[3] Aside from other reasons which might be assigned for denying the application, it clearly appears: First, that neither the court which rendered the decree, nor the relator, the judgment in favor of whom it is sought to have set aside, is made a party to the proceeding; second, that the decree in effect declaring a vacancy to exist in the office of city marshal, being final, it is the duty of the respondents to appoint some one to fill such vacancy; and, third, that the matter of such appointment, even though unauthorized, is not a judicial act.

The application for the writ is denied, and the proceeding dismissed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

DONOVAN v. KEMPER. (Civ. 1434.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 18, 1915. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court March 18, 1915.)

1. TRIAL ⌘139—NONSUIT—WHEN PROPER.

A nonsuit may not be granted, if there be any evidence tending to sustain the plaintiff's cause of action.

2. BILLS AND NOTES ⌘537—ACTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action by the assignee of an alleged accommodation maker of a note to recover from her comaker the amount which she was compelled to pay on the note, evidence held to make a prima facie showing that plaintiff's assignor did not receive and share equally with her comaker in the consideration for the note, and hence a nonsuit was properly denied.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR. ⌘1061 — HARMLESS ERROR—OMISSIONS IN TESTIMONY—CURE.

Even though plaintiff's evidence did not show that she did not share equally in the consideration given, the denial of a nonsuit was harmless, where defendant, testifying as a witness in his own behalf, admitted that he personally received for his own use and benefit the full consideration for the note, as he thereby supplied the omission in plaintiff's evidence and waived his motion for a nonsuit.

4. BILLS AND NOTES ☞518—ACTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action to recover the amount paid on a note by a deceased accommodation maker, evidence held to support the court's finding for plaintiff, though defendant's testimony that he made a loan to the accommodation maker, and that she made the payment on the note in satisfaction of such loan, was not directly contradicted.

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ☞182—PLEADING—SUFFICIENCY TO SUPPORT JUDGMENT.

In an action to recover the amount paid on a note by an accommodation maker, in which there was not sufficient evidence to show a new promise by defendant to pay the debt, where, though the complaint apparently relied mainly upon the allegation of a new promise, it sufficiently stated a cause of action upon the original indebtedness, against which limitations had run, and defendant neither demurred because the two causes of action were not separately stated, nor pleaded limitations by demurrer or answer, the complaint supported the findings and judgment for plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Nellie McM. Donovan against E. R. Kemper. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Appeal from judgment dismissed, and order affirmed.

J. G. Reisner, of San Francisco, for appellant. Devlin, Devlin & Maddux, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. In this action the plaintiff's complaint in substance alleged that in consideration of a loan of $1,500 to the defendant, he and Mrs. C. B. McMorry, plaintiff's assignor, executed and delivered their joint promissory note in the amount of the loan to George W. Locke; that Mrs. McMorry was merely an accommodation maker of the note; that she received no part of the borrowed money, but that it was all received and retained by the defendant; and that plaintiff's assignor paid to Locke, the holder and owner of the note, the sum of $400 for the use and benefit of the defendant. The defendant's answer admitted the execution of the note, but denied every other material allegation of the plaintiff's complaint. Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant for the sum of $400, with interest thereon amounting to the sum of $112.

The appeal from the judgment cannot be considered because it was not taken within six months from the entry of the judgment. This is conceded; but it is insisted upon the appeal from the order denying the defendant a new trial, which comes here upon a bill of exceptions, that the trial court should have granted the defendant's motion for a nonsuit.

[1, 2] A motion for a nonsuit may not be granted, if there be any evidence tending to sustain the plaintiff's cause of action. In the present case Locke, the owner and holder of the note, testified as a witness upon behalf of the plaintiff that the defendant, a druggist, was dissatisfied with his business partner, and made an application to plaintiff's assignor, Mrs. McMorry, for a loan of money sufficient to purchase the interest of his partner. Mrs. McMorry did not have the money, but she requested the witness to make the loan to the defendant, and volunteered to sign the latter's note for the same. The loan and note were made accordingly, and to the best of the recollection of the witness the defendant in person received the money. This witness further testified that the defendant paid part of the sum due on the note at the rate of $15 per month, and that when he ceased making such payments Mrs. McMorry upon demand paid the sum of $400, which was credited on the note on account of the principal due. The defendant from time to time thereafter paid the interest as it accrued on the note. A. E. Shaar, bookkeeper for Locke, the owner of the note, and a witness for the plaintiff, testified as to the making of the note, and that the sum of $1,100 of the principal and all of the interest was paid by the defendant, but that $400 of the principal was paid by plaintiff's assignor, Mrs. McMorry, and that all of Locke's dealings concerning the note subsequent to its making were had with the defendant save and except as to the payment of $400 by Mrs. McMorry.

The plaintiff, as a witness in her own behalf, testified that Mrs. C. B. McMorry was her mother; that the latter was dead. The witness further testified that her mother gave her a check for $400, which she, the witness, in person delivered to Locke, the owner of the note, with directions to apply it on account of the principal due on the note; that in a conversation with the defendant he admitted the indebtedness to plaintiff's assignor, but refused to give a note therefor. This evidence tended to overcome the presumption, if any, arising from the fact that plaintiff's assignor, as the apparent maker of a joint and several note, received and shared equally with her comaker in the consideration given for the note, and was, we think, sufficient to make out a prima facie case for the plaintiff; and therefore the motion for a nonsuit was properly denied.

[3] But, even if this were not so, the denial of the motion for a nonsuit would have been harmless, because of the fact that the defendant, when testifying as a witness in his own behalf, admitted that he had personally received for his own use and benefit the full sum of $1,500 received as the consideration for the note. The defendant thereby supplied the omission, if any, in the evidence presented in support of the plaintiff's case, and as a consequence must be held to have waived his motion for a nonsuit. Ringgold v. Haven et al., 1 Cal. 108; Vica Valley, etc., v. Mansfield, 84 Cal. 560, 24 Pac. 145; Lowe v. S. F., etc., Ry. Co., 154 Cal. 573, 98 Pac. 678; Bowley v. Mangrum, 3 Cal. App. 229, 84 Pac. 996.

[4] Upon his examination in chief the defendant, as a witness in his own behalf, testified that about a week after the execution of the note plaintiff's assignor borrowed from him the sum of $400, and that when she paid the $400 in suit to Locke, the owner of the note, it was paid for and on account of the defendant and with the intent and purpose of satisfying her individual indebtedness to the defendant. It is claimed that because the defendant's testimony in this behalf stands uncontradicted by any direct evidence, the trial court's findings of fact in favor of the plaintiff, to the effect that her assignor had paid the $400 in suit for the individual benefit of the defendant, is contrary to the evidence.

The mere fact that the testimony of the defendant in the particular stated was not and could not be contradicted by a living witness to the transaction was not in and of itself sufficient to compel the trial court to find in favor of the defendant. Notwithstanding the fact that his testimony may not have been contradicted by any direct evidence, it was still the right and duty of the trial court to determine the credit and weight to be given to such testimony, when considered in conjunction with the facts and circumstances of the transaction as shown by the evidence adduced upon the whole case. In this connection the record shows as matters of evidence that, notwithstanding his denial in his verified answer that he had received the whole of the $1,500 evidenced by the note, he subsequently admitted, when under oath as a witness in his own behalf, that he had received such sum in full for his individual use and benefit. Moreover, the plaintiff in rebuttal testified in detail to a conversation with the defendant, wherein he admitted and acknowledged his indebtedness to the plaintiff's assignor in the sum in suit. Added to this the fact stands out prominently that the defendant's testimony in chief concerning his alleged loan of $400 to the plaintiff's assignor was seriously shaken if not entirely shattered upon cross-examination. We are satisfied that the established circumstances of the transaction, considered in connection with the dubious character of the defendant's testimony, jointly influenced the trial court to discredit his story that he had loaned the plaintiff's assignor the $400 in suit. Eliminating his testimony in this particular, we have no doubt but that the evidence, direct and circumstantial, adduced upon the entire case, is amply sufficient to warrant and support the findings of the trial court.

[5] The plaintiff's complaint in effect alleged a cause of action for moneys had and received, which upon its face showed that it was barred by the statute of limitations, and then proceeded to allege that the defendant had renewed the indebtedness by a written promise to pay the same. The plaintiff's proof upon this phase of the case consisted solely of certain letters which had passed between the parties concerning the transaction in suit. It is conceded that these letters did not suffice to show a new promise of the defendant to pay the original indebtedness. It is now urged upon behalf of the defendant that inasmuch as the plaintiff's proof failed to show a new promise, and that her complaint upon its face showed that the original indebtedness was outlawed, the findings and judgment should have been for the defendant.

This contention cannot be sustained. Conceding, without deciding, that it was the apparent purpose of the plaintiff to rely for a cause of action mainly upon the allegation of the defendant's written renewal of the obligation to pay the original indebtedness, nevertheless the plaintiff's complaint in its entirety, although perhaps inadvertently, sufficiently stated a cause of action upon the original indebtedness. Although the two causes of action were not separately stated, no demurrer was interposed upon that ground, and as the statute of limitations was not pleaded, either by demurrer or by answer, as a defense to the plaintiff's cause of action upon the original indebtedness, it must be held that the complaint contains and sufficiently states a cause of action which warrants and supports the findings and judgment.

The appeal from the judgment is dismissed, and the order denying a new trial is affirmed.

PAGANINI v. POLOSTRINI. (Civ. 1419.)
(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 18, 1915.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE — §270 — COMMUNITY PROPERTY — ACTIONS — AUTHORITY OF WIFE.

The husband having full control of the community property, the wife cannot, in her own name, sue the administrator of an infant to recover the value of necessities furnished the infant out of their community property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 968-971, 973-984, 988; Dec. Dig. § 270.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Seavell, Judge.

Action by Mary Paganini against Catharina Polostrini, as administratrix. From an order of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

James M. Thomas, of San Francisco, for appellant. T. Z. Blakeman, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from an order of the trial court granting a motion for nonsuit.

The plaintiff, a married woman living with her husband, brings this action to recover the reasonable value of certain necessities of life furnished a minor while not under the care of his parents or guardian, and while said minor was living in the home of the plaintiff and her husband, and was being supplied with such necessities out of their community property. There is no averment or proof that the plaintiff rendered to the minor any special service, or expended upon him any money from her own separate estate. On the contrary, it appears that the necessities which the minor received were furnished chiefly from the grocery store of the husband, from which the general supplies of the household were taken. Upon the conclusion of the plaintiff's case in which these facts appeared, the defendants moved for a nonsuit upon the ground that the plaintiff had no right of action, and that the husband would have been the only proper party to bring the suit.

We think the court committed no error in granting the motion for nonsuit. This is not a case of defect or nonjoinder of parties plaintiff. The sole right of recovery in this transaction was in the husband, and he alone had the original right to sue. The cases cited by the appellant have no application to the question in issue here. In each of these cases the plaintiff, the wife, was suing in her own name on account of some special contractual or personal right of her own which had been violated; as in the case of Schwarze v. Mahoney, 97 Cal. 133, 31 Pac. 908, for the unlawful detainer of premises of which she was the lessor; and in the case of Tingley v. Times-Mirror Co., 151 Cal. 2, 89 Pac. 1097, for damages for libel directly affecting the plaintiff's personal character; and in the case of Baldwin v. Second Street Cable Ry. Co., 77 Cal. 391, 19 Pac. 644, for personal injuries suffered by the plaintiff in a railway accident. In each of these cases the plaintiff, if unmarried, would have had the sole right of recovery, and, being married, she had not lost that right, but was only obliged, by the statute, to join her husband with herself as a formal party plaintiff in its assertion. Her failure in such cases so to do would be the proper subject of dilatory pleas, which would be waived by their non-assertion; but this is not one of such cases. Here the community property has been used to furnish necessities to a minor child. Under the terms of the statute the reasonable value of such necessities may be recovered in a proper action; but the husband being in full control of the community property, and hence of all choses in action accruing out of its use, is the only proper person to bring the action for the recovery of the reasonable value of such property so employed. There is no right of action whatever in the wife in such a case (Duncan v. Duncan, 6 Cal. App. 404, 92 Pac. 310), and hence in this case none could be established by the proofs. It is not a case of nonjoinder of the husband, or of mere want of legal capacity in the plaintiff to sue. It is a case where one, having no right of action in herself, has nevertheless brought suit. The objection was properly made by motion for nonsuit, and the nonsuit was therefore properly granted. Judgment affirmed.

BROWN v. DWYER et al., Board of State Harbor Com'rs. (Civ. 1447.)

1. MANDAMUS $\Leftrightarrow$ 77—DISCRETIONARY ACTS—REMOVAL OF OFFICER.

Where the findings of the board of harbor commissioners and its order removing plaintiff from the position of wharfinger was based on the testimony supporting the charge of incompetency filed against plaintiff, it could not be said that the board abused the discretion vested in it, and the court properly refused mandamus to review its order; and the case did not fall within the exception to the rule declaring that a dismissal from office, based upon evidence showing only a minor and excusable dereliction, may be deemed an abuse of discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 161-169; Dec. Dig. $\Leftrightarrow$ 77.]

2. MANDAMUS $\Leftrightarrow$ 176—ACTS OF BOARDS — PAYMENT OF SALARY.

Mandamus to compel the board to pay and allow plaintiff's salary pending the hearing and determination of its power to remove him was properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 392-394; Dec. Dig. $\Leftrightarrow$ 176.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Seawell, Judge.

Mandamus by W. A. Brown against J. J. Dwyer and others, members of and constituting the Board of State Harbor Commissioners of the State of California. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Mastick & Partridge, of San Francisco, for appellant. Daniel A. Ryan, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The appellant in this proceeding prayed for the mandate of the lower court, compelling the defendants and respondents, as members of the state board of harbor commissioners, to reinstate him to the position of wharfinger of the port of San Francisco, from which position he had been dismissed by said board after a trial upon the charge of incompetency and neglect of duty. The judgment of the lower court went for the respondents, and upon appeal therefrom it is urged upon behalf of the appellant that the evidence adduced upon the hearing in the lower court shows that the respondents, sitting as the board of state harbor commissioners, abused the discretion vested in them to discharge the appellant from his position with the state, and that therefore the lower court's findings and judgment should have been in favor of the appellant.

The specific charge filed with the respondents and upon which they tried and discharged the appellant, was the violation of rule 112 of the state board of harbor commissioners, which provides in part that "each wharfinger must be on duty every day, legal holidays excepted, from 8 o'clock a. m. until 5 o'clock p. m."; and the findings made by the respondents after a regular hearing of the charge against the appellant were, in substance, that upon one occasion the appellant did not report for duty until after the hour prescribed by rule 112 of the board, and his failure on another occasion to remain on duty the full length of time provided by the same rule. Incidentally the findings of the respondents declare further that on another occasion appellant did not remain on duty until the noon hour, which impliedly was required of him by the same rule.

[1] It may be conceded that these findings would not have been conclusive upon the court below if it had been shown that they were not based upon any evidence at all, or that the evidence offered and received at the trial of appellant before the respondents was so slight as to amount to no evidence at all. But it appears from the record before us that upon the trial of the case in the court below it was shown that the findings and order of the respondents were based upon the testimony of witnesses which sufficiently support the charge filed with the respondents against the appellant. This being so, it cannot be said that the respondents abused the discretion vested in them, and accordingly it must be held that the court below was justified in refusing its mandate to review or revise the respondents' order dismissing the appellant from the service of the state. In our opinion the evidence offered and received upon the trial of appellant before the respondents—which evidence was reproduced substantially upon the hearing of the application for the writ in the court below—showed something more than a mere technical and unintentional disregard of official duty on the part of the appellant. Such evidence, therefore, furnished a legal and substantial basis for the respondents' order dismissing the appellant from his position, and as a consequence the present case does not fall within the exception to the general rule which declares that a dismissal from office, based upon evidence which shows only a minor, technical, unintentional, and excusable dereliction of duty, may be deemed an abuse of discretion.

[2] Incidentally the appellant prayed the mandate of the lower court to compel the respondents to allow and pay his salary pending the hearing and determination of the power of the respondents to remove him from office. This the lower court rightfully refused to grant. If it had been determined that the appellant had been illegally discharged from his position, as a matter of course he would have been entitled to the accrued salary which the state had stipulated to pay him, but until such time as the appellant was reinstated as an officer of the state, and his name restored to the state's pay roll, he was not entitled to the remedy of mandamus to compel the payment of any salary which may have accrued to him pending the hearing and determination of the cause of his removal. Meredith v. Sacramento, etc., 50 Cal. 433; Chicago v. People, 210 Ill. 84, 71 N. E. 816.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. WILSON. (Cr. 348.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Jan. 15, 1915.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡543—EVIDENCE—TESTIMONY ON FORMER TRIAL—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a prosecution for manslaughter, where the sheriff showed that he had used due diligence to serve process on a witness, and that the witness could not be found within the state, testimony of such witness on a former trial was admissible.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡1153—APPEAL—DISCRETION OF COURT—EVIDENCE.

Where there was evidence to support the conclusion of the trial judge as to the admission of testimony of a witness at former trial, the matter being one of discretion, the ruling cannot be disturbed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3061-3066; Dec. Dig. ⚡1153.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡539—EVIDENCE—TESTIMONY ON PREVIOUS TRIAL—STATUTE.

Under Pen. Code, § 686, subd. 3, as amended in 1911 (St. 1911, p. 364), providing that, where the testimony of a witness for the people has been taken in the presence of defendant, who had an opportunity to cross-examine, such testimony may be read in evidence, where it is satisfactorily shown to the court that such witness is dead, insane, or cannot with due diligence be found within the state, in a prosecution for manslaughter evidence of a witness on former trial whom sheriff could not find was admissible against defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1230; Dec. Dig. ⚡539.]

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⚡266—CRIMINAL LAW ⚡539—EVIDENCE—PREVIOUS TESTIMONY—STATUTE—CONSTITUTIONALITY.

Pen. Code, § 686, subd. 3, as amended in 1911 (St. 1911, p. 364), providing that, where the testimony of a witness for the people has been taken in the presence of defendant, who had an opportunity to cross-examine, such testimony may be read in evidence where it is satisfactorily shown to the court that such witness is dead, etc., is not in conflict with Const. art. 1, § 13, providing that none shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, and that there may be taken in the presence of accused and counsel depositions of witnesses in criminal cases other than cases of homicide, where there is reason to believe that the witness will not or cannot attend the trial.

5. CRIMINAL LAW ☞ 662—EVIDENCE—PREVIOUS TESTIMONY—FEDERAL CONSTITUTION.

Const. U. S. Amend. 6, concerning the right of an accused person to be confronted with the witnesses against him, restrains only the federal government, and not the action of the states.

6. CRIMINAL LAW ☞ 662—EVIDENCE—TESTIMONY ON PREVIOUS TRIAL—STATUTE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1897, providing that the written law of the state is contained in its Constitution and statutes, and in the Constitution and statutes of the United States, the provisions of the sixth amendment of the Constitution of the United States concerning the right of an accused person to be confronted with the witnesses against him are not rendered restrictive upon state action.

7. CRIMINAL LAW ☞ 732—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—MATTERS OF FACT.

In a prosecution for manslaughter, where the court charged as to the probative value of proof of a motive, the instruction was not in violation of Const. art. 6, § 19, forbidding judges to charge juries with respect to matters of fact, where it did not indicate to the jury the opinion of the judge as to the existence of a motive, but merely defined the purposes for which evidence bearing on motive had been received and should be considered.

8. CRIMINAL LAW ☞ 829—TRIAL—REQUESTS FOR INSTRUCTIONS ALREADY GIVEN.

In a prosecution for manslaughter, the refusal of the court to give certain requested instructions substantially covered by other charges was not error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

William Wilson was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

B. F. Thomas, of Santa Barbara, and A. B. Bigler, of Santa Maria, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CONREY, P. J. The defendant, having been convicted of the crime of manslaughter, appeals from the judgment. The facts shown by the evidence at the trial of this case are substantially the same as indicated in the statement made by this court on a former appeal and contained in volume 23, Cal. Appellate Reports, at page 513 et seq., 138 Pac. 971.

The errors which led to a reversal after the former trial have not been repeated at the last trial, and it is only necessary to consider points urged with respect to matters newly arising in the present record.

[1, 2] The court did not err in admitting in evidence the testimony of Seth Traut as given at the former trial. The return made by the sheriff showing his inability to find Mr. Traut and serve a subpoena upon him, and the testimony of the sheriff on the same matter, were sufficient to support the ruling of the judge that due diligence had been shown, and that the witness could not be found within the state. This was a subject to be determined within the discretion of the trial judge, and, since there was evidence to support his conclusion, the ruling cannot be disturbed. People v. Lederer, 17 Cal. App. 374, 119 Pac. 949.

[3-6] The admission of this evidence is permitted by subdivision 3 of section 686 of the Penal Code, as amended in 1911. It must be held, in harmony with former decisions involving the same principle, that the section as amended is not in conflict with section 13 of article 1 of the Constitution of the state of California. People v. Sierp, 116 Cal. 249, 48 Pac. 88; People v. Clark, 151 Cal. 201, 204, 90 Pac. 549. The provisions of the sixth amendment to the Constitution of the United States concerning the right of an accused person to be confronted with the witnesses against him are not applicable here. "The fifth and sixth amendments of the Constitution of the United States are restrictive of the powers of the federal government, and not restraints upon the states." Davis v. Texas, 129 U. S. 651, 653, 11 Sup. Ct. 675, 35 L. Ed. 300; Brown v. New Jersey, 175 U. S. 174, 20 Sup. Ct. 77, 44 L. Ed. 119. We are of opinion that this conclusion is not affected by the statement contained in section 1897 of the Code of Civil Procedure that the written law of this state is "contained in its Constitution and statutes, and in the Constitution and statutes of the United States."

[7] Objection is made to the thirtieth instruction given to the jury, which reads as follows:

"The evidence or nonevidence of a motive for the commission of the crime charged in this case is an important question of fact which must be considered by you with all of the evidence in this case as a circumstance tending to show the guilt or innocence of the accused."

"The failure of a proof of motive, if there has been such a failure in this case, is a circumstance in favor of the innocence of the defendant; and, if you find upon a careful examination of all the evidence that it fails to show any motive, cause, or reason on the part of the defendant for the killing of the deceased, Thomas Wilson, if you find beyond a reasonable doubt that the said Thomas Wilson was killed, then you must consider that fact in determining the guilt or innocence of the defendant.

"In criminal cases the proof of the moving cause is permissible, and oftentimes valuable, but it is never essential. Where the perpetration of the crime has been brought home to the defendant, the motive for its commission becomes unimportant. Evidence of motive is sometimes of assistance in removing doubt and completing proof which might otherwise be unsatisfactory, and that motive may be shown by positive evidence or gleaned from the facts and surroundings of the act. Then proof of the motive becomes a circumstance, but nothing more than a circumstance, to be considered by the jury, and its absence is equally a circumstance in favor of the accused, to be given such weight as the jury deems proper. But proof of motive is never indispensable in a criminal case."

It is claimed that in stating that the evidence or nonevidence of a motive for the commission of the crime was an important question of fact, and in the further statement that in criminal cases the proof of the moving cause is never essential, the instruction is in violation of article 6 of section 19 of the state Constitution, which forbids judges to charge juries with respect to matters of fact. We think that the instruction is not subject to such objection. It did not in any manner indicate to the jury any opinion of the judge as to whether a motive for the alleged crime had or had not been shown, but it did fairly define the purposes for which evidence having reference to a possible motive had been received and should be considered.

[8] Error is claimed in the court's refusal to give certain instructions requested by the defendant, which on examination we find are substantially contained in other instructions which were given. The remaining matters presented in the argument are of minor importance, or involve propositions which do not seem to require further discussion.

The judgment is affirmed.

WINNETT v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY. (Civ. 1638.)

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE ⇨171—APPEAL—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE—NECESSITY OF DETERMINATION ON MERITS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 873, providing relative to justices' courts that, unless postponed, the trial of the action must commence at the expiration of one hour from the time specified in the notice of hearing and must be continued until all the issues are disposed of, and section 884, providing that, if either party fails to appear at the time fixed for trial, the trial may proceed at the request of the adverse party, where, in an action to recover for labor performed and materials furnished, in which defendant by his answer denied the allegation that he was indebted therefor, plaintiff failed to appear, and defendant thereupon introduced evidence, whereupon the court found that defendant was not indebted to plaintiff and rendered a judgment for costs in favor of defendant, plaintiff was entitled to appeal therefrom for a trial de novo in the superior court, even conceding that an action cannot be tried anew in the superior court until the issues of fact have been tried in the justice's court, as the facts did not bring the case within that rule.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 655-657; Dec. Dig. ⇨171.]

Petition by T. B. Winnett for a writ of review directed to the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles. Writ dismissed.

George M. Pierson and Collier & Clark, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner. Hammack & Hammack, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Review. Petitioner was defendant in an action brought by the Adjustment Corporation in the justice's court to recover the value of certain services and material alleged to have been furnished to defendant by plaintiff's assignor. The case was regularly set down for trial, due notice of the time fixed therefor being given by plaintiff to defendant, who at the time specified in the notice duly appeared with his witnesses. Plaintiff, however, failed to appear, and after the expiration of one hour, as provided in section 873, Code of Civil Procedure, the case was called for trial, when, as appears from the return, the trial proceeded. A witness was sworn and testified on behalf of defendant; whereupon the court determined that defendant was entitled to judgment for his costs, and "ordered and adjudged that T. B. Winnett do have and recover of and from Adjustment Corporation the sum of ——— dollars, together with costs herein incurred by defendant." Thereafter, plaintiff duly appealed from said judgment, upon questions of both law and fact, to the superior court, which, after denying a motion made by defendant to dismiss said appeal for want of jurisdiction to entertain the same, rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff. The purpose of this proceeding is to have the judgment annulled and set aside for want of jurisdiction.

Conceding, as claimed by petitioner, that an action commenced in the justice's court cannot be tried anew in the superior court until the issues of fact have been tried in the justice's court (Null v. Superior Court, 4 Cal. App. 207, 87 Pac. 392), and that a judgment rendered under such circumstances will be annulled by this court in proceedings to review the same, we are nevertheless of the opinion that the record here does not bring the case within such rule. While plaintiff alleged that defendant was indebted to it in the sum of $80.60 for labor performed and materials furnished, the defendant by his answer denied such allegation. Section 884, Code of Civil Procedure, relating to trials in justices' courts, provides:

"If either party fails to appear at the time fixed for trial, the trial may proceed at the request of the adverse party."

Under this section, defendant had the right to proceed with the trial until, as provided in section 873, Code of Civil Procedure, all the issues were disposed of. The issue here involved was whether or not defendant was indebted to plaintiff as alleged in the complaint, and upon the evidence introduced the court found that he was not. In our opinion, the judgment rendered by the justice of the peace would have constituted a bar to another action based upon the same claim, and, if this be true, then clearly the only remedy for plaintiff was by appeal to the superior court upon issues both of law and fact and a trial de novo, which was had.

The record discloses that a trial was had upon the merits of the case as the issues were tendered in the justice's court. Hence the writ must be dismissed, and it is so ordered.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 1011—REVIEW—FINDINGS OF FACT—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

A finding by the trial court that there was no understanding between the parties that a written agreement was not to become binding until ratified by defendant's wife will not be disturbed on appeal, where there was a direct conflict in the evidence on that issue.

Under Civ. Code, § 164, defining community property, and providing that a conveyance to a wife shall be presumed to be as her separate property, and that a conveyance to husband and wife is presumed to give the wife her share as tenant in common, property conveyed to a husband after marriage is presumed to belong to the community.

3. BROKERS $\hookrightarrow$ 82—ACTIONS FOR COMPENSATION—VARIANCE.

Under Civ. Code, § 172, providing that a husband has the same power of disposition, other than testamentary, over community property, that he has over his separate estate, except that he cannot give it away without the written consent of the wife, there is no material variance between an allegation in a complaint by a broker for his commission that a written contract, whereby a husband and wife or either of them agreed to pay a commission for the sale of community property, was signed by both husband and wife, and proof that it was signed by the husband alone, who also affixed his wife's signature thereto, but without authority from her, which would prevent a judgment against the husband, since the contract is binding upon him severally without his wife's signature.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Norton, Judge.

Action by A. L. Farrington and another against F. E. McClellan and another. Judgment for plaintiffs against defendant McClellan, and he appeals. Affirmed.

A. H. Carpenter, of Stockton, for appellant. Carlton C. Case, of Stockton, for respondents.

HART, J. The controversy here arises out of certain agreements alleged in the complaint to have been entered into between the plaintiffs and the defendants, whereby the latter agreed to pay the former certain compensation for negotiating the sale of certain real property situated in the city of Stockton.

Judgment was awarded the plaintiffs as against the defendant and appellant, F. E. McClellan, in the sum of $350 (the amount sued for), with interest thereon from the 1st day of February, 1913. Furthermore, in accordance with the prayer of the complaint based upon averments thereof that the contract declared upon contained a misdescription of the property involved, the court adjudged and decreed that said contract be so reformed as that the same be described therein according to its true description.

The complaint alleges that on the 11th day of November, 1912, the appellant, F. E. McClellan, executed and delivered to the plaintiffs a writing whereby the latter were invested with authority to sell or procure for him a purchaser of the property referred to in the complaint for the sum of $3,900 net, and in cash, within 60 days from the date of said writing, "and thereafter until notice in writing be given the said Farrington & Hubbard of the withdrawal of said property, and if a sale of said property shall be negotiated during that time, I promise to pay the said Farrington & Hubbard a commission of any amount above $3,900."

It is further alleged that after the date of said instrument, "and within the time therein provided, and in pursuance of the terms thereof, the plaintiffs procured a purchaser, to wit, Stockton Grove, No. 118, U. A. O. Druids, ready, willing, and able to purchase the said property for the sum of $4,250"; that the plaintiffs negotiated a sale of said property with the said purchaser, and thereafter the said purchaser entered into a written agreement with the defendants to purchase the said real property for the sum of $4,250, and thereupon tendered to the defendants the said sum of money, "and the said sum is now in possession and under the control of said defendants"; that on the 19th day of December, 1912, another writing or agreement, purporting to have been executed and signed by both F. E. and Minnie McClellan, the defendants, was delivered to the plaintiffs, and which reads as follows:

"In consideration of commission earned by A. L. Farrington and F. B. Hubbard, composing the real estate firm of Farrington & Hubbard, in the sale of our property consisting of lot No. 8, in block No. 33, east of Center street, in Stockton, California, we, or either of us, agree to pay to the said Farrington & Hubbard out of the final payment for said property, which is due and payable February 1, 1913, by Stockton Grove, No. 118, U. A. O. Druids, the sum of $350."

Both the above-mentioned writings are set out in the complaint in hæc verba.

A demurrer to the complaint, interposed by both defendants, having been overruled, the latter filed separate answers, in which they specifically denied the averments of the complaint and set up certain special defenses. In her answer, by way of a special defense, the defendant Minnie McClellan alleged that, when the agreements above referred to were made, she was an invalid; that she was often required to take opiates for relief from the great physical pain from which she was suffering, with the result that, during the period of time covering the negotiations and transactions mentioned in the complaint, she was incapable of understanding business transactions of any kind, and that she had no knowledge of the agreements set out in the complaint or of any matters appertaining thereto until the 24th day of December, 1912, when the transaction involved here was explained to her, "to the effect that the alleged agreements had been signed by her husband for her, subject to her approval, and that she then and there refused to ratify said proposed agreements, or either of them, or to be bound by any of the provisions thereof."

The special defense interposed by the appellant involves the charge that the plaintiff Farrington obtained the contract of December 19, 1912, "by means of threats, misrepresentation, fraud, concealment, and unfair practices," the nature of which is described with considerable particularity in the answer, but which it is believed to be unnecessary to explain here, since there is no serious claim that there is evidence which supports that charge.

The facts of the transaction upon which the action is founded as the same were developed by the evidence from which the court evidently made its findings are substantially: On the 11th day of November, 1912, the plaintiff Farrington and the appellant met on one of the streets in the city of Stockton and there held a conversation, in the course of which the appellant asked the said plaintiff (who was then, with the plaintiff Hubbard, engaged in the buying and selling of real estate in said city) if he could not sell the property referred to in the complaint. After some discussion, the appellant said he would take $3,900 net for said property, and agreed that the plaintiffs might retain, as their compensation for selling or procuring a purchaser of the property, all that they might receive for the same in excess of that sum. Farrington thereupon prepared a written contract embracing the terms stated, and, as seen, giving the plaintiffs 60 days, or thereafter until notice of the termination of the contract was given them by the appellant, within which to make the sale. It appears that the lot was erroneously, and doubtless inadvertently, given to Farrington by the appellant as "No. 6" in the block in which it is situated, whereas it was, in fact, lot No. 8, in said block, and that this error was not discovered until after the execution of the contract of November 11, 1912, authorizing the plaintiffs to sell the property upon the terms above specified. Parenthetically, it may be said that no question could arise as to the particular lot to which the agreement was intended to relate, since it does not seem to be disputed that the lot which it was the understanding that the plaintiffs were given authority to sell was the one upon which the appellant's blacksmith shop stood, and that that was the lot to which the transaction referred.

After the making of the said agreement, the plaintiffs advertised the property for sale in a Stockton newspaper at the sum of $4,250, and also made other personal efforts to sell it. Within 60 days from the date of the authorization granted to the plaintiffs to sell the property, they negotiated the sale of the same to a fraternal organization in the city of Stockton, known and designated as Stockton Grove, No. 18, U. A. O. Druids, for the sum of $4,250. The trustees of the Druids deposited with the plaintiffs the sum of $200 as the initial payment on the purchase price, and the plaintiffs thereupon reported the sale to the appellant and tendered him the sum so deposited. The appellant refused to accept the $200, saying that he desired a deposit of $250, or $50 more than the amount so deposited. Thereupon the plaintiffs secured from the trustees of the Grove an additional $50, and the full sum of $250 was thereupon paid by Farrington to and received by the appellant. This occurred on the 19th day of December, 1912, and at the same time the appellant executed the commission agreement pleaded in the complaint and above referred to, and also entered into a written contract with the Grove of Druids, or its trustees as the agents of said organization, whereby he agreed to sell the property to that organization for the sum of $4,250. It appears, as her answer alleges, that the defendant Minnie McClellan, at the time of these transactions, was an invalid, confined to her bed, and was suffering from such an intensely painful malady as to make it necessary to frequently administer to her opiates or other pain-destroying narcotics, and that, as a consequence, she was not capable of transacting business. The appellant, however, signed his wife's name to the instruments.

After the above-mentioned transaction, Mrs. McClellan refused to give her assent to the same, and of this Farrington was informed over the telephone by the daughter of the defendants. Later he interviewed the appellant, who explained that his wife's condition was such as to render her incompetent to transact business, but assured Farrington that the deed "would be signed later." Subsequently (on the 1st day of February, 1913) Edward F. Harris, cashier of the Commercial and Savings Bank of Stockton, accompanied by the plaintiffs and one Tweed, representing the Druids, called at the home of the defendants for the purpose of paying them the balance of the purchase price of the property. The appellant was not at home at the time. His son-in-law, one Cassidy, was there, however, and, when the absence of the appellant was made known to the visiting party, Harris stated to Cassidy that he was there to pay the McClellans the balance of the purchase price, and asked permission to tender it to Mrs. McClellan. She was yet confined to her room, but, having been apprised by Cassidy of the purpose of the presence of Harris and his companions, returned word that she would accept neither the money nor a tender thereof, whereupon Harris pinned upon the hat rack in the house a written tender of the money. On the same day, the trustees of the Druids delivered to the sheriff of San Joaquin county a written notice, addressed to the defendants, which notice recited the circumstances of the attempt by Harris, as above explained, to pay or tender to the defendants the balance of the purchase price of the property, to wit, the sum of $4,000, and which contained the further statement that the said money was then on deposit in the said Commercial and Savings Bank to the account of the defendants. The sheriff served said notice on the appellant on the 1st day of February, 1913.

It was shown that the property concerned here was acquired by the appellant through a deed from one Henry J. Kuechler on the 1st day of February, 1908, which was, according to the evidence, during the coverture of the defendants.

The appellant testified that he was wholly without authority to affix his wife's name to the agreements of December 19, 1912, and that the understanding which was had between all the parties was that said agreements should possess no binding force unless or until his wife, when sufficiently restored to health to understand their nature, either subscribed her own name to the same or otherwise ratified them. But Farrington positively contradicted that testimony and declared that there was no such conversation or understanding; he having been present when both the agreements were made and signed by the appellant. It is therefore plainly apparent that upon that question there is a decided conflict in the proofs.

The appellant makes no claim in his brief that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding upon which the court decreed a reformation of the instrument conferring upon the plaintiffs the authority to negotiate the sale of the property. It is contended, however, that there exists a fatal variance between the agreement of December 19, 1912, and the evidence in this: That, while said agreement, as pleaded, purports to be the agreement of the defendants, the name of each appearing to have been subscribed thereto, the evidence shows that it was never signed, acquiesced in, nor ratified by the defendant Minnie McClellan, and that it was therefore the agreement alone of the defendant F. E. McClellan. Like objection is urged as to the contract, made on the same day that the above-mentioned commission agreement was executed, and wherein the defendants are purported to have joined, and whereby the latter purport to agree to sell the property to the Druids for the sum of $4,250.

The specific contention with respect to said agreements is two-fold, to wit: (1) That, to impart to them binding force, it was essential that the wife of the appellant, Minnie McClellan, should have become a party thereto; (2) that the appellant signed both agreements and without her consent attached his wife's name thereto with a distinct understanding with the plaintiffs and the representatives of the proposed purchaser (the Druids) that, if the said Minnie McClellan should refuse to assent to the agreements, they would become null and void and should be canceled. In other words, the proposition is that, although the appellant signed the agreements and subscribed the name of his wife thereto, it was agreed by and between all the parties that the validity or binding force of said instruments should entirely depend upon their subsequent ratification by the defendant Minnie McClellan. It is hence argued that, the wife having repudiated the agreements after their execution by the appellant or refused to assent to or ratify them, the instruments became nullities and were, from the beginning, without binding force upon either of the defendants.

[1] First taking up the proposition last above stated, it is sufficient to say that a conclusive reply thereto is to be found in the fact, hitherto shown, that Farrington testified that no such understanding as that upon which the validity of said proposition may be sustained was had between the parties, and although, as before stated, there appears to be a direct conflict between Farrington and the appellant upon that point, the testimony of the former, under the well-known rule relative to conflicting evidence, must be accepted by this court as having established the fact found from it by the trial court, viz., that the agreements were not executed upon any such understanding or agreement, or, in other words, were made by the appellant without any such qualification or condition as that referred to by him.

[2, 3] Nor is there a fatal or any legal variance between the agreements involved here and the proofs. The evidence, as we have seen, discloses that the property involved here was conveyed to the appellant after his marriage to the defendant Minnie McClellan, and while the relation of husband and wife existed between them. The presumption is, therefore, that said property belonged to the community. Civ. Code, § 164. While the husband cannot make a gift of the community property or convey it without a valuable consideration, unless the wife, in writing, consents thereto, he nevertheless has the management and control of such property, "with the like absolute power of disposition, other than testamentary." Civ. Code, § 172. From the provisions of the Code thus adverted to, it follows that the appellant had the legal right to sell the property without the acquiescence or consent of his wife. This proposition being true, he had the right to authorize another, without the consent of his wife, to sell the property for him in consideration of any compensation which might be satisfactory to him and his agent. This course he appears to have adopted, and the next question to be considered is whether the commission agreement pleaded in the complaint is materially different from the one proved.

As seen, the pleaded agreement purports to have been executed by both defendants, but the evidence shows and the court finds that, while the appellant signed said agreement, the defendant Minnie McClellan did not, and upon this, as before stated, it is claimed that a variance between the pleading and proof as to that instrument arises, and that the findings, conforming to the evidence adduced in proof of the pleaded agreement, describe a different agreement from the one set out in the complaint.

The learned counsel for the appellant cites many cases in which the rule relating to the doctrine of variance is clearly expounded and well applied. See McCord v. Seale, 56 Cal. 264; Stout v. Coffin, 28 Cal. 65; Stearns v. Martin, 4 Cal. 227; Green v. Covillaud, 10 Cal. 317, 70 Am. Dec. 725. It is not, however, considered important to review those cases here. It is enough to say that, while no fault can be found with the conclusions therein arrived at or the reasoning leading thereto, they are not deemed to be in point in this case. The said agreement, as pleaded, provides that "We or either of us agree to pay Farrington & Hubbard," etc.; and thus it appears that upon its face or in form it created a joint and several obligation, and would have bound both parties jointly or either severally, if both had signed it. But, as the evidence shows it to have been made, the agreement is solely that of the appellant, and by it, obviously, he as effectually bound himself to its terms as though in form of language it imposed or created or purported to create none other than a several liability or obligation against him. See Melander v. Western National Bank, 21 Cal. App. 462, 471, 132 Pac. 265; 9 Cyc. p. 656.

[4] The remaining question is whether the plaintiffs performed the contract to sell the property, and are therefore entitled to be paid for their services in so doing according to the terms of said contract.

Relative to contracts whereby real estate brokers are authorized to sell property for others on commission, the following well-settled rules may be stated:

"If, within the time limited, the broker has produced a purchaser who is ready, willing, and able to purchase upon the terms prescribed, the principal cannot evade the payment of the broker's commission by then refusing or neglecting to consummate the sale, or by changing the terms, or by selling the property to another, or by so negligently dealing with the proposed purchaser as to lose the benefit of the sale." Mechem on Agency, § 967.

And it has been held that, where the broker has performed his part of the contract, "he will be entitled to his commission, although the sale is not consummated because the principal's title proves defective (Hamlin v. Schulte, 34 Minn. 534, 27 N. W. 301; Goodridge v. Holladay, 18 Ill. App. 363; Gonzales v. Broad, 57 Cal. 224; Knapp v. Wallace, 41 N. Y. 477; Doty v. Miller, 43 Barb. [N. Y.] 529; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Works, 83 N. Y. 378, 38 Am. Rep. 441), or because the principal's wife refuses to join in the conveyance (Clapp v. Hughes, 1 Phila. 382), or because the purchaser refuses to complete the sale on account of false representations made by the principal" (Glentworth v. Lenther, 21 Barb. [N. Y.] 145). See, also, Justy v. Erro, 16 Cal. App. 519, 522, 117 Pac. 575, where the cases just mentioned are cited.

Under the principles thus stated, the rule as to contracts of the character of the one under consideration may be reduced to this simple formula: That the procurement and production by the broker of a purchaser at all times ready, willing, and able to purchase the property at the price fixed by the owner will entitle the broker to the stipulated commission, even though, through no fault of the broker or the proposed purchaser, the sale be not consummated. It follows, therefore, that whether there be a variance between the contract between the brokers and the owner of the property for the sale thereof, or, indeed, whether the proposed purchaser entered into any such written contract with the seller at all, is immaterial, so far as the issue involved here is concerned. Thus the sole proposition in this case is finally reduced to the single question whether the plaintiffs, in pursuance of their contract with the appellant, procured and produced, within the time limited by said contract, a purchaser ready, willing, and able to purchase said property. That they did do so, it seems to us, there can be no manner of doubt under the evidence. As seen, they, within the time specified in the contract with the appellant, not only found and produced a purchaser ready, willing, and able to purchase the property at the price specified in the contract, but did all that lay within their power to actually consummate the sale at said price. They paid to the appellant a deposit of $250 made by the purchaser upon the purchase price of the property, and thereafter caused to be tendered to the appellant the balance of the purchase price. And there can be no possible doubt that the purchaser produced by the plaintiffs was not only ready, willing, and able to purchase the property, but that it was anxious to do so, for it appears that the purchaser deposited the balance of the purchase price in a Stockton bank to the account of the defendants, and thereafter, upon the refusal of the defendant to convey the property to it, brought and sustained an action, in the superior court of San Joaquin county, against the appellant for the specific performance of his agreement so to convey.

We have discovered no just reason for disturbing the judgment, and it is accordingly affirmed.

NELSON v. EAST SIDE GROCERY CO.
et al. (Civ. 1415.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 18, 1915. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court, March 18, 1915.)

1. PARTIES — 66—DEFENDANTS — CONSTRUCTION OF COMPLAINT.

Under a complaint, the caption of which named the "East Side Grocery Company" as the sole defendant, but the body of which alleged that three individuals had associated themselves and transacted business under such common name, and that such persons individually and as such association bought the goods for the purchase price of which the action was brought, praying a judgment against them as individuals, the association and such individuals were all parties defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parties, Cent. Dig. §§ 108, 110; Dec. Dig. 66.]

2. VENUE — 17—RESIDENCE OF DEFENDANT—WAIVER—STATUTES.

Const. art. 12, § 16, provides that a corporation or association may be sued in the county where the contract is made or is to be performed, or where the obligation of liability arises, or the breach occurs, or in the county where the principal place of business of such corporation is located. Code Civ. Proc. § 395, declares that actions, other than those excepted, must be tried in the county in which the defendants or some of them reside at the commencement of the action. Plaintiff, suing upon a contract of sale made in and to be performed in the county of San Francisco where the breach occurred, made an association and the individuals composing it parties defendant. Held, that plaintiff had waived his constitutional privilege to have his action against the association tried in the county where the breach occurred, and that the individual defendants were entitled to a change of venue to the county of their residence.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by A. N. Nelson against the East Side Grocery Company, etc., and A. A. Jacobs and others. From an order granting a change of venue, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. B. Mering and J. W. McCaughey, both of San Francisco, for appellant. Webster, Webster & Blewett, of Stockton, J. M. Thomas, of San Francisco, and Lafayette J. Smallpage, of Stockton, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Plaintiff brought this action in the city and county of San Francisco to recover upon a contract for the sale of merchandize. In the caption of his complaint the defendant is named as "East Side Grocery Company, also known as Central Grocery Company." The complaint in its body alleges that three certain persons—Jacobs, McMeniman, and Frenzi—associated themselves together for the purpose of carrying on the retail grocery business in the city of Stockton; that said business was at first transacted under the name of "East Side Grocery Company," which was later changed to "Central Grocery Company"; that the merchandize for the value of which this suit is brought was sold and delivered to said persons and said company, and was not paid for. In the prayer of his complaint the plaintiff prays for judgment against the alleged association and also against each of the persons named as composing it, for the full amount of the claim. Service of summons was made upon the individuals alleged to have thus associated themselves together under the common name. These appeared individually and moved for a change of place of trial to the county of San Joaquin, their residence. Thereupon the plaintiff presented an affidavit, showing that the contract sued upon was made and was to be performed in the city and county of San Francisco, and that there its breach occurred. This was not denied by the moving parties. The court ordered the place of trial of the action changed to the county of San Joaquin. The plaintiff appeals.

In support of his appeal the appellant cites article 12, § 16, of the Constitution, which provides that:

"A corporation or association may be sued in the county where the contract is made or is to be performed, or where the obligation or liability arises or the breach occurs; or in the county where the principal place of business of such corporation is situated."

Counsel for the appellant relies upon the case of Kendrick v. Diamond Creek Mining Co., 94 Cal. 137, 29 Pac. 324, for the interpretation to be placed upon the term "association" as used in this section of the Constitution, and has evidently drawn his pleading with the language of the decision in that case in view. It does not appear from anything the defendants present by way of affidavit that they are anything other than the sort of association which the plaintiff asserts them to be, but they insist that, having been sued as individuals as well as under their associate name, and a personal liability having been alleged and a personal judgment sought against each of them they are entitled under section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure to have the action tried in the place where they reside. To this contention the appellant opposes the case of Kendricks v. Diamond Creek Mining Co., supra, as holding that the association under the common name of which the respondents are found to have transacted business, out of which the appellant's chose in action arose, is such a one as is contemplated by the terms of article 12, § 16, of the Constitution, and that the plaintiff has therefore the right to have the action tried in the place where he alleges the obligation was to be performed and where its breach occurred.

[1] The first question to be determined is as to who the parties defendant in this action are. It is true that the plaintiff in the caption of his complaint has named as the sole defendant "East Side Grocery Company, also known as the Central Grocery Company"; but in the body of the complaint it is alleged that the three individuals, Jacobs, McMeniman, and Frenzi, not only associated themselves together and transacted business under the aforesaid common name or names, but it is also averred that these three persons individually and also as such association bought the goods for the purchase price of which this action is brought, and it further appears that a several judgment is prayed for against each of these individuals for the full amount of the plaintiff's claim.

[2] It should require no argument to sustain the view that, in determining who the parties to an action are, the whole body of the complaint is to be taken into account, and not the caption merely. This being so, it must be held that Jacobs, McMeniman, and Frenzi are as fully parties defendant in this action as though their names had appeared in the caption of the complaint, and hence that this is in form and substance an action not only against the association, but also against the three individuals who are alleged to compose it. In other words, the plaintiff herein has not been satisfied to sue the associates under their common name, and to seek by his judgment to bind their joint property held under such common name, but he is also seeking to make the individual members of the association parties to the action and to obtain a personal judgment enforceable against the individual property of each of them. Having done this, the plaintiff must be held to have waived the privilege accorded him by the terms of article 12, § 16, of the Constitution under the authority of the case of the Griffin & Skelly Co. v. Magnolia, etc., Co., 107 Cal. 378, 40 Pac. 495. That was an action against a corporation and also against a stockholder thereof, wherein the plaintiff sought to recover judgment against the corporation upon an alleged liability, and also sought to recover a personal judgment against the stockholder for his proportionate share of such liability. The stockholder moved for a change of venue to the place of his residence. The Supreme Court, in holding him entitled to have his motion granted, and in construing the foregoing provision of the Constitution, says:

"The provision of the Constitution is in entire harmony with the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, and raises no conflict therewith. The plaintiff may at all times avail himself of the privilege given by the section if the only defendant in the action is the corporation; but, if he chooses to join as defendants in the action others whose residence is in a different county, he waives the benefit of the provision."

This ruling has direct application to the facts of the case at bar; the plaintiff having seen fit in substance to make the persons composing the alleged association parties defendant, and having averred a personal liability and demanded a personal judgment against each of them individually, he must be held to have waived his constitutional privilege to have his action against the association tried in the county where the obligation arose and where its breach occurred.

It follows that the motion for a change of venue herein was properly granted. The order is affirmed.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Two actions by R. M. Baker against the Eilers Music Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 24 Cal. App. 804, 141 Pac. 396.

Lucius M. Fall, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Frank Bryant, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This is an appeal from a judgment entered against the plaintiff and is presented on the judgment roll. Two actions were brought, each being to recover a sum of money alleged to be due under the terms of a certain lease affecting real property in the city of Los Angeles. It was stipulated at the trial that both actions should be tried together and but one judgment rendered. The appeal is presented in the same way, although the actions are separately entitled.

By the findings of fact it appears that appellant, as lessor, on the 8th of October, 1910, entered into a lease contract with respondent, whereby he let to it certain premises situated on South Broadway street in Los Angeles city for a term of two years and six months for a gross rental of $12,000, which was made payable in sums of $400 on the 9th day of each and every month; that possession was given of the leased premises to respondent; and that it continued to occupy the same and to pay the rental specified up to the 9th day of January, 1912. It is further found that, after respondent had taken possession of the premises, it permitted the lessor to use a space along the north wall of the building, where there were located windows used for the purpose of admitting light and air. Just when this permission was given does not appear. It was further found that no written agreement was made permitting such use of said space, and that on the 5th of July, 1911, the lessee, by notice in writing, demanded that the lessor redeliver the portion of the premises then being used by him, which demand was refused. On the 21st of July, 1911, a written notice was served upon the lessor by which the lessee gave notice that it rescinded the lease contract. Six months later the lessee vacated the entire premises, as appears by finding IX of the trial judge, which is as follows:

"That defendant vacated the portion of said premises theretofore occupied by it, and redeliv-ered the same to plaintiff on the 8th day of January, 1912, and that on the 30th day of January, 1912, the plaintiff took possession of the said premises and offered them for rent to others."

As a conclusion of law the court found that there had been an eviction suffered by the lessee, and that there could be no recovery of any rental. It should be mentioned that the money claimed in suit was for rental of the premises for the months of March and April, 1912, all of which would have accrued, if at all, subsequent to the time that it is found by the court the lessor took possession of the premises and offered them for rent to others. The court found also the fact to be that a part of the consideration for the making of the lease was an agreement on the part of the lessor, which was consummated, to loan to the lessee the sum of $30,000, which was secured by collateral.

It is argued on the part of appellant that the defense of respondent was based upon an alleged rescission of the lease contract, which rescission was invalid and of no effect for two reasons: First, because it was not shown that the lessee restored to the lessor, or offered to restore to him, the amount of money loaned, which was made a part of the consideration for the lease; second, that by remaining in possession of the premises and continuing to pay rent according to the stipulated terms of the lease for six months after serving its notice of rescission, the lessee waived its right to effect a rescission and by its act revived the contract in its full force. Both of these contentions would seem to be well founded, if the facts as found by the court were such as to exclude consideration of any defense except that of rescission. We need not determine as to whether the court was right in its conclusion that there had been an eviction by the lessor of his tenant. It is alleged by the respondent in its answer, and found to be true by the trial court, that the premises were redelivered to the lessor on the 8th day of January, and that thereafter during the same month the lessor took possession of the same and offered them for rent to others.

[1] A lease may be brought to an end by the surrender of the leased premises and the acquiescence in such surrender by the lessor. Such acquiescence is perhaps best evidenced by his taking possession of the property and assuming again all of the authority over it of an owner in possession. It is immaterial whether it be said in this case that the lessor acquiesced in the rescission attempted to be made by the lessee, or that the parties voluntarily brought their contract relationship to a close by the one delivering up the property to the other and the latter accepting it and proceeding to find another tenant. The same result follows. The contract would come to an end, and the relationship of landlord and tenant would cease. The action was brought to recover rent under the lease contract, and not for damages.

[2, 3] A lessor, who takes possession of property delivered to him by his tenant, and does so unqualifiedly, thereby releases his tenants. He may accept possession of the property for the benefit of the tenant and relet the same; in the latter case he has no action, except one for damages for the difference between what he was able in good faith to let the property for and the amount provided to be paid under the lease agreement. Bradbury v. Higginson, 162 Cal. 602, 123 Pac. 797; Oliver v. Loydon, 163 Cal. 124, 124 Pac. 731.

[4] Findings of fact must be resolved in such a way as will result in the judgment being sustained if they are susceptible of a construction to that end. For the reasons stated, we think the judgment is supported by the findings and should be sustained.

The judgment is affirmed.

The same order will be made in the other case, No. 1521.

CONTRACTS ⇨ 333—ACTIONS FOR BREACH—COMPLAINT—"STREET WORK."

In an action for breach of a provision in a contract for the sale of lots, whereby the seller agreed to do the street work on an abutting street, a complaint was demurrable where it neither alleged that the parties at the time of the execution of the contract had by some sort of an agreement arrived at an understanding as to the amount, kind, and detail of the street work to be done, nor that the expression "street work" had any defined meaning in common usage, or in the charter, ordinances, or other regulations of the city, relating to the improvement of streets, as the allegation that such term contemplated curbing, paving, grading, and guttering presented no issuable fact.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by John A. Nelson against F. & A. Levy & Co. From an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, and from the judgment thereon, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. W. Gillogley and Sylvain J. Lazarus, both of San Francisco, for appellant. Herbert Choyanski and James Raleigh Kelly, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from an order of the court sustaining the defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's third amended complaint, and from a judgment based thereon, the plaintiff having declined to further amend.

The action is for damages for the alleged breach of one of the provisions of a contract for the sale from the defendant to the plaintiff of certain lots in a larger tract of land bounded by Day, Diamond, Thirtieth, and Castro streets in the city and county of San Francisco. The contract of sale contained the following provision: "The party of the first part agrees to do street work on Day street on or before November 1, 1909." It is this clause in the contract which the plaintiff avers that the defendant has failed to perform, and out of its alleged failure this cause of action arises.

We think the demurrer to the plaintiff's third amended complaint was properly sustained. The clause in the contract counted upon is too hopelessly uncertain to base an actionable breach upon. It could only have been made definite by averments showing that the parties to the contract at the time of its execution had by some sort of an agreement arrived at an understanding as to just what amount and kind and detail of street work was to be done by the seller upon the street in question. There is no averment of any such agreement or understanding in this complaint. The statement therein that the term street work "contemplates curbing, paving, grading, and guttering" presents no issuable fact; nor is it made to appear either in the plaintiff's pleading or argument that the expression "street work" has any defined meaning either in common usage or in the charter, ordinances, or other regulations of the city of San Francisco relating to the improvement of streets. This being so, we think that the third amended complaint of the plaintiff was fatally defective, and that the demurrer was properly sustained.

Judgment affirmed.

SIMEN v. SAM AFTERGUT CO. (Civ. 1429.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 18, 1915. Rehearing Denied Feb. 17, 1915; Denied by Supreme Court March 18, 1915.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⇨ 157 — AGREEMENT AS TO TENANT'S IMPROVEMENTS—CONSTRUCTION.

A lease required that the lessee, in lieu of payment of the rent reserved for the first year of a term, improve the premises "by moving and erecting thereon such improvements as it shall see fit, to revert to the lessor as hereinafter provided," and that, if the lessee elected to vacate at any time during the term, he might on payment of $100 bonus terminate the lease and relieve itself from obligations thereunder, and that, as a condition precedent to such election, the lessee should have moved to or erected upon premises improvements valued at $360, to revert to the lessor. Civ. Code, § 1636, requires contracts to be construed in their entirety so as to give effect to the manifest intention of the parties; section 1642 requires that the several clauses and covenants must, if not absolutely repugnant, be considered conjunctively; section 1643 requires interpretation to make an instrument definite and reasonable; section 1649 requires a construction in the sense in which the promisor believed that the promisee understood it; section 1654 requires a construction against the party causing the uncertainty who is presumed to be the promisor; and Code Civ. Proc. § 1864, requires a construction most favorable to the party in whose favor a covenant is made. Held, that the covenant required the lessee to move to, or erect on, the leased premises improvements of a certain value, but of such a kind or character as he saw fit.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT ☞160 — ACTION FOR WASTE—PETITION.

A petition alleging that during the lessee's occupation he injured the premises by destroying certain improvements thereon was sufficient; it not being necessary to affirmatively allege that their destruction was not caused by wrongful use and wear or the elements within the terms of the lease.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 612-626; Dec. Dig. ☞160.]

3. EVIDENCE ☞461 — PAROL EVIDENCE — TERMS OF LEASE.

In a lessor's action for damages for breach of covenant to erect improvements in lieu of first year's rent, where the terms as to the value of the improvements were unambiguous, parol evidence to show understanding of the parties as to the value of the improvements was inadmissible to vary the terms of the lease.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2129-2133; Dec. Dig. ☞461.]

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT ☞160 — ACTION FOR BREACH OF COVENANTS—ISSUE AND EVIDENCE.

In such action, where the question whether damage to the improvements resulted from use or from the elements was not put in issue by pleadings or defended upon that theory, the trial court was not required to find what part of the damage resulted from reasonable use and damage by the elements.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 612-626; Dec. Dig. ☞160.]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ☞1011—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A finding upon conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983-3989; Dec. Dig. ☞1011.]

6. LANDLORD AND TENANT ☞160—ACTION FOR BREACH OF COVENANT—DEMAND.

Where the terms of a lease evidenced an intent that improvements should be erected on the premises in lieu of the first year's rental some time before the expiration of the three-year term, the lessor, suing for breach, was not required to plead and prove a demand upon the lessee to perform.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by Frederick Simen against the Sam Aftergut Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hankins & Hankins, for appellant. P. B. Nagle and James L. Nagle, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff's complaint separately stated two causes of action against the defendants; one for damages for the alleged breach of a covenant to erect improvements in lieu of the first year's rent reserved in a contract of lease; and the other for damages for the alleged destruction by the defendant of certain improvements which were part and parcel of the leased premises. Judgment was entered for the plaintiff upon the first cause of action in the sum of $110, and upon the second cause of action in the sum of $250.

The lease in question, which was pleaded in hæc verba, contained the usual covenants of a contract for the letting of real property, and, in addition, provided and required that the lessee, the defendant herein, should, in lieu of the payment of the rent reserved for the first year of a three-year term, improve the leased premises "by moving and erecting thereon such improvements as it shall see fit, to revert to the lessor as hereinafter provided." This covenant of the lease evidently referred to, and was related to, a following clause of the lease, which provided that:

"* * * If at any time during the term herein created said lessee shall elect to vacate said premises, it may, upon payment to the lessor of one hundred ($100) dollars in United States gold coin as a bonus, at its option, quit and surrender the same, and this lease shall thereupon terminate, and the parties hereto shall be relieved from all further obligations hereunder, provided, however, and as a condition precedent to the exercise of such option, that said lessee shall have removed to or erected upon said premises improvements of the reasonable value of three hundred and sixty ($360) dollars, to revert to said lessor."

The plaintiff's complaint in the first cause of action alleged that:

The defendant "has failed and refused and still refuses to make any improvements on said premises or to move to or erect thereon any improvement or improvements whatsoever as agreed in said lease, or to improve the premises in any manner whatsoever."

The defendant's demurrer, which was general in so far as it concerned the sufficiency of the facts stated to constitute a cause of action, was overruled.

[1] The demurrer upon this ground was directed apparently to the point that the plaintiff did not have a cause of action for damages because of the defendant's failure to make any improvements upon the leased premises, for the reason, as is contended, that the covenant of the lease covering the placing and erection of such improvements did not require the defendant to provide them unless he saw fit to do so. Standing alone and literally construed, the covenant in controversy would perhaps mean no more than is contended for by the defendant; but a lease, like every other contract, must be considered and construed in its entirety so as to give effect, if possible, to the mutual and manifest intention of the parties (Civ. Code, § 1636); and in so doing its several clauses and covenants must, if not absolutely repugnant, be considered conjunctively (Civ. Code, § 1642).

Considered in conformity to these general principles, it is apparent that the lease in the present case contemplated that the lessor was to receive remuneration of some kind for the first year's use of the demised premises. While the covenant concerning the placing and erection of improvements upon the leased premises, standing alone, is undoubtedly ambiguous, that construction must be given to it which will be most favorable to the party in whose favor it was made. Code Civ. Proc. § 1864. Manifestly it was the purpose of the covenant in controversy to contract for and cover "the payment of the rent for the first year," and, this being so, it was undoubtedly made and intended to favor the lessor, and not the lessee; and of the two different constructions of which it is susceptible the one "most favorable to the party in whose favor the provision is made" (Code Civ. Proc. § 1864) would be that which would result in "such an interpretation that will make it lawful, definite and reasonable" (Civ. Code, § 1643). The construction contended for by the appellant, that it as lessee was not required to move or erect on the premises any improvements at all, unless it saw fit to do so, is obviously in conflict with the very apparent intention of the parties, as indicated by a consideration of the lease in its entirety; and such a construction plainly would be antagonistic to the interest of the lessor, who was the party primarily to be benefited by the covenant in controversy. On the other hand, the construction adopted by the trial court that this covenant, considered in conjunction with the terms of the lease as a whole, contemplated that the lessee would be required to move or erect on the leased premises improvements of a certain value, but of such kind or character as it saw fit, was in apparent harmony with the evident mutual intention of the parties, and gives to the plaintiff, the lessor, the benefit of some compensation for the first year's use and occupation of the leased premises. The trial court's conclusion in this behalf is fortified by a consideration and application of those Code provisions which, in effect, declare that, if the terms of a promise are in any respect ambiguous or uncertain, they must be interpreted in keeping with the sense in which the promisor believed that the promisee understood them, and that in the presence of uncertainty the language of a contract must be interpreted most strongly against the party who caused the uncertainty to exist, who in such case is presumed to be the promisor. Civ. Code, §§ 1649, 1654. Thus construed, the covenant in controversy placed a positive obligation upon the defendant as lessee, the breach of which would constitute a cause of action.

[2] The gist of the plaintiff's second cause of action is to be found in the allegation of the complaint which, in effect, avers that during the defendant's occupation of the leased premises he greatly injured the premises by destroying certain improvements situated upon the demised premises at the time of the execution of the lease. It is the contention of the defendant that this allegation did not state a cause of action for damages for waste, because it was not affirmatively alleged that the destruction of the improvements existing upon the demised premises "was not caused by reasonable use and wear and damage by the elements," which were covered by the terms of the lease. There is no merit in this contention. The evident purpose of the plaintiff was to aver the commission of a willful and an unlawful waste; and he was not required to negatively allege and prove the fact that the waste complained of was not the result of ordinary wear and tear for which there would be no liability under the terms of the lease. If such were the fact, it would have been purely a matter of defense.

[3] There was no error in the ruling of the trial court refusing to permit F. J. Hankins, a witness for the defendant, to testify as to the conversation had between the parties to the lease at the time of its execution. The stated purpose of the proffered testimony was to show the understanding of the parties as to what was to be the value of the improvements to be placed upon the leased premises in lieu of the first year's rental; and such testimony was proffered upon the theory that the covenants as to the improvements were uncertain and ambiguous as to what the value of the improvements should be, and that therefore oral evidence as to the intent and understanding of the parties in that particular was admissible.

Read and construed in its entirety, there was no ambiguity in the terms of the lease as to the intent of the parties upon the subject of what the value of the improvements should be; and therefore the proffered testimony was inadmissible, and rightly rejected upon the ground that it was an attempt to vary the terms of a written instrument by parol evidence.

[4] The question as to whether or not the alleged damage to the improvements was due to depreciation as a result of use and the elements was not put in issue by the pleadings, and the action was not defended upon any such theory. Therefore the trial court was not required to find what portion, if any, of the damage to the improvements was the result of "the reasonable use and wear and damage by the elements."

[5] An examination of the record convinces us that the finding fixing the damage to the plaintiff for the destruction of the improvements rests upon conflicting evidence, and will not therefore be disturbed by this court.

[6] While it is not clear from the terms of the lease that the parties thereto contemplated that the improvements in question should be erected upon the leased premises during the first year of the life of the lease, nevertheless it is reasonably certain from the terms of the lease as a whole that it was the intent of the parties that such improvements should be erected upon the leased premises in lieu of the first year's rental some time before the expiration of the life of the lease. This being so, and the covenant in controversy not having been complied with during the life of the lease, the plaintiff was not required to plead and prove a demand upon the defendant to comply with the terms of the covenant. "When the time has come for the doing of an act which it is the duty of the defendant to do unconditionally, no demand other than the suit itself is necessary." Cox v. Delmas, 99 Cal. 104, 33 Pac. 836.

WILSON v. SADLEIR. (Civ. 1430.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT — 118, 291 — UNLAWFUL DETAINER.

Where, pursuant to the terms of the lease, plaintiff served defendant with notice that he would re-enter for failure to pay rent within 10 days, and where plaintiff at the end of such 10 days did not enter, but gave the 3 days' statutory notice to quit under Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, providing for actions of unlawful detainer, plaintiff's 10 days' notice did not so terminate the tenancy that he could not maintain an action of unlawful detainer under the statutory notice; the previous notice working no such termination of the tenancy under lease as to give rise to a tenancy at will, which can be terminated only by 30 days' notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 402-415, 1217-1241, 1243-1269; Dec. Dig. —118, 291.]

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT — 291 — UNLAWFUL DETAINER—COMPLAINT—STATUTE.

In an action of unlawful detainer, where the complaint in one paragraph stated the amount of rent due, and in another paragraph alleged demand for payment thereof, it sufficiently alleged demand of payment of the amount due, within Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, subd. 2, providing that a tenant for a term less than life is guilty of unlawful detainer by continuing in possession without permission after default under his lease, and that he shall be subject to an action of unlawful detainer, upon three days' notice to quit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1217-1241, 1243-1269; Dec. Dig. —291.]

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT — 291 — UNLAWFUL DETAINER—COMPLAINT—STATUTE.

In an action of unlawful detainer, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, specifying that a tenant of real property for a term less than life is guilty of unlawful detainer by continuing in possession without permission after default in payment of rent on three days' notice to quit, where the complaint did not allege that the amount of rent due was stated in such notice, attachment of copy of the notice containing the statement of such amount to the complaint on filing obviated the defect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1217-1241, 1243-1269; Dec. Dig. —291.]

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT — 290 — UNLAWFUL DETAINER—GROUNDS OF ACTION.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, providing that an action of unlawful detainer will lie for violation of any of the covenants or conditions of a lease, breach of a condition that the tenant should pay the amount reserved for the occupation and use, both of the real and personal property described in the lease of a furnished hotel, was sufficient to support an action of unlawful detainer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1207-1215; Dec. Dig. —290.]

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT — 290 — UNLAWFUL DETAINER—PROPERTY RECOVERABLE.

The action of unlawful detainer was properly brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, providing that it may be maintained after termination, by notice, of tenancy of real property for a term less than life, although the lease was of a furnished hotel covering personal property as well as real; such personal property being a mere incident to the enjoyment of the leasehold interest in the realty.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George L. Jones, Judge. Action by Alexander W. Wilson against Charles J. Sadleir. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. Hoff Cook, of San Francisco, for appellant. J. C. Campbell, Walter Shelton, and Alexander A. Wilson, all of San Francisco (Weaver, Shelton & Levy, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Appeal from the judgment in favor of plaintiff and from an order denying defendant's motion for new trial in an action of unlawful detainer.

[1] The complaint shows that, upon the defendant's failure to pay rent for two months, he was served with a notice, pursuant to the terms of the lease, which declared that the lessor elected to consider the lease null and void, and notified the defendant that at the expiration of 10 days the plaintiff would re-enter the premises. The moment having arrived when the plaintiff, under this notice and the provisions of the lease, was entitled to re-enter, and the defendant being still in possession, the plaintiff gave him the statutory notice to quit.

We are unable to agree with the appellant that the demurrer to the complaint, on the ground that it failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, should have been sustained. Appellant's theory in this behalf is that the first notice, to wit, the 10 days' notice, terminated the tenancy, and therefore no action under the 3 days' notice can be maintained. The lease seems to contemplate that upon the breach of any of its covenants and after the 10 days' notice the plaintiff may eject the defendant, and take immediate possession, or waive this right, and commence a proceeding in unlawful detainer without giving the usual notice of three days. However, plaintiff abandoned any notion that he may have entertained of proceeding in the manner specified in the lease, and did give the statutory notice to quit. Under these circumstances, we do not see how it can be said with reason that there was a termination of the tenancy such as would make the defendant a tenant at will, and entitled to 30 days' notice as required in such cases. Civ. Code, § 789; Perine v. Teague, 66 Cal. 446, 6 Pac. 84; McKissick v. Ashby, 98 Cal. 422, 33 Pac. 729; Kuhn v. Smith, 125 Cal. 617, 58 Pac. 204, 73 Am. St. Rep. 79. Finally, however, notwithstanding the service of the notice, the defendant did not surrender possession of the demised premises, and the relation of landlord and tenant still continued (Kower v. Gluck, 33 Cal. 401, 406; Odell v. Buttrick, 126 Cal. 551, 552, 59 Pac. 133); and the action of unlawful detainer will lie.

[2, 3] Defendant asserts that the 3 days' notice is insufficient as a notice under subdivision 2 of section 1161 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as no amount of rent is alleged to have been specified in such notice. This point is devoid of merit. The complaint in one paragraph states the amount of rent due, and in another paragraph alleges that a demand was made for payment thereof, which, of course, is equivalent to stating that a demand was made for the amount stated to be due. Moreover, even if the complaint proper were defective in the regard suggested, still the point would be unavailing for the reason that a copy of the notice was attached to and made a part of the complaint, and it supplies the claimed defect. Georges v. Kessler, 131 Cal. 183, 184, 63 Pac. 466.

[4, 5] The lease being of a furnished hotel and covering real and personal property, defendant contends that the action of unlawful detainer will not lie. It may be that the terms of section 1161, Code of Civil Procedure, are broad enough to cover this point. It will lie apparently if there is a violation of any of the covenants or conditions of the lease, and one of the conditions of this lease is that the tenant shall pay the amount reserved for the occupation and use of both the real and personal property described therein. Subdivisions 2 and 3, § 1161, Code Civ. Proc.; Knight v. Black, 19 Cal. App. 518, 126 Pac. 512; Agen v. Nelson, 51 Wash. 431, 98

Pac. 1115; Olson v. Alki Park Co., 63 Wash. 521, 115 Pac. 1083, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 365.

This action is based either on a breach of a condition to pay rent, or on the breach of some other condition of the lease; and comes therefore under either subdivision 2 or 3 of said section 1161.

But even if this were not true, the payments reserved in the lease would constitute a reservation of rent arising out of realty in the technical sense of the word; and the failure to make such payments would be regarded as a default in the payment of rent within the meaning of said subdivision 2, and the personal property and the board furnished as part of the consideration for the payments reserved in the lease are merely incidents to the enjoyment of the leasehold interest in the realty. There are no California cases on this point, but the principle is well established in other jurisdictions, where the summary remedies lie only for the nonpayment of rent as distinguished from the breach of other covenants or conditions. Toler v. Seabrook, 39 Ga. 14. In this last-mentioned case the court says:

It is held that where "there is a contract for rent of real estate, it is none the less a renting, that it is agreed that the tenant may have a lease of the mules, tools, gin and other personal property actually on the place, * * * and a distress warrant will be for the whole sum agreed upon. It is said: 'The main thing is the rent, and the use of the other things are mere incidents. It is still rent, and a distress warrant will lie.'"

In the case of Armstrong v. Cummings et al., 58 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 331, 334, where the court passed upon a similar state of facts, it is said:

"Generally speaking, the rent issues of the whole premises demised, but if a house and furniture be comprised in a lease, the rent will issue out of the lands or house only; and the lessor may declare, as on a demise of the land or house, without noticing the goods, * * * 'Rent cannot be reserved out of chattels personal. If such chattels are demised with the land, at an entire rent, the rent issues out of the land only.' * * * If this were not so, the statute would have no application to furnished tenements, hotels, manufactories, or sawmills, because they contained furniture or steam power. It would have no application to any house wherein the landlord owned the gas fixtures, portable heaters or wash tubs, and let them with the premises. Indeed, the statute would have such a limited application that its usefulness would be destroyed and further legislation required."

See, also, Stein v. Stely (Tex. Civ. App.) 32 S. W. 782; Peddicord et al. v. Berk, 74 Kan. 236, 86 Pac. 465; Dimmett v. Appleton, 20 Neb. 208, 29 N. W. 474; Weatherford v. Union Pac. R. R. Co., 5 Neb. (Unof.) 464, 98 N. W. 1089.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

2. CRIMINAL LAW — §627½ — TRIAL — PROCEEDING PRELIMINARY TO TRIAL — CONSULTATION WITH WITNESS.

One charged with the crime is not entitled to have the sheriff conduct him to other parts of the state so that he might interview witnesses whose names he did not know by whom he expected to prove an alibi, his remedy being to procure subpoenas for them accompanied by such description as will enable their attendance to be procured.

3. CRIMINAL LAW — §1170½ — APPEAL — HARMLESS ERROR — CROSS-EXAMINATION OF DEFENDANT.

Error, if any, in permitting the district attorney to cross-examine defendant as to a previous statement made by him and taken by a stenographer, by reading the questions and answers therefrom to the defendant, and asking him about them without first showing him the paper, is harmless, where the witness' attention was properly directed to all the circumstances under which the statement was taken, and there was no showing that the district attorney did not correctly read the questions and answers or that defendant's counsel did not have a full opportunity to examine the paper and cross examine in reference to it.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; J. A. Plummer, Judge.

Harry Talman was convicted of grand larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

John R. Cronin, of Stockton, and C. W. Gillespie, of San Francisco, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURNETT, J. [1] Appellant was convicted of grand larceny for having stolen a sorrel mare belonging to Charles and Alice Dreyer. There is no merit in the claim of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict. The possession of the stolen property, a few days after the theft, by defendant and one Allen Dodge, who were jointly charged with the crime, the flight of the accused, they having been arrested 150 miles from the scene of the offense, their presence in the immediate neighborhood at or near the time the animal was stolen, their abandonment, near the place from which said sorrel mare had been taken, of an emaciated and exhausted horse which they had been driving, furnish abundant inculpatory circumstances to warrant the conclusion of the jury. It may be added that the conviction of the guilt of defendant is greatly strengthened by the contradictory and unreasonable explanation made by himself and his associate in the crime of their possession of the mare and of their peregrination through the country. Indeed, one can hardly read the entire record without an abiding conviction of the guilt of defendant, and any other verdict would have resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

Some contention is made that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct in his address to the jury. The objection is hardly specific enough to merit attention, but we have examined the record of his remarks and find nothing outside of the legitimate range of argument or to which exception could justly be taken.

[2] Appellant complains that the sheriff refused to conduct him to certain parts of the state that he might interview parties whose names he did not know, but by whom he expected to prove an alibi. The law confers upon a defendant no right to make such demand. It is, perhaps, needless to add that such practice, if permitted, would be likely to lead to great abuse without any compensating benefit. It would encourage simulated defenses, entail grievous trouble and expense, and afford additional opportunities for a defendant to escape from the custody of the officer. The law is ample, in this matter, to protect the interests of one charged with a crime. Defendant could have obtained a subpoena for his witnesses, and he should have been able so to identify them that their attendance could have been secured.

[3] The only question about which there can be any serious controversy grows out of the district attorney's effort to lay the foundation for the impeachment of appellant and his codefendant. It seems that after their arrest they were questioned in the county jail by the district attorney in the presence of the sheriff and a stenographer, and by the last-named the whole proceeding was taken down in shorthand and afterward transcribed. On cross-examination, at the trial, the district attorney, reading from this transcript, interrogated the witness as to certain questions and answers therein appearing. Objection was made upon the ground that the writing should be shown to the witness before he could be required to answer. This position was taken by reason of section 2052, Code of Civil Procedure, providing:

"A witness may also be impeached by evidence that he has made, at other times, statements inconsistent with his present testimony; but before this can be done the statements must be related to him, with the circumstances of times, places, and persons present, and he must be asked whether he made such statements, and, if so, allowed to explain them. If the statements be in writing, they must be shown to the witness before any question is put to him concerning them."

But the Attorney General contends in effect that the last clause of this section confines it to "written statements" of the witness. "If the statements (of the witness) be in writing," in other words, means, "If the statements have been made in writing." In such case it is highly proper that they should be shown the witness. But there would seem to be no reason for requiring the writing to be exhibited to the witness where he has never had anything to do with the execution of it or even has not seen it before. The inspection by the witness of a typewritten transcript, made by a stranger to him, and which he had never seen before, could not assist the witness in his recollection of oral statements which he may have made. At least, it would afford him no greater aid than to have them fully read to him. And there is no contention that the attention of the witness was not directed to all the circumstances and declarations that had any bearing whatever upon the alleged inconsistent statements. But it is not necessary to decide this question, as there is nothing to indicate that the district attorney did not correctly read said transcript, or that he refused defendant's counsel an opportunity to inspect it, or that the right of cross-examination in reference to it was at all abridged, or that, indeed, the ruling of the court, if technically erroneous, resulted in any prejudice to appellant.

We think he was justly convicted, and the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

Ex parte CLIFTON. (Cr. 370.)

HABEAS CORPUS ⇨92—SCOPE OF REMEDY.

An indictment charged petitioner with perjury by giving false answers when testifying before the grand jury which was investigating the question of prostitution, which being misdemeanor only was not a subject the grand jury was authorized to consider. Held that, as that offense was closely allied with pandering, which was a felony, and of which the grand jury had jurisdiction to investigate, the question whether the indictment stated a public offense would not be determined on habeas corpus.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. §§ 81, 83, 87-96; Dec. Dig. ⇨92.]

In the matter of the application of Babe Clifton for writ of habeas corpus. Writ dismissed, and petitioner remanded.

Thomas Scott and J. R. Dorsey, both of Bakersfield, for petitioner. Rowen Irwin, Dist. Atty., of Bakersfield, by J. H. Farraher, of Yreka, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The ground of the application is that the indictment charging petitioner with the crime of perjury fails to state a public offense. This by reason of the fact that it is alleged in the indictment that the perjury was committed by petitioner in giving under oath false answers to questions propounded to her by the grand jury, the subject under investigation by said body at the time being "prostitution in the city of Bakersfield"; that, prostitution being a misdemeanor only, it was not a subject concerning which the grand jury was empowered to investigate. Hence, conceding the answers of the witness to have been false, the crime of perjury could not be predicated thereon.

The crime of pandering, an offense which the grand jury might properly investigate, is so closely allied to prostitution that it would be impossible to investigate that subject without considering the question of prostitution; and if the indictment was susceptible of amendment, as no doubt it was, by striking out the subject, "prostitution in the city of Bakersfield," or substituting therefor the offense of pandering, it could not be said the answers given by the witness were immaterial. In our opinion, the case falls directly within the rule laid down by the Supreme Court in Matter of Ruef, 150 Cal. 665, 657, 89 Pac. 605; the claim there made being, as here, that the indictment failed to state a public offense, and wherein the court said:

"We think the true rule is that where an indictment purports or attempts to state an offense of a kind of which the court assuming to proceed has jurisdiction the question whether the facts charged are sufficient to constitute an offense of that kind will not be examined into on habeas corpus. Here the indictments clearly attempt to charge extortion, a crime defined by section 518 et seq. of the Penal Code, and within the jurisdiction of the superior court."

The indictment under consideration clearly attempts to charge an offense of which the court has jurisdiction, and conceding it to be insufficient for the reasons urged, the attack thereon should be made by demurrer, for which the writ of habeas corpus should not be substituted.

The writ is dismissed, and petitioner remanded to the custody of the sheriff.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; Robert M. Clarke, Judge.

Action by M. A. Newmark & Co. against George C. Smith. Judgment for the defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

H. P. Starbuck and Canfield & Starbuck, all of Santa Barbara, for appellant. B. F. Thomas, of Santa Barbara, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an action to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of defendant's partial default in delivering a quantity of beans in accordance with his contract so to do. The verdict of a jury called to try the case was in favor of defendant. Judgment followed in accordance therewith, from which, and an order denying its motion for a new trial, plaintiff appealed.

[1] On July 10, 1911, plaintiff bought from defendant 1,000 bags of "choice, recleaned, small white beans of the crop of 1911," to be delivered in October, f. o. b. cars at Santa Maria, Cal., for which it agreed to pay $3.21¼ per hundredweight, and on the 18th of the same month bought a further like quantity of the same kind of beans for like delivery at the price of $3.25 per hundred. These contracts were evidenced by bought and sold notes, whereby the one agreed to buy and the other agreed to sell. In October defendant shipped to plaintiff at Los Angeles two lots of beans, one consisting of 788 sacks delivered, as stated, on account of the first contract, and the other lot consisting of 673 sacks, which shipment was by defendant assigned as delivered under the second contract. Payment for both of these shipments was made by plaintiff by check forwarded to defendant, which the latter accepted in full payment therefor. In delivering the third lot of beans, consisting of 362 sacks, which he shipped about November 20th, defendant changed the mode and plan of delivery by shipping the same to Los Angeles, consigned to himself, and attaching the bill of lading to a draft drawn upon plaintiff for the price thereof, thus making it impossible for plaintiff to examine the shipment or inspect the beans without first paying the draft. Upon presentation of the draft plaintiff, without paying same, wrote defendant on November 21st, asking him to direct the bank to permit an inspection of the beans, in reply to which defendant on the next day wrote plaintiff that "there is nothing in the contract that allows inspection, and delivery of beans in Los Angeles," and declared the contract annulled.

It thus appears that defendant, while retaining title and possession of the goods, and while denying plaintiff's request for an opportunity to inspect the same for the purpose of ascertaining whether they conformed to the description as specified in the contract, tendered delivery thereof, coupled with the precedent condition that plaintiff pay the purchase price thereof. The sole question, therefore, involved is whether plaintiff, in the absence of a waiver thereof, as to which there is no evidence, was entitled to inspection as a condition precedent to the making of payment. If so, then defendant was not justified in his refusal to comply with the contract.

[2] Section 1784 of the Civil Code provides that "a buyer must pay the price of the thing sold on its delivery"; and, whether delivered at Los Angeles or Santa Maria, defendant was entitled to exact payment for the goods specified in the contract upon delivery thereof to plaintiff. The contract being silent as to the time of payment, the law contemplates that the act of delivery and that of payment shall be concurrent. But defendant was not entitled to payment until he delivered "the thing sold," which in this case was "choice, recleaned, small white beans of 1911 crop." The right of plaintiff to repudiate the purchase and refuse payment because the article delivered failed to conform to the description of the goods purchased must be conceded. Defendant could not, under the guise of delivering beans, have delivered bags of corn and held plaintiff to payment. In no way other than by inspection could plaintiff ascertain whether it was getting the thing purchased and for which it was paying. Hence it must follow, we think, that, as defendant was entitled to and did demand payment upon delivery, plaintiff was entitled to an opportunity to inspect the shipment of beans, and thus, before making payment, ascertain whether or not they were the goods which it agreed to buy and pay for. If they were not, it had the right to reject them and insist upon delivery of goods of the description specified in the contract. In our opinion, the law applicable to the case is as contained in subdivision 2 of section 34 of the English Sale of Goods Act, which is as follows:

"Unless otherwise agreed, when the seller tenders delivery of goods to the buyer he is bound on request to afford the buyer a reasonable opportunity of examining the goods for the purpose of ascertaining whether they are in conformity with the contract."

SCHUDEL v. HELBING. (Civ. 1453.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 25, 1915.)

1. JUDGMENT $\hookrightarrow$ 948—FORMER JUDGMENT AS BAR—WAIVER.

Defendant, intending to rely on the judgment as a bar to an action for malicious prosecution, should have so pleaded in his answer, and his failure to do so was a waiver of such defense under Code Civ. Proc. § 434.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1787-1793; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 948.]

2. JUDGMENT $\hookrightarrow$ 588—BAR—CAUSES OF ACTIONS.

A judgment for plaintiff in a suit to enjoin defendants from further prosecution of certain attachment suits to recover rental, brought on the ground that plaintiff would be greatly damaged by their further maintenance, was not a bar to plaintiff's subsequent action for the malicious prosecution of such suits, as the cause of action for malicious prosecution did not exist until the suit in equity had ended the prosecution of the attachments.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1062, 1090; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 588.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 1031—VERDICT—HARMLESS ERROR.

In an action for malicious prosecution based on five separate counts, wherein the court did not allow the plaintiff to offer any evidence in support of the fifth count and directed the jury to disregard it, it could not be presumed that the general verdict was based on that count, or that defendant could have been injured by the fact that there was no separate verdict or finding thereon.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Margaret Schudel against Anna Helbing. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Otto tum Suden, of San Francisco, for appellant. Aitken & Aitken, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an action brought to recover damages for the malicious prosecution of certain civil suits against the plaintiff maintained or instigated by the defendant herein. The facts out of which said suits arose were these: In the year 1906 the plaintiff herein rented from the defendant herein certain premises through Louis Helbing, the defendant's husband and agent, the agreement being that a written lease of the premises at a rental of $30 per month for a three-year term was to be drawn up and executed. After the plaintiff herein had gone into possession of said premises and had incurred considerable expense in fitting them up, the defendant herein undertook to repudiate the acts of her husband and agent, and raised the rent to $60 a month, and this not being paid she caused to be instituted four successive attachment suits against the plaintiff herein to recover said increased rental, and was engaged in prosecuting these to the great damage, annoyance, and injury of the plaintiff herein, whereupon the latter began a suit in equity to enjoin the further prosecution of said actions, and to compel a specific performance of the agreement for a lease of said premises. In her complaint in said equitable action the plaintiff averred that she was being and would be greatly damaged and injured by the further maintenance of said civil actions, but did not specifically allege or pray for or prove or receive judgment for any such damages in said equity suit. She did, however, recover a judgment in her favor, enjoining the defendant herein from further maintaining or prosecuting said civil actions, and for the specific performance of her contract for a lease. After the entry of this judgment in the equity suit plaintiff commenced the present action for malicious prosecution of said four civil suits by the defendant, and also for the malicious filing and prosecution of a cross-demand by the defendant in the equity case involving the gist of said civil suits. The defendant by her answer in this case specifically denied that the plaintiff had suffered any of her alleged damages by reason of the defendant's malicious prosecution of her former suits, or by reason of the presentation of her cross-demand in the equity case; but the defendant did not, in her answer herein, present, either in form or substance, a plea in bar; that is to say, she did not plead that the plaintiff in this action was barred from maintaining it by the fact of the former adjudication. Notwithstanding this, it is the main contention of the appellant here that the former suit in equity of the plaintiff and the judgment rendered therein were and are a bar to the present action.

[1] We cannot give our support to this contention for two reasons: The first is that if the defendant intended to rely on the judgment in the former action as a bar to the present one, she should have presented a plea to that effect in her answer herein; and her failure to do so must be held to constitute a waiver of that defense. Code Civ. Proc. § 434; Schermerhorn v. L. A. P. R. Co., 18 Cal. App. 454, 123 Pac. 351.

[2] The second and more substantial reason is that the institution and prosecution to judgment of the equity case by plaintiff did not, in our opinion, operate as a bar to the present action. The former action was a suit in equity to compel the specific performance of a contract for a lease, and to restrain the defendant therein from maintaining certain civil suits based upon the attempted repudiation of said contract. The averment in that case of the plaintiff's present and impending damage arising and likely to arise from the further prosecution of said suits was merely incidental to the main relief sought. The plaintiff in that action could not have joined the present action for the malicious prosecution of said former suits on the part of the defendant for obvious reasons, the chief of which is that a cause of action for the malicious prosecution of other suits cannot arise until the determination of said suits alleged to be maliciously maintained. This condition did not exist until the judgment in the suit in equity had put an end to the further maintenance of said former actions. It is plain, therefore, that the institution of that suit and the judgment obtained therein could not constitute a bar to the present action.

[3] The only other point made by the appellant is that the verdict is against law, because it is in the form of a general verdict in a case in which there are five separate counts. As to the first four counts it may be said that the objection should have been made when the verdict was rendered unless it can be shown that as to any one of these counts it would be an improper verdict. There is no such contention here. The appellant, however, claims that she was entitled to have the jury return a verdict in her favor upon the fifth count or cause of action. The record in that respect, however, shows that the court did not permit the plaintiff to introduce any evidence in support of that count in her complaint; nor was there any such evidence presented in the case; and the court expressly charged the jury that the fifth count was to be eliminated from further consideration, and that they were to disregard it in their verdict. Under these circumstances there can be no presumption that the verdict of the jury was based in any degree upon that count, or that the defendant could, in any way, have been injured by the fact that no separate finding or verdict of the jury was made upon it.

We discover no error in the record.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

SLAUGHTER v. GOLDBERG, BOWEN & CO. et al. (Civ. 1228.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 14, 1915. On Petition for Rehearing, Feb. 13, 1915. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court March 15, 1915.)

1. DEATH 11, 31—ACTIONS FOR WRONGFUL DEATH—RIGHT TO RECOVER.

The action for death is statutory, and the personal representatives of the deceased, being mere trustees for the heirs, cannot maintain it in the absence of heirs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 10, 15, 35, 37-46, 48; Dec. Dig. 11, 31.]

2. DEATH 49—ACTIONS—COMPLAINT.

A complaint in an action for wrongful death, brought by a personal representative, must allege the existence of heirs, in order to state a cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 64-66, 69; Dec. Dig. 49.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 1170—REVERSAL—TECHNICAL ERROR.

The complaint, in an action by a personal representative for wrongful death of her intestate, did not allege that there were any heirs. Defendant's general demurrer was overruled, and the proof showed that the deceased left heirs. Code Civ. Proc. § 475, requires the disregarding of errors, unless there has been a substantial injury which would probably change the result. Held, that the defect was cured by the proof.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR 231—OBJECTIONS AT TRIAL—GENERAL DEMURRE—EFFECT.

Where the complaint, in a suit for wrongful death, did not allege there were heirs, a general demurrer does not sufficiently apprise plaintiff of the defect, so as to relieve defendant of the necessity of objecting to evidence of heirship.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1299, 1352; Dec. Dig. 231; Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 1439.]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 706—STREETS—INJURIES.

In an action for the death of plaintiff's intestate, who, while riding on a bicycle, was run down by defendant's wagon and thrown under the wheels of another vehicle, an instruction that, when vehicles meet, the driver of each must turn seasonably to the right, and that the rule applies when a wagon meets a bicycle, merely declared the statutory law of the road, and could not have been understood by the jury as declaring that in no case would a driver be justified in turning other than to the right.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1518; Dec. Dig. 706.]

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 705—STREETS—INJURIES—ACTIONS—NEGLIGENCE.

As a general rule, for the driver of a vehicle to violate Pol. Code, § 2931, requiring drivers, when vehicles meet, to turn to the right, is negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1515-1517; Dec. Dig. 705.]

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 705—STREETS—INJURIES.

Where the driver of a vehicle on the wrong side of the street fails to see a cyclist approaching him in plain view, and runs into him, it is negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1515-1517; Dec. Dig. 705.]

8. TRIAL 243—USE OF STREETS—NEGLIGENCE—INSTRUCTIONS—CONFLICT.

In an action for the running down of plaintiff's intestate, instructions that in exceptional cases the driver is justified in violating the rules of the road are not in conflict with plaintiff's instructions announcing the customary rules of the road.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 564, 565; Dec. Dig. 243.]

9. TRIAL 296—INSTRUCTIONS—CONSTRUCTION TOGETHER.

No one instruction can declare all the law, and the fact that particular instructions omitted matters presented in others was not error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 705-713, 715, 716, 718; Dec. Dig. 296.]

10. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\hookrightarrow$ 705—INJURIES TO PERSONS ON STREETS — PRESUMPTIONS.

A traveler on a street is entitled to presume that a driver will obey the rules of the road.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1515-1517; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 705.]

11. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\hookrightarrow$ 706 — USE OF STREETS — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — ACTS IN EMERGENCIES.

That plaintiff's intestate, in an emergency, chose the more dangerous course in an endeavor to escape, will not preclude recovery for defendants' negligence, as a matter of law, even though intestate was not wholly without fault in getting into danger, but the question of proximate cause is for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1518; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 706.]

12. DEATH $\hookrightarrow$ 99—ACTIONS—DAMAGES.

Deceased, who was in good health and was 23 years old, having an expectancy of over 40 years, earned between $10 and $16 a week. He contributed his earnings to the support of his mother. Held, that an award of $10,000 in her favor could not, on the face of it, be held excessive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 125-130; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 99.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. H. Waste, Judge.

Action by Rhoda R. Slaughter, as administratrix of the estate of George V. Slaughter, deceased, against Goldberg, Bowen & Co. and another. From a judgment against the named defendant, it appeals. Affirmed.

Goodfellow, Eells & Orrick, of San Francisco, for appellant. Henry H. Hart and Aitken & Aitken, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. The action is for damages resulting from the death of plaintiff's intestate, alleged to have been caused by defendants' negligence.

The complaint alleges:

The appointment of the plaintiff as administratrix of the estate of the deceased; that on August 5, 1910, the date of the accident, the deceased was riding his bicycle along a public street in the city of Oakland; that, at the same time, the defendants' wagons were being driven along the same street; and that the driver of the Goldberg, Bowen & Co. wagon "so carelessly and negligently drove and managed said horses and wagon that, by reason of his carelessness and negligence, said horses and wagon struck said George V. Slaughter and his bicycle and overthrew the same, throwing the said George V. Slaughter directly in front of the above-mentioned wagon driven by said employé of the Ransome-Crummey Company, and said employé of said defendant Ransome-Crummey Company so carelessly drove and managed said wagon and draught animals driven by him that the wheels of said wagon so driven by him passed over the body of the said George V. Slaughter."

It is then alleged that, by reason of the matters just stated, the plaintiff, as administratrix, has sustained damages in the sum of $25,000; and the prayer is that judgment be awarded her for such amount.

Both defendants demurred generally, and defendant Goldberg, Bowen & Co. demurred specially on the sole ground that it cannot be determined from the complaint "in what defendant's alleged negligence consisted." The demurrers were overruled, and defendant Goldberg, Bowen & Co. answered, denying the averments of negligence, and alleging that plaintiff's intestate was guilty of contributory negligence.

Inasmuch as no verdict was rendered against defendant Ransome-Crummey Co., reference hereinafter will be to defendant Goldberg, Bowen & Co., unless otherwise noted.

The accident occurred at about 10 o'clock on the morning of August 5, 1910, in the city of Oakland. On that morning a heavily loaded wagon belonging to defendant Ransome-Crummey Co. was being driven slowly in a southern direction, towards Oakland, along the westerly or right-hand side of San Pablo avenue, and eight or ten feet from the curb, as testified by the driver of the wagon. A double-track street railroad runs along the middle of this avenue. The distance from this westerly car track to the curb is 24 feet 2 inches. The avenue is 64 feet wide, and is crossed by Isabella street, and Athens street, between which, on San Pablo avenue, the block is 230 feet long. The driver of the Ransome wagon testified that the accident occurred about 150 feet from Athens street. No other team and no cars were passing at the time, and no obstructions of any kind prevented a clear view for the entire block on San Pablo avenue.

Witness Annie Krohne testified:

That she was standing in front of her store on the west side of San Pablo avenue and about 40 feet north from the corner of Isabella street, and was looking north towards Athens street; that she saw the deceased riding on a bicycle about 60 or 70 feet from her and about 4 feet away from the curb and ahead of the Ransome wagon; that, at the same time, defendant's wagon passed her going north near the curb—she thought closer to the curb than the Ransome wagon and "on the same side of the street that the Ransome-Crummey wagon and the boy were. * * * When the Goldberg, Bowen Company wagon passed me going in the direction of the Ransome-Crummey wagon, it went pretty fast. The horses were galloping."

She testified:

"When the Goldberg, Bowen Company wagon reached the place where the boy was riding, I saw one of the Goldberg-Bowen horses touch his bicycle. That threw the boy off under the wheels of the Ransome-Crummey wagon. I saw one of the wheels of the Ransome-Crummey wagon pass over the boy's chest. I ran into the store then."

Witness Emma Bankhead was standing about 25 feet south of Isabella street in front of a plumbing shop on San Pablo avenue. She testified:

That the Goldberg-Bowen wagon came along, San Pablo avenue, turned into Isabella street, and shortly afterwards came back into San Pablo avenue, and "went north on the west side of the street * * * up towards Athens street. Q. Which side of San Pablo street was it? A.

On the wrong side. On the west. The Ransome-Crummey wagon was going toward Oakland on the west side of the street; on the same side with the Goldberg-Bowen Company wagon. I also saw a boy riding a bicycle on San Pablo. He was a little in front of the horses of the Ransome-Crummey wagon, riding at a moderate speed towards Oakland, going in the same direction as the Ransome-Crummey wagon. The Goldberg-Bowen Company wagon hit his wheel. I could not say what part of the wagon hit him."

She testified that she could not say whether it was the horses or the wagon hit the boy but that the bicycle was struck and she saw the boy fall. She testified:

"When I saw the Goldberg-Bowen wagon going up San Pablo avenue, after it came back from Isabella street, just before the boy was struck, it was going fast."

The theory of the defendant was that after its wagon had come alongside of the Ransome wagon, between it and the curb, the boy suddenly came from behind the Ransome wagon and tried to pass between the two wagons, but became confused and ran his wheel into the defendant's wagon, and was thrown under the Ransome wagon. This theory was supported by the testimony of defendant's driver, Bert Call, and some other witnesses, but manifestly was not accepted by the jury. Call testified:

"I first saw the boy when the two wagons were about opposite each other. When I had come in between the Ransome company wagon. I didn't see him when I was out by the track." He was asked how far away from him the boy was when he first saw him. "A. When he was about 100 feet behind the wagon."

He testified:

"He was coming up on the pedals—riding on the pedals, with his head down. He would look down a while, while he was riding, off from the seat, and he would look to see where he was going. When I turned to see how close to the curb I was getting, I was going to stop right there. All of a sudden I seen him dart from behind the Ransome-Crummey wagon; and of course when I saw him coming I saw he was confused. He ran into my wagon, and it threw him under the Ransome-Crummey wagon. I turned around just in time to see the wheel pass over his body."

He testified that he had a delivery to make on Athens street, and he went to the westerly side of San Pablo avenue on his way because he had an inquiry to make on his own account at a furniture store on that side of the avenue. The jury, no doubt, believed that the driver saw the deceased as he testified, but that it was when the deceased was riding his wheel in advance of and not behind the Ransome-Crummey Wagon.

The issues of fact were tried by a jury, and a general verdict rendered in favor of plaintiff against defendant, assessing the damage at $10,000, and judgment was accordingly entered. A motion for a new trial was denied, and the appeal is from the judgment and order.

[1, 2] Passing the special demurrer without discussion, appellant urges with much confidence that the general demurrer should have been sustained for the reason "that the complaint utterly failed to show the existence of any heirs." That the action for death is statutory, that the personal representative of the deceased is permitted to bring the action merely as a statutory trustee for the benefit of the heirs, and that, in the absence of heirs, no action lies, is not disputed and is well settled. Munro v. Dredging Co., 84 Cal. 522, 24 Pac. 303, 18 Am. St. Rep. 248; Redfield v. Oakland, etc., Ry. Co., 110 Cal. 290, 42 Pac. 822, 1063; Salmon v. Rathjens, 152 Cal. 294, 92 Pac. 733. It is equally well settled that the existence of heirs is an essential element in the cause of action for death, and must be alleged in the complaint, failing in which no cause of action would be stated. Webster v. Norwegian Mfg. Co., 137 Cal. 399, 70 Pac. 276, 92 Am. St. Rep. 181; Ruiz v. Santa Barbara, etc., Co., 164 Cal. 188, 128 Pac. 330. Appellant not only relies upon these propositions, but it contends that, without such averments, the complaint will not sustain a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and furthermore that the defect is not cured by the verdict.

[3] Respondent replies: First, that the complaint, aided by the answer, was sufficient, for the reason that defendant denied that plaintiff had sustained damage "as administratrix or otherwise," thus raising an issue as to plaintiff's having been damaged personally as an heir; that, as no one but an heir can sustain damage, an allegation of damage to plaintiff necessarily implies that plaintiff is an heir, in the absence of a special demurrer; second, that the admission of evidence without objection cured the omission of the allegation. Upon this latter point, plaintiff testified without objection that deceased was her son; that she had a husband, father of deceased; that deceased, at the time of his death, was contributing of his earnings to the support of his parents, and for several years prior thereto had been doing so, and many other facts as to his relationship to the family.

It seems to us that respondent's second point in reply to appellant's contention must be sustained. We have examined the California cases on which appellant relies, and find that in none of them does it appear that proof of the omitted essential averment was made without objection. They are cases in which the question arose on demurrer, plaintiff declining to amend and judgment against him on the demurrer, or cases of appeal on the judgment roll alone, or on judgment upon the verdict where the evidence upon which the verdict was rendered was not brought up or did not affirmatively show that proof of the omitted averment was made without objection. In some of the cases the rule is stated as broadly as contended for, but an examination will show that the facts did not warrant it. The cases cited in the opening brief and relied upon by defendant are Buckman v. Hatch, 139 Cal. 55, 72 Pac. 445; Bane v. Peerman, 125 Cal. 220, 57 Pac. 885;

Hurley v. Ryan, 119 Cal. 71, 51 Pac. 20; Cameron v. Ah Quong, 8 Cal. App. 312, 96 Pac. 1025; Carpenter v. Sibley, 153 Cal. 215, 94 Pac. 879, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1143, 126 Am. St. Rep. 77, 15 Ann. Cas. 484; Wells Fargo Co. v. McCarthy, 5 Cal. App. 301, 90 Pac. 203; Burke v. Maguire, 154 Cal. 456, 98 Pac. 21; Alexander v. McDow, 108 Cal. 25, 41 Pac. 24.

We do not feel disposed to examine the numerous cases cited by the parties. It seems to us that the reformed procedure would receive a decided shock if a defendant should be permitted to stand by and without objection allow an issue to be tried as though properly presented by the pleadings and on appeal escape the consequences by claiming that the complaint failed to present such issue. If there ever was a case where section 475 of the Code of Civil Procedure was intended to apply, this, it seems to us, is one. In Texas & Pac. Ry. Co. v. Lacey, 185 Fed. 226, 107 C. C. A. 332, the action was similar to the one here, and the statute gave the right to the parents only if the deceased left no widow or minor children. The complaint was silent as to the existence of heirs, as is the present complaint. After stating that an amendment would no doubt have been allowed in the lower court had the objection been there presented, the court said:

"The point, if it occurred to counsel—and it probably did not—was held in ambush till the case reached this court, when it came out in the open. We think it is too late to present that defense. * * * If there were no statutes or local decisions to sustain the view, we would hold, nevertheless, that a defendant would not be permitted to successfully urge the alleged defect in this court after entering a general denial and trying the case on the merits in the lower court and having failed to suggest the alleged defect in that court."

[4] Nor do we think it can be said that the general demurrer sufficiently apprised plaintiff of the defect and relieved defendant from the necessity of objecting to the evidence. In Henderson v. Sizemore (Ky.) 104 S. W. 722, it was said:

"It would be trifling with justice to hold at this late stage of the proceeding that the judgment should be reversed for the error in failing to sustain a demurrer to the petition. Especially in view of section 134 of the Civil Code of Practice, providing that the court must in every stage of any action disregard any error or defect in the proceedings which does not affect the substantial rights of the adverse party."

See Abner Doble Co. v. Keystone, etc., Co., 145 Cal. 490, 495, 78 Pac. 1050; Carroll v. Briggs, 138 Cal. 452, 455, 71 Pac. 501.

In the case here the trial proceeded in all respects as though the pleadings sufficiently presented the issue as to there being heirs and precisely as it would had the complaint contained the allegation which it is insisted it should have contained. Why, then, should the case go back to have the complaint amended, as it is manifest that the proofs would be the same? How can it be said that defendant has sustained "substantial injury and that a different result would have been probable if such error * * * or defect had not occurred"? Code Civ. Proc. § 475; section 4½, art. 6, Const., as recently amended.

[5, 6] Appellant claims error in the giving of plaintiff's instructions numbered XXIII and XXIV on the "law of the road":

"If the driver of the Goldberg-Bowen wagon could have turned seasonably to the right of the center of the highway so as to pass the Ransome-Crummey wagon without interference, and did not do so, he should have done so, so far as the rights of decedent were concerned, and was guilty of negligence toward George V. Slaughter, the deceased, if said Slaughter was then riding on the right of the center of the road.

"The rule that, when vehicles meet, the driver of each must turn seasonably to the right of the center of the highway applies when a wagon meets a bicycle. If the deceased was riding in front of the Ransome-Crummey wagon, and the driver of the Goldberg-Bowen wagon could have turned to the right of the center of the highway when he met him, and did not do so, that in itself was negligence on the part of said driver."

It is contended that these instructions permitted of no excuse or extenuation by defendant, and "in effect told the jury to find the issue of negligence against the defendant, for it was never denied that defendant's wagon was on the left of the center of the street." We do not think the court intended to say that, under all conceivable circumstances, it would be negligence for a vehicle meeting another to turn to the left or omit to turn to the right. Circumstances might be such, as appellant well suggests, when this might cause collision rather than avoid it. What the court intended to say, and what the jury was authorized to interpret the court as saying, was what the statute lays down as the rule:

"When vehicles meet, the drivers of each must turn seasonably to the right of the center of the highway, so as to pass without interference." Pol. Code, § 2931.

It was not intended, nor do we think the jury could have so understood the court, that the failure of defendant's driver to turn to the right determined all questions of negligence against defendant. Other instructions given by the court show plainly that this must be so. Upon the general proposition that a violation of a statutory requirement constitutes negligence, the instructions were correct. Where the plaintiff was injured by a runaway horse, left unfastened in the street in violation of an ordinance, it was said the court might have instructed that the proof established negligence. Siemers v. Eisen, 54 Cal. 418. It was said in Fenn v. Clark, 11 Cal. App. 79, 81, 103 Pac. 944, 945:

"It has been repeatedly declared by the Supreme Court of this state that the failure to perform a duty imposed by statute or municipal ordinance constitutes negligence."

See Besee v. L. A. Tr. Co., 149 Cal. 131, 139, 85 Pac. 152, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1059.

Instructions were given upon the question of the alleged contributory negligence of deceased and upon the circumstances immediately attending the accident, showing that all these matters were to be considered by the jury. We do not think there can be any doubt that these vehicles were "meeting," in the sense of the statute. Defendant's wagon was traveling on the same side of the street at a fast gait, in close proximity to and facing the Ransome wagon and the bicycle ridden by deceased.

[7] The jury were authorized to believe that defendant's driver saw deceased and the Ransome wagon as he approached them. If he did not see them it was gross negligence not to have seen them, as he was directly in front of them and on the side of the street which called for vigilance and circumspection on his part.

[8, 9] It is contended that the instructions above referred to were in conflict with certain instructions given at defendant's request. If our view of plaintiff's instructions is correct, we see no necessary conflict between them and defendant's instructions, which informed the jury that the mere fact of passing on the left did not constitute negligence; that a driver may use any part of the street when necessary, and, whether on one side or the other, the question of negligence depends on the circumstances. These directions were favorable to defendant, but the question was still left with the jury whether or not the driver could have turned to the right or was negligent in not turning to the right or in failing to do so or to stop when he saw the position of deceased. It will be observed that plaintiff's instructions relate, at least in part, to defendant's duty toward deceased, whose position, as the evidence warranted the jury in finding, was in the space between the Ransome wagon and the curb or in front of it as defendant approached. As to defendant's criticism that the instructions did not take into account that the question of proximate cause of the injury was involved, this may be said: No single instruction can embody all the law. There were full instructions upon the question of defendant's alleged negligence being the proximate cause of the injury. Stein v. United Railroads, 159 Cal. 368, 372, 113 Pac. 663.

[10] Error is predicated of the following instruction numbered plaintiff's XXV:

"If the deceased was behind the Ransome-Crummey wagon and saw the Goldberg-Bowen wagon coming, before it reached the Ransome-Crummey wagon, he had a right to presume that the Goldberg-Bowen wagon would pass to the east of the Ransome-Crummey wagon, provided it was possible for it to do so; and, if he himself attempted to pass the Ransome-Crummey wagon on the west, he is not chargeable with negligence, unless he knew, or should have known, that the driver of the Goldberg-Bowen wagon would not or could not turn to the right. And if deceased was in front of the Ransome-Crummey horses, and saw the Goldberg-Bowen wagon coming, he had a right to presume that the Goldberg-Bowen wagon would pass to the east of him."

It is claimed that upon the authority of Hutson v. Southern, etc., Ry. Co., 150 Cal. 701, 89 Pac. 1093, this instruction requires a reversal of the judgment. The objection is to the last paragraph of the instruction. We do not see that the case cited is at all controlling in this case. It deals with the case of a driver of a team of horses approaching a railroad track and his duty to stop and listen, even though he does not hear a bell ringing or see the coming cars. The instruction objected to is no more than a statement that the deceased had a right to presume that defendant's driver would obey the law, especially under the circumstances shown, that the deceased was rightfully pursuing his course in a position of safety. The rule as applicable to this case is more correctly given in Medlin v. Spazier, 23 Cal. App. 242, 137 Pac. 1078.

[11] Error is assigned in giving the following instruction:

"Plaintiff's VIII. When a person is in imminent danger, he is not called upon to exercise that intelligence and judgment he would be expected to exercise were he not in danger. So if a party in imminent danger has two ways open to him, but has not the time to stop and investigate and determine which is the right or safe way and which is the wrong or unsafe way, his choosing the latter is not, under the circumstances, negligence on his part. So if you should find from the evidence in the case that deceased found himself in imminent danger or had reasonable ground to believe that he was in such danger, and had not time to stop and consider and determine the better course to pursue, then you are instructed that his choosing to turn one way instead of the other in such emergency was not negligence on his part, even though, in so doing, he may have ridden right against the approaching team or wagon instead of away from it."

The criticism is that:

"This rule has no application where the person injured has placed himself in the position of danger; in such case the confusion of mind obviously arises out of his own act."

In Harrington v. L. A., etc., Ry. Co., 140 Cal. 514, 74 Pac. 15, 63 L. R. A. 238, 98 Am. St. Rep. 85, deceased was admittedly negligent in placing himself in a position of danger, and such also was the situation as to plaintiff in Kramm v. Stockton Elec. R. Co., 3 Cal. App. 615, 86 Pac. 738, 903; Id., 22 Cal. App. 737, 136 Pac. 523. The jury were fully and quite favorably instructed by the court, at defendant's request, upon defendant's theory that deceased "voluntarily placed himself in a point of danger" by riding into the space between the two wagons. The jury, by their verdict, found that this theory was untenable, and that deceased was not in a dangerous position through his own fault. But, had he been, the rule in this state does not preclude recovery. The jury were to decide, in view of all the circumstances, at whose door must rest the charge of proximate cause for the injury.

It is further contended that the instructions upon the last clear chance doctrine were outside the issues, and therefore erroneous. Under the allegations of negligence found in the complaint and the issues raised by the answer, it was proper, as was done, to inquire into all the circumstances surrounding the accident. Defendant alleged contributory negligence of deceased which presupposed negligence of defendant. Linthorpe v. S. F. Gas, etc., Co., 156 Cal. 58, 66, 103 Pac. 320, 19 Ann. Cas. 1230. The evidence, we think, shows that the instruction was proper. Besides, we cannot see that it was harmful.

There are two other assignments of error which we do not deem of sufficient importance to require notice.

[12] It is finally contended that the verdict of $10,000 was excessive. Mrs. Slaughter, mother of deceased, and plaintiff, testified:

That he was 23 years old at the time of his death; that he "graduated from the grammar school when he was 15 years old," at Marysville; that he worked after school in the canneries and during vacations; was for two years janitor of the Episcopal Church; worked in a furniture store; agent for the Tribune after they moved to Oakland. "He was my main support." She was asked when he began to work and contribute to the support of the family. "A. Just as soon as he left school, and before he left school he used to deliver papers after school. When he took the papers after school, it was a small amount monthly, but after he quit school, from 16 years on, regularly I could depend on, I had a regular salary, because he was an ambitious boy. He always averaged $10 and more, never less than $10 a week. In the cannery, of course, he used to average about $14 or $16. The boy's condition of health was fairly well. He was always at home with me. He never was a boy to run around or dissipate or get in bad company. I could depend upon him night and day when he was not at work. He was not married."

It was admitted by defendant that, according to the American table of mortality, the expectancy of life of a person 23 years old is 40.2 years.

There is no evidence, aside from the amount of the damages, from which it can be inferred that the jury were actuated in the slightest degree by passion, prejudice, or by corrupt motives. The amount in itself is not such as "to suggest, at first blush, passion, or prejudice or corruption on the part of the jury." Hale v. San Bernardino, etc., Co., 156 Cal. 715, 106 Pac. 84; Bond v. United Railroads, 159 Cal. 286, 113 Pac. 366, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 687, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 50. This subject has been so frequently discussed by our appellate courts and under so many different conditions of facts that it would be difficult to throw any additional light upon it. We can discover no rule of law which would warrant our holding the verdict in the present case to be excessive, and we content ourselves with referring to some of the cases, in addition to the two above cited, which we think fully justify our conclusion: Redfield v. Oak- land Con. Co., 110 Cal. 285, 42 Pac. 822, 1063; Hillebrand v. Standard Biscuit Co., 139 Cal. 233, 73 Pac. 163; Skelton v. Pacific Lumber, etc., Co., 140 Cal. 507, 74 Pac. 13; Bowen v. Sierra Lumber Co., 3 Cal. App. 313, 84 Pac. 1010; McGrory v. Pac. Elec. Co., 22 Cal. App. 671, 136 Pac. 303.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. We are asked to grant a rehearing in order that we may reconsider the single question: Did the evidence that deceased left heirs, offered and admitted at the trial without objection, cure the failure to allege the fact in the complaint? Whatever answer to this question may be found in the decisions of our Supreme and appellate courts (and it must be admitted that in some of them a negative answer finds support), we are satisfied that the rule should be as we have held. If we have erred appellant has a speedy means of redress by petition for hearing in the Supreme Court.

Inasmuch as section 4½, art. 6 of the Constitution, as recently amended, was not referred to in the briefs, and its effect, in cases of this character, has not been passed upon, so far as we are advised, we withdraw the citation and all reference to it as authority for our decision.

The petition is denied.

PEOPLE v. CAMP. (Cr. 287.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 21, 1915.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡507—ACCOMPLICE—CAPACITY—STATUTES.

A boy under 14 years of age, whose assent to the offense of lewd and lascivious conduct with a boy under the age of 14 years, denounced by Pen. Code, § 288, was passive, rather than an intelligent and voluntary choice characterizing actual consent to the crime and criminal participation therein, and as to whose knowledge of its wrongfulness there was no proof, could not be an accomplice, since the statute expressly declares that all persons are capable of committing crimes, except children under the age of 14, in the absence of clear proof, that, at the time of committing the act charged against them, they knew its wrongfulness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1082–1096; Dec. Dig. ⚡507.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡814—PROSECUTION—INSTRUCTION—SUPPORT IN EVIDENCE.

In a criminal prosecution, where there was complete corroboration of the testimony of the prosecuting witness, defendant's requested instruction on the theory that there was no corroboration was properly refused as without basis in the evidence.

3. CRIMINAL LAW 476—EVIDENCE—EXPERT TESTIMONY.

In a prosecution under Pen. Code, § 288, for lewd and lascivious conduct with a boy under the age of 14 years, expert medical evidence as to what effect such acts would have in "arousing the feelings or gratifying the lust or passions of sexual desires of the man in the case" was properly admitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1062; Dec. Dig. 476.]

4. CRIMINAL LAW 1169—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EXPERT TESTIMONY.

Error, if any, in admitting such expert testimony was without prejudice, where no other inference than the one stated in such testimony could possibly be drawn.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

Charles Camp was convicted of lewdness, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Charles A. Tuttle, of Sacramento, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURNETT, J. Appellant was convicted, under an indictment, of the offense denounced by section 288 of the Penal Code, of lewd and lascivious conduct with a boy under the age of 14 years. It is not claimed that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict, or that there was any irregularity in the trial, except in two particulars.

In the first place, complaint is made that the court refused to give the following instructions requested by defendant:

"A conviction cannot be had upon the testimony of an accomplice, unless he be corroborated by such other evidence as shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof;" and "you are instructed that (prosecuting witness) is an accomplice in this case, if you believe from the evidence that he consented to the act charged, and in that event his testimony must be corroborated as I have instructed you in the last instruction."

On these proposed instructions the trial court made the following indorsement:

"Refused; no question of accomplice mentioned; not applicable to facts."

[1] There seem to be two sufficient reasons for the action of the trial court. One is that there was no substantial showing that the prosecuting witness was an accomplice. He could not be an accomplice unless he understood and appreciated the wrongfulness of the act and consented to its perpetration. As to his knowledge of the nature of the offense, the law prescribes the same test as it does for a principal. And the statute has provided a rule to be applied to the case of minors as follows:

"Who Are Capable of Committing Crimes. All persons are capable of committing crimes except those belonging to the following classes:

1. Children under the age of fourteen, in the absence of clear proof that at the time of committing the act charged against them, they knew its wrongfulness. * * *

The prosecuting witness being under the age of 14, the aforesaid presumption would apply, and "clear proof" that he knew the wrongfulness of the act was required before it could be said that he was an accomplice. Not only is there an absence of such "clear proof," but no attempt seems to have been made to show that he understood the nature of the act. He was not interrogated concerning his knowledge of good and evil or his capacity to discern the moral quality of defendant's said conduct. Neither was any other witness examined as to the mental capacity or moral development of the victim of the outrage. For aught that appears to the contrary, he may have been mentally weak even for one of his age and entirely incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong. At any rate, no showing was made by defendant to rebut the presumption that he was incapable of committing the crime or of being an accomplice in its commission, and therefore neither of said instructions was pertinent to any rational view of the facts in the case. It may be said, also, as to the apparent acquiescence of the prosecuting witness in the lewd act of the defendant, that it appears to have been a mere passive assent rather than an intelligent and voluntary choice that characterizes actual consent to the crime and criminal participation in its perpetration. The difference between these two mental attitudes is clearly set forth in People v. Dong Pok Yip, 164 Cal. 147, 127 Pac. 1031, to which reference may be had for a further discussion of the subject.

[2] In addition, it may be suggested that there was complete corroboration of the testimony of the prosecuting witness. Another boy of about the same age testified positively to the lascivious acts set forth in the indictment. He claimed to have been an eyewitness, and upon his testimony alone the jury would have been justified in finding a verdict of guilty. The said instructions were not addressed to the contingency that the testimony of the other witness might be false or unworthy of belief, but they were based upon the hypothesis that the prosecuting witness was not corroborated. He was undoubtedly fully corroborated; hence, in that respect, there was no basis for the theory suggested by said proposed instructions.

[3] The other objection of appellant relates to a question addressed to an expert as to what effect such acts charged against defendant would have in "arousing the feelings or gratifying the lust or passions or sexual desires of the man in the case." This seems to be a matter of expert testimony. A peculiar knowledge of the human system is requisite to answer the question intelligently.

It would be a reflection upon the average and normal man to hold that such expert assistance is not needed. The normal man, it may be assumed, has no such knowledge nor experience as would qualify him to determine, without the aid of an expert, the neurotic or orgastic effect of such indecent acts.

[4] On the contrary, if it should be conceded that the objection to the question addressed to the physician should have been sustained, it would follow that the error was without prejudice, for the reason that we must assume no other inference than the one embraced in said opinion can possibly be indulged. Whether a matter of expert or of common knowledge, in other words, we must hold, there can be no dissent from the conclusion that such acts would have such effect upon the lustful desires of one bestial enough to be guilty of such conduct.

We find no prejudicial error in the record, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Epitacio Valenzuela was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

A. Orfila, of Los Angeles, and Finley & Kolb, of Santa Ana, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

JAMES, J. Appellant was charged with the crime of murder, and upon being found guilty of manslaughter was sentenced to serve a term of 10 years imprisonment in the state prison. He appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] A young man named Delbert D. Wardlow was shot on the evening of March 19, 1914, at the house of appellant at Talbert in Orange county. Several gunshot wounds were inflicted upon his body, after which Wardlow mounted a horse and rode to a nearby store, where he died. Death was caused by the loss of blood from a wound in the thigh where a bullet had severed the femoral artery. Appellant is a Mexican and was engaged as a common laborer near the place of his residence, and occupied a small frame building with his family, which consisted of a wife and children. At his house he served boarders other than members of his family, and also sold liquor to persons who might come there for it. On the date mentioned young Wardlow and a man named Stafford rode up to the house of appellant and purchased some beer, which they drank on the premises. At that time appellant was away at his work and his wife furnished the liquor to Wardlow and his companion. While the two men were still in the house, the father of Wardlow joined them, and together the three drank more beer, which they purchased from the wife of appellant. Toward evening appellant with a man named Vasquez returned to the house. Appellant was well acquainted with the Wardlows, and the men were apparently friends. Young Wardlow, however, sought to quarrel with Vasquez, who was not offending him at the time, and either struck or pushed Vasquez about in the dining room, where the four men then were. Appellant remonstrated with the elder Wardlow, and thereupon the latter became abusive also, but soon desisted from any offensive action. Meanwhile appellant retired to an adjoining room and Vasquez made his way past Stafford, who was holding a door to prevent him from going out of the room. Stafford testified that he heard young Wardlow's voice, as he apparently addressed appellant in the other room, saying to the latter, in substance, "You dare not shoot." Stafford further testified that the two men went outside, young Wardlow following appellant; that he next saw appellant fire twice at Wardlow, and at the same time Vasquez approached from the rear and fired three shots at the deceased; that Wardlow called to the witness and stated that they (meaning the Mexicans) "had got him," and asked Stafford to get his horse. Stafford brought one of the horses to young Wardlow, who mounted the same and rode in the direction of the store, where he died shortly afterward. Appellant, testifying on behalf of himself, denied that he had fired any shots, but, of course, the question as to the sufficiency of the evidence was a matter solely for the jury to determine in the face of the conflict presented. There was other corroborating evidence, such as the finding of empty cartridge shells in the vault of the water-closet, and testimony that appellant had purchased loaded shells of the same character some days before at the country store.

[2] The claim for reversal hangs upon very slender threads. The argument in support thereof may be briefly summarized and the case as briefly disposed of. The court gave the long-approved instruction upon the question of reasonable doubt, and the mere fact that the defendant's counsel desired an elaboration of the general principle announced therein furnishes no reason for saying that the court committed prejudicial error in refusing to give the additional instruction. The proof of the charge did not rest wholly upon circumstantial evidence, but there was the testimony of an eyewitness as to the killing. However, the court did give sufficient instructions as to the effect of proof of circumstances where such is relied upon in establishing a criminal charge. Taken together, the instructions seem to have very fairly and fully presented all matters of law to the jury which were pertinent to the case and entitled to be considered by them.

[3] Misconduct on the part of the trial judge is charged, but, conceding that there was error in the reference made by the court to the elder Wardlow as a witness, which might be taken as indicating that in the judge's mind weight was to be given to the testimony of the witness referred to, however, when appellant's counsel made objection, the court set aside his ruling upon the objection then under discussion, and directly told the jury that the remarks made by the court were not for their consideration. The conduct of the judge did not amount to prejudicial error. People v. MacDonald, 167 Cal. 546, 140 Pac. 256.

We find no error in the record warranting the conclusion that appellant has been prejudiced in his right to a fair and impartial trial.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; John E. Richards, Judge.

Action by Sarah A. Post against Adolph Becker and others, in which T. B. Hubbard filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment for defendant Hubbard on his cross-complaint, defendant Adolph Becker and another appeal. Affirmed.

L. S. Melsted, of San Francisco, for appellants. Beggs & McComish, of San Jose, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiff commenced the action to foreclose a mortgage upon the real property in question, given to secure the payment of a promissory note executed by defendants Beckers to plaintiff. Hubbard was made a party defendant as having an interest in the property. Plaintiff's rights in the action are not disputed and need not be considered. Hubbard answered by way of cross-complaint, seeking to foreclose what he claimed to be a second mortgage upon the property. This document was in form a grant, bargain, and sale deed of the premises, dated October 9, 1905, and was duly recorded, February 10, 1906. It was alleged, in an amended cross-complaint, filed before the trial, that this deed was intended as a mortgage to secure the indebtedness then (at its date) due from the Beckers to the firm of Hubbard & Carmichael Bros.; also to secure Hubbard against any liability that might arise out of a certain bond, in the sum of $500, given by him as security for Becker in an action about to be commenced by him against one Mrs. Schmidlin, for slander; also to secure all other indebtedness that might thereafter (after October 9, 1905) become due from the Beckers to T. B. Hubbard, or Hubbard & Carmichael Bros.; "that at the time of the filing of this cross-complaint, to wit, on September 6, 1910, there was and still is due, owing, and payable and unpaid from the said Adolph Becker and Amanda Becker, his wife, to the said T. B. Hubbard, the sum of $3,000." It was further alleged, and the court so found, that the claims of Hubbard & Carmichael Bros. were assigned to Hubbard before the action was commenced. The Beckers answered and alleged that, at the time of the execution of the deed, October 9, 1905, Will M. Beggs was their attorney and also the attorney of Hubbard and Hubbard & Carmichael Bros., and that in his capacity as such attorney he represented to the Beckers that the deed was given as security to in-dennify Hubbard against any liability under said bond above referred to, in which said suit against Schmidlin the said Beggs was Becker's attorney, and that all liability incurred by Hubbard on said bond has been paid. Section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure was pleaded in bar of the action, but is not now urged. It was further answered:

"The cross-complainant and Hubbard & Carmichael Bros. have, at different times during two years last past, waived any and all rights they or either or any of them might have had under said alleged mortgage, and said T. B. Hubbard and Hubbard & Carmichael Bros. have, at different times during two years last past, instituted and carried to judgment certain actions in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Santa Clara, for the recovery of certain amounts of money alleged to be due from said Adolph Becker to said T. B. Hubbard and the firm of Hubbard & Carmichael Bros., and that there is now pending in the said superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Santa Clara, certain actions in which said T. B. Hubbard or the firm of Hubbard & Carmichael Bros. are plaintiffs against said Adolph Becker as defendant for the recovery of certain sums now alleged to be due to said Hubbard & Carmichael Bros. or T. B. Hubbard from said Adolph Becker. That none of the actions mentioned in this paragraph are or were actions to foreclose the alleged mortgage mentioned in said cross-complainant's cross-complaint."

The court made findings that the deed of October 9, 1905, was executed for the purposes alleged in the cross-complaint, and that there remained due and owing to Hubbard the sum of $3,000, and is not barred by the statute of limitations; that Becker could neither read nor write except to sign his name; that it is not true that the Beckers signed said instrument in complete or any reliance on the statement of Will M. Beggs, but that they, with full knowledge of the contents and purport of said instrument, signed the same to secure T. B. Hubbard and Hubbard & Carmichael Bros. against any indebtedness or loss which might then be, or thereafter become, "due from said Beckers or either of them," to either "T. B. Hubbard or Hubbard & Carmichael Bros."; that "said Hubbard expended $500 under said bond, no part of which has been paid; that neither T. B. Hubbard nor Hubbard & Carmichael Bros. has at any time waived all or any rights they or either of them might have under said mortgage," or by the institution of any action or actions in said superior court; "that it is true that there are now pending in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Santa Clara, certain actions in which T. B. Hubbard is plaintiff against Adolph Becker and others as defendants for the recovery of certain sums alleged to be due to said T. B. Hubbard from said Adolph Becker; that each of said actions was instituted to foreclose a mechanic's lien upon the property of third parties for materials furnished to Adolph Becker for the improvement of the property of said third parties; that in two of said actions, judgment has been rendered against T. B. Hubbard, and he has recovered nothing in either or any of them; and that neither of said judgments are now final." As conclusions of law the court found that said deed was intended as and for a mortgage to secure the indebtedness referred to in said cross-complaint, of which there remained unpaid the sum of $3,000, and that cross-complainant is entitled to have said deed foreclosed as a mortgage and the property sold according to law. Judgment passed for cross-complainant accordingly, and the appeal is from this judgment. No motion was made for a new trial.

It is not disputed that the deed of October 9, 1905, was intended as a mortgage. The only question raised at the trial as to the intention of the parties was whether it was given for the sole purpose of securing Hubbard against any liability that might arise upon the indemnity bond given by him for $500, or whether it was to secure the indebtedness of Becker to Hubbard and to Hubbard & Carmichael Bros. then due or to become due. Becker testified that the deed was given for the purpose first above mentioned and no other; that he did not read the deed, for he could neither read nor write, except to write his own name, and that it was not read over to him; that it was prepared by Attorney Beggs, who was then the attorney of both parties. On the other hand, Mr. Beggs testified that while he did not read it to Becker and his wife, he did, however, fully explain to them that the deed was to be given as security covering the indemnity bond and also the claims of Hubbard and Hubbard & Carmichael Bros., to whom Becker was then indebted and with whom he was doing business and expected to incur other indebtedness. It was shown that subsequently, to wit, on February 12, 1906, Becker and his wife signed a written agreement in which it was stated that the real property was conveyed "as security for the sums which the parties of the first part [Becker and wife] or either of them may now owe to either the said T. B. Hubbard or Hubbard & Carmichael Bros., it being understood and agreed that the said T. B. Hubbard shall have a lien upon the said real property for such sums owing to either himself or the said Hubbard & Carmichael Bros." There were circumstances shown also which tended to justify the finding of the court upon this issue of fact. The deed was made to T. B. Hubbard as grantee. The indebtedness claimed by cross-complainant was fully shown, and consisted of a promissory note and book accounts aggregating a balance of $3,000, as found by the court, including $500, which Hubbard paid under the indemnity bond. It appeared by the evidence that certain actions had been commenced by Hubbard to enforce a materialman's lien for materials furnished Becker by Hubbard & Carmichael Bros. in constructing certain buildings, and that the deed was intended to include these as well as other claims. It also appeared that in two of these cases judgment was against Hubbard, and the third had not reached final judgment.

[1] Appellants' contention is that the commencement of these actions operated as a waiver of the right to foreclose the mortgage on any of the claims intended to be covered by the deed given as a mortgage (citing section 726, Code Civ. Proc., and Commercial Bank v. Kershner, 120 Cal. 495, 52 Pac. 548). If the foreclosure action, as presented by the amended cross-complaint, had included the claims in the lien actions above referred to, and if Hubbard had recovered judgment in the latter actions, appellants' point might find support in the case cited. But the bill of particulars, showing the items of Hubbard's claims, as alleged in the amended cross-complaint, does not include the claims previously included in the actions to enforce certain liens. As we understand the evidence, the actions commenced to enforce mechanics' liens related to claims omitted from the amended cross-complaint, although they were secured by the deed given as a mortgage. The doctrine discussed in the case cited does not therefore apply to the claims now involved. The fact that the deed was given to secure all of the Hubbard and Hubbard & Carmichael Bros. claims would not prevent their proceeding to foreclose the mortgage as to claims not involved in any of the actions previously commenced. Furthermore, in two of those actions, judgment went against Hubbard, and in the third no final judgment has been rendered.

[2] Appellants say, in concluding their brief: "How the amount of Becker's liability was fixed at $3,000 defies all mathematics." The amended cross-complaint asked for a judgment for $3,000. The bill of particulars in support of the claim and testified to by witnesses as showing the balance due from Becker totaled $3,155.45. This justified a finding in favor of cross-complainant for $3,000, which was all he prayed for, and probably it was all the court felt authorized to award on the pleadings.

The judgment is affirmed.

DEYOE v. PAONESSA. (Civ. 1511.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California, Jan. 23, 1915.)

BROKERS $\hookrightarrow$ 43 — RIGHT TO COMPENSATION — CONTRACTS IN WRITING — STATUTES.

Under Civ. Code, § 1624, subsec. 6, providing that "an agreement authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for compensation or a commission" shall be invalid unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, is in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged or by his agent, an oral contract for the sale of street improvement contracts to enable the contractor to obtain money was a contract for the sale of personalty, and valid; and the circumstance that the principal subsequently accepted real property in consideration of the contracts did not change the terms of plaintiff's employment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Augusta E. Deyoe, as executrix, etc., of C. P. Deyoe, against George C. Paonessa. From an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Murphey & Poplin, of Los Angeles, for appellant. George H. Kelch, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The appellant C. P. Deyoe having died pending this appeal, the present appellant has been substituted in his place as plaintiff and appellant. The appeal is from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

The second count of the complaint alleges that the plaintiff, at the special instance and request of the defendant, rendered services to the defendant in procuring for the defendant a purchaser for certain personal property amounting in value to the sum of $20,000, and that for said price defendant sold, traded, and exchanged said property to a purchaser, and in consideration thereof the defendant agreed to pay plaintiff a commission, which amounted to the sum of $1,000. The answer denies these allegations, "except as hereinafter alleged," and then sets forth that the alleged agreement "was one purporting to authorize or employ the plaintiff as a broker to purchase real estate for a compensation; that said alleged agreement is not, and was never, in any writing subscribed by the defendant or his agent, and that there is not now, nor was there ever, any note or memorandum thereof subscribed by defendant or by his agent; that said alleged agreement is invalid under section 1624, subsec. 6, of the Civil Code." The plaintiff was engaged in the business of buying and selling real estate on commission, and it was a part of his business to sell stocks and bonds on commission. The defendant, being the owner of certain street improvement contracts on which he was to receive money thereafter to become due, informed plaintiff that he had this amount of $20,000 in contracts, and that he would like to make some sort of a deal whereby he could get the money, and orally promised to pay the commission. After sundry negotiations, which are described in the evidence, the plaintiff brought about a transaction whereby the defendant received certain real property in exchange for said contracts. The transaction was based upon the stated valuation of $20,000 for the contracts. These facts being in evidence, the court granted defendant's motion for a nonsuit on the ground that the evidence "failed to substantiate the allegations contained in the complaint." According to the provisions of section 1624 of the Civil Code, subdivision 6, "an agreement authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for compensation or a commission" is included among the contracts which are invalid unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, is in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged or by his agent. It must be conceded that the oral agreement shown by the evidence is enforceable unless it comes within the classification of subdivision 6 as above quoted. The evidence clearly tends to show, however, that the employment of the plaintiff was for the selling of personal property and not for the purchase of the real estate. When the contract of employment was made, the expressed desire of the defendant was to sell his contracts for money, or to exchange them for any kind of property acceptable to him. The circumstance that subsequently he did accept real property as a consideration in disposing of the contracts did not change the terms or nature of plaintiff's employment. It is conceded that the evidence was sufficient to sustain the findings of the court on the allegations of the first cause of action stated in the complaint. The court erred in granting the motion for nonsuit as to the second cause of action.

The order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial is reversed, with directions to the lower court that the action be tried anew with respect to said second cause of action.

ASHCROFT ESTATE CO. v. NELSON et al.
(Civ. 1435.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 25, 1915. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court March 25, 1915.)

CHATTEL MORTGAGES ⇨255—FORECLOSURE—RIGHT TO MAINTAIN ACTION—"ACTION FOR THE RECOVERY OF ANY DEBT."

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 726, providing that there can be but one action for the recovery of any debt, or the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage on real or personal property, a lessor who had recovered a judgment in unlawful detainer for restitution of the premises, forfeiture of the lease, and for the rent due, might maintain an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage given by the tenant to secure performance of the covenants and conditions of the lease, and containing an express waiver of any defense as to plaintiff's right to maintain such action; since the action of unlawful detainer was to recover possession of real property, the part of the judgment forfeiting the lease and awarding damages being incidental, and was not an "action for the recovery of any debt," and since the former judgment could not affect the issue in the foreclosure suit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 517; Dec. Dig. ⇨255.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by the Ashcroft Estate Company against August Nelson and others, and William Henderson, sued as John Doe, who filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and from the judgment and an order denying a new trial, Henderson appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

J. G. Reisner, of San Francisco, for appellant. Frank J. Hennessy, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage. The plaintiff and defendants were respectively lessor and lessees of premises under a written instrument for the performance of the conditions of which the chattel mortgage was given as security. The defendant W. Henderson, who is the appellant here, held a second mortgage on the personal property forming the subject of the chattel mortgage involved in this action. The court gave judgment foreclosing both chattel mortgages, and found that appellant's mortgage was subordinate to that of the plaintiff. The appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying appellant's motion for a new trial.

The sole question in this case is whether a lessor may maintain an action for the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage given to secure the faithful performance of the covenants and conditions of a lease, where prior to the institution of such action the lessor has recovered a judgment in an unlawful detainer proceeding for restitution of the premises, forfeiture of the lease, and for the sum of $416, the actual amount due for the rent of the premises involved, and where this breach of the lease, viz., the nonpayment of rent, is the basis of both actions.

Section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides, in part, that:

"There can be but one action for the recovery of any debt, or the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage upon real or personal property."

If the unlawful detainer action may be regarded as one for the recovery of a debt, then plaintiff, under this section of the Code, must be held to have waived the security of the chattel mortgage. It seems clear, however, from the authorities, that an action of unlawful detainer must be regarded as having for its purpose primarily the recovery of the possession of real property, and that the part of the judgment recovered therein declaring the lease forfeited and awarding damages is merely incidental, so that such action cannot be classed as one for the recovery of a debt. Toplitz v. Standard (App.) 143 Pac. 52; Arnold v. Krigbaum, 146 Pac. 423, decided by the Supreme Court January 19, 1915. The right's determined in an unlawful detainer suit are entirely different from those litigated in a suit to foreclose a chattel mortgage; and, as both remedies may not be embraced in one action, it would seem to follow that separate actions to enforce the different rights may be maintained. Especially is that true in this case; for here the mortgagor in express terms in the mortgage waived the very defense here interposed. In the case of Ely v. Williams, 6 Cal. App. 455, 92 Pac. 393, the chattel mortgage by its terms gave to the mortgagee the right to take possession of the mortgaged property upon default in the payments therein provided to be made; and the court held:

That a prior action to foreclose the mortgage was not a bar to an action in claim and delivery; that the provisions of section 726, Code of Civil Procedure, "must be construed to have reference to the enforcement of those rights only which are necessary to the recovery of the debt and the foreclosure of the lien given to secure it, and not to any collateral contract in the mortgage which does not affect the interests of the parties in the mortgaged property."

Continuing, the court says:

"The judgment in the replevin action will in no way affect the issues tried in the foreclosure proceeding, and, if in favor of the plaintiff, will only operate to aid in the proper execution of the decree rendered in that proceeding."

The same in a measure is true here. The judgment in the unlawful detainer action can in no way affect the issue in this case, and will operate only as an aid in compelling performance of the covenants of the chattel mortgage. In that case, too, as in this, the defense interposed was waived by express provision of the chattel mortgage. Other cases bearing on the point are Schehr v. Berkeley et al., 166 Cal. 157, 135 Pac. 41; Harper v. Gordon, 128 Cal. 489, 61 Pac. 84; Ludlum v. Rothschild, 41 Minn. 218, 43 N. W. 137; Mohegan Athletic Club v. Eberhart (Sup.) 135 N. Y. Supp. 1093.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. WEBBER. (Cr. 561.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 26, 1915.)

1. HOMICIDE — 300 — SELF-DEFENSE — EVIDENCE — INSTRUCTIONS.

Where accused showed that decedent was the aggressor, and made an unlawful assault on him such as to put him, as a reasonable man, in fear of his life, or great bodily harm, the court should charge that, if the jury believed the evidence, accused was not bound to retreat, but could stand his ground, and a charge that, if accused could have withdrawn from the danger, it was his duty to retreat, and that between his duty to flee and his right to kill he must retreat, was insufficient, especially where accused was on his own premises.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 614, 616-620, 622-630; Dec. Dig. —300.]

2. HOMICIDE — 117 — SELF-DEFENSE — DUTY TO RETREAT.

Though a killing must be under an absolute necessity actual or apparent to show self-defense, yet, as a matter of law, the necessity exists when an innocent person is placed in such sudden jeopardy as to put him, as a reasonable man, in fear of his life or of great bodily harm, in which case his right to stand his ground is an element of self-defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 164-167; Dec. Dig. —117.]

3. WITNESSES — 372 — CROSS-EXAMINATION — BIAS.

The court may permit on the cross-examination of a state's witness a question asked to call the jury's attention to the bias of the witness, though it assumes an immaterial fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1192-1199; Dec. Dig. —372.]

4. WITNESSES — 372 — CROSS-EXAMINATION — BIAS.

Question asked a state's witness as to whether since the offense he had not stated to different people that accused ought to be hung is not objectionable as calling for the impeachment of the witness without a foundation being laid therefor, but is proper to show bias of the witness, if answered in the affirmative, and, if answered in the negative, accused is bound thereby, unless a proper impeaching question is asked.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

Nicolas Webber was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

Johnston & Jones, of Fresno, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

KERRIGAN, J. The defendant was charged by information with the crime of murder. He was convicted of manslaughter, and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment. The appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

[1] The testimony in this case introduced on behalf of the defendant tended to show that the deceased was the aggressor, and made an unlawful assault upon the defendant of such a character as to put him, as a reasonable man, in fear of his life or of great bodily harm. The jury should therefore have been instructed, as requested, that, if they believed this evidence, the defendant was not bound to retreat, but that he had a lawful right to stand his ground. The only instruction given on the subject, however, was as follows:

"If he [defendant] could have withdrawn from the danger, it was his duty to retreat. Between his duty to flee and his right to kill, he must fly, or, as the books have it, he must retreat to the wall."

This was part of the instruction on the subject of self-defense, and the instruction in full is precisely the same as that given in the case of People v. Lewis, 117 Cal. 186, 191, 46 Pac. 1088, 59 Am. St. Rep. 167; and there, on account of the part here quoted, it was held to be error which must have resulted in prejudicial injury to the defendant. In that case the court said:

"In People v. Hecker, 109 Cal. 451 [42 Pac. 307, 30 L. R. A. 403], where the right of self-defense is considered at some length, it is pointed out that our law nowhere imposes the duty of retreat upon one who without fault himself is exposed to a sudden felonious attack, and that the duty of withdrawal or retreat is imposed upon him alone who is the first aggressor, or who has joined in a mutual combat; and it is further said that, while at common law there was a contrariety of opinion upon the part of the writers as to the duty of retreat, which contrariety has found its way into the differing decisions of our state courts, this state has upheld a defendant's right to stand his ground and meet by force a sudden and violent attack."

[2] So that, while the killing must be under an absolute necessity, actual or apparent, as a matter of law, that necessity is deemed to exist when an innocent person is placed in such sudden jeopardy. The right to stand one's ground should form an element of the instructions upon the necessity of killing and the law of self-defense. It may be added that the defendant in this case, as in the case of People v. Lewis, was upon his own premises.

In the case of People v. Maughs, 149 Cal. 253, 259, 86 Pac. 187, 190, the court gave the following instruction:

"No man has a right to kill another in self-defense unless such killing is really or apparently necessary for such defense. Before a person can justify taking the life of a human being on the ground of self-defense, he must, when attacked, employ all reasonable means within his power, consistent with his safety, to avoid the danger and avert the necessity for the killing."

Commenting upon this instruction the higher court said:

"No exposition is necessary to show that the giving of this instruction, which imposed upon the defendant the duty of flying, and forbade him the right to stand his ground, was error and of such gravity as to demand a reversal."

In the Maughs Case the man who was killed was in his own house, and the defendant was an employé, so that it follows that no matter where a person may be, if he has a right to be there, if he is wrongfully attacked he may stand his ground, and in necessary self-defense slay his assailant where, as a reasonable man, he has grounds to apprehend he is in danger of losing his life or suffering great bodily injury at the hands of his assailant. This doctrine is also announced in the following cases: People v. Baldocchi, 10 Cal. App. 42, 101 Pac. 28; People v. Cytz, 11 Cal. App. 702, 106 Pac. 257.

That the error was prejudicial in this case is emphasized by the fact that the prosecution, it appears, tried the case in part on the theory that it was the duty of the defendant to flee, even if the deceased was the aggressor.

[3, 4] Carl Paaske, the principal witness for the prosecution, was asked on cross-examination a number of questions, which were intended to show hostility on his part to the defendant. It is elementary that the defendant was entitled to ask such questions; and it was a matter of no little consequence to him to bring out the fact, if it were a fact, that the witness was biased and prejudiced against him, in order that the jury in weighing his testimony might take that circumstance into consideration. People v. Thomson, 92 Cal. 506, 28 Pac. 589. Objections to those questions were sustained on the ground, as to one of them, that it assumed a fact not in evidence, and, as to the others, they were impeaching questions, and, being such, that no foundation was laid.

As to the first of these objections, we do not see that the question to which it was directed was open to this objection, but, even if it were, the fact assumed was wholly immaterial, and has no bearing on the issues of the case; and, as the sole purpose of the question was to call the attention of the jury to the bias of the witness, we think the question might well have been permitted. As to the other objection, it is true that the question did not include the circumstances of time, place, and persons present. But it does not appear that it was intended to be an impeaching question. The witness might have answered in such a way as to show animus to the defendant. For example, to the last of these questions, "Now, isn't it a fact that since this shooting occurred you have stated to different people out there in the neighborhood, referring to Mr. Webber [the defendant], that 'the damned son of a bitch ought to be hung'?" the witness might have answered in the affirmative. Defendant's counsel might have been satisfied with such answer as proving their contention of bias. On the other hand, the witness might have answered, "No," and the defendant would then be bound by the answer owing to the form of the question, unless followed by a proper impeaching question.

It was error to exclude the proffered testimony. In People v. Jones, 160 Cal. 358, 117 Pac. 176, a witness had testified that he did not know a man when he fell, but did know him when he arose, and was asked this question:

"Did you not testify that you did not know the man until later at the preliminary examination?"

An objection was made that no foundation was laid, and the objection was sustained. In considering this the court says:

"A misconception seems to exist upon the subject of the permissibility of inquiries such as this. To such a question the objection here stated is usually interposed, and usually the objection is sustained upon the ground that the question is intended to impeach, and, being intended to impeach, the 'proper foundation' of time, place, circumstances, and persons present is not laid, because these matters have not been called to the attention of the witness. It is true that, when a question is asked for the purpose of impeachment, its 'foundation' must be laid, to the end that the witness' attention may be called to every circumstance which will tend to refresh his memory and prevent him from falling into error. But it by no means follows that every such question is, or is meant to be, an impeaching question. Frequently such questions may be properly asked upon collateral matters where the answer would bind the questioner without right to impeach. Frequently they are designed to test the recollection of the witness, and frequently, as in the instance before us, the question is proper, though ultimately, and according to the answer which may be made, it will or will not be followed by a strictly impeaching question. Thus it was proper to ask the witness if he had so testified. His answer might have been that he did not, when an impeaching question would properly follow. His answer might have been that he did so testify, with explanation of the variance between his answers, in which case no impeaching question would be necessary; and it is an unwarranted curtailment of legitimate cross-examination to exclude such questions, as was here done, upon the ground that they are necessarily impeaching questions and the proper foundation for them had not been laid." People v. Brilliant, 58 Cal. 214, 217; People v. Hart, 153 Cal. 261, 94 Pac. 1042; People v. Jones, 160 Cal. 358, 117 Pac. 176; Doudell v. Shoo, 20 Cal. App. 424, 129 Pac. 478; People v. Costa, 142 Pac. 508.

For the errors above pointed out, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

PISTOLESI v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 1587.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 25, 1915.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE ⇐167—APPEAL—DELAY IN PROSECUTING—DISMISSAL.

Code Civ. Proc. § 890, subd. 1, providing that judgment of dismissal without prejudice to a new action may be had when the plaintiff voluntarily dismisses the action before it is finally submitted, or fails to prosecute the action to judgment with reasonable diligence, provided a counterclaim has not been made, or affirmative relief sought, etc., does not apply, where petitioner was sued in a justice's court and set in judgment, and appealed to the superior court, which denied his motion to dismiss for want of prosecution, after answer was filed, to give the appellate court jurisdiction to issue a writ of mandate to force the superior court to such action, the statute applying to an action pending in the justice's court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 647-651, 654; Dec. Dig. ⇐167.]

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE ⇐167—DISMISSAL—DELAY IN PROSECUTING APPEAL.

Whether an action pending on appeal to the superior court from the justice's court shall be dismissed for lack of diligence in its prosecution does not depend on what the law is as to actions pending in the justice's court, but must be determined under Code Civ. Proc. § 980, prescribing the powers of the superior court on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 647-651, 654; Dec. Dig. ⇐167.]

3. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE ⇐167—DISMISSAL—DELAY IN PROSECUTING APPEAL—STATUTE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 583, providing that any action commenced shall be dismissed by the court in which the same shall have commenced, or to which it may be transferred, on motion of the defendant after due notice to the plaintiff, or by the court of its own motion, unless such action is brought to trial within five years after the defendant has filed his answer, etc., is not applicable to a case where defendant in a justice's court appealed from an adverse judgment to the superior court, and the plaintiff failed for more than five years to prosecute the appeal or bring it on for trial after answer, the action having been neither commenced in, or transferred to, the superior court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 647-651, 654; Dec. Dig. ⇐167.]

4. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE ⇐167—DISMISSAL—DELAY IN PROSECUTING APPEAL—POWER OF SUPERIOR COURT.

Where defendant, after an adverse judgment in a justice's court, appealed to the superior court, and eventually moved such court for dismissal of the action for plaintiff's failure to prosecute it or bring it on for trial for more than five years, the superior court could resort to its inherent power to pass on the motion to grant or deny it without the aid of statutory authority.

Petition for writ of mandate by G. Pistolesi against the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco and others. Writ denied.

O. F. Meldon and L. C. Pistolesi, both of Sausalito, for petitioner. Samuel M. Samter, of San Francisco, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is a petition for a writ of mandate to compel defendants to dismiss an action pending in said superior court. The sole question involved is: Does section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure apply to actions pending in the superior court on appeal thereto upon questions of fact from the justice's court?

The essential facts are these: On the 22d day of November, 1904, the action out of which this proceeding grows was commenced. Within the time prescribed by law the answer of the defendant therein was filed, and on the 2d day of May, 1905, judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff therein, W. P. Johnson, against the defendant, G. Pistolesi (who is the petitioner here), for a certain sum, together with interest and costs. From that judgment Pistolesi perfected an appeal to the superior court, stating that such appeal was taken upon questions of both law and fact; and the papers in the action were accordingly, as required by law, transmitted to the superior court. The case has never been tried in the superior court, and on the 27th day of December, 1913, the defendant, Pistolesi, served the plaintiff, Johnson, with a notice that he would move the superior court for an order dismissing the action because of the plaintiff's failure for more than five years to prosecute it or bring it on for trial after answer filed. This motion was made and denied.

It is conceded that, if the superior court was vested with discretion as to whether or not the motion should be granted, this court cannot interfere with that court's conclusion. But it is claimed by petitioner, as before stated, that, more than five years having elapsed after the commencement of the action, the mandatory provision of subdivision 2 of section 583 applies, and that therefore the superior court should have dismissed the action. Respondent, on the other hand, insists that section 583 is inapplicable to a case brought to the superior court on appeal from a justice's court, and that the granting or denying of a motion to dismiss such appeal, when it is taken on questions of both law and fact, is a matter resting within the sound discretion of the superior court, citing subdivision 1 of section 890 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] We think that neither this subdivision nor section 583 is applicable to this case. The former provides when a justice's court may dismiss an action pending before it for failure to prosecute the same to judgment, and makes the granting or denying of the motion a matter of discretion. We think this section applies to an action pending in the justice's court, and not to an appeal pending in the superior court in such an action.

[2] The case of Hubbard v. Superior Court, 9 Cal. App. 166, 98 Pac. 394, is not in conflict with this position. There the summons had not been served within three years after the action was commenced; and all this court held was that the subdivision of section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which is now section 581a of that Code, did not apply to actions commenced in the justice's court, but that the case was controlled by section 890. Whether or not an action pending on appeal to the superior court shall be dismissed for lack of diligence in its prosecution does not depend upon what the law is as to actions pending in the justice's court (section 980), and there is nothing in the case referred to holding to the contrary.

[3] Nor do we think section 583, Code of Civil Procedure, is applicable to this case. It reads as follows:

"* * * Any action heretofore or hereafter commenced shall be dismissed by the court in which the same shall have been commenced or to which it may be transferred on motions of the defendant, after due notice to the plaintiff or by the court of its own motion, unless such action is brought to trial within five years after the defendant has filed his answer. * * *"

This action was not commenced in the superior court, nor can it be regarded as having been "transferred" to that court "on motion of the defendant"; the latter language aptly describing only an action transferred to a court of identical jurisdiction in another county.

[4] Although it appears to us plain that neither of the sections referred to applies to this case, the superior court could yet, as it did, resort to its inherent power to pass on the motion and grant or deny it. "It is settled by numerous decisions in this state that the superior court, without the aid of statutory authority, has the power to dismiss an action because of the failure of the plaintiff to prosecute it with reasonable diligence." Romero v. Snyder, 167 Cal. 216, 138 Pac. 1002. There it was held that, if only a demurrer, and not an answer, was filed, the provisions of section 583, Code of Civil Procedure, did not apply, but that the court under its general jurisdiction might dismiss the action for failure to prosecute it with reasonable diligence, and would be limited in so doing only by a sound discretion.

The court in the present case denied the motion; and it is not claimed, if this is a case for the exercise of discretion, that there has been any abuse thereof.

It follows from what has been said that the writ should be denied; and it is so ordered.

PEPPER v. VEDOVA. (Civ. 1445.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 25, 1915.)

1. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS $\S$ 37—RESCISSION FOR FRAUD—INTENT—PLEADINGS.

In an action to rescind a sale on the ground of fraud, where the complaint averred that misrepresentations concerning the essential qualifications of the chattels sold were false, were known to be false by the vendor, and were willfully, falsely, fraudulently, and deceitfully made, sufficiently charges an intent to defraud the person to whom they were made, and who relied upon them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. $\S$ 66-80; Dec. Dig. $\S$ 37.]

2. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS $\S$ 53—RESCISSION FOR FRAUD—INTENT—FINDINGS.

In an action to rescind a sale of horses for fraud and misrepresentations, a finding of the court, which set forth specifically the representations, recited the elements of their falsity, and then stated that such representations were willfully, falsely, and fraudulently made, sufficiently responded to the issue of fraud, as presented by the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. $\S$ 109-111; Dec. Dig. $\S$ 53.]

3. SALES $\S$ 120—BREACH OF WARRANTY—STATUTE.

Under Civ. Code, $\S$ 1786, providing that breach of warranty entitles the buyer to rescind a contract of sale, but not an executed sale, unless the warranty was intended by the parties to operate as a condition, the question may be determined by the essential nature of the warranties themselves, and if the false representations went to the essence of the value of the property the warranty was an essential condition to the sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. $\S$ 294; Dec. Dig. $\S$ 120.]

4. SALES — 120 — RESCISSION — BREACH OF WARRANTY — SALE OF HORSES.

Where the warranty was that a pair of farm horses were a well-matched team, would work together under harness for farm work, were not balky, had no bad habits, and were physically sound and without fault, blemish, disorder, or disease, the warranty was such in its nature as to form a condition of the contract, justifying rescission for breach.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 294; Dec. Dig. — 120.]

5. SALES — 38 — BREACH OF WARRANTY — RESCISSION — GROUNDS — KNOWLEDGE OF VENDOR.

Under Civ. Code, § 1786, providing that a breach of a warranty entitles the buyer to rescind a contract of sale, but not an executed sale, unless the warranty was intended to operate as a condition, whether the seller knew the falsity of his representations, or intended to commit a fraud in making them, is immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 65-77, 85; Dec. Dig. — 38.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edgar T. Zook, Judge.

Action by Lewis G. Pepper against G. Vedova. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Martinelli & Greer, of San Rafael, for appellant. Frederick L. Berry, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an action to rescind a contract for the purchase of a team of horses. The plaintiff alleges that the defendant willfully, falsely, fraudulently, and deceitfully stated and represented to the plaintiff the said team of horses of which he was then and there possessed "to be a well-matched team, to work together under harness for wagon and general farm work, not balky, no bad habits, physically sound and without fault, blemish, disorder, or disease"; that the plaintiff, not being a horseman, nor experienced in horses or in their purchase, relied and depended upon the defendant's aforesaid representations, knowing nothing to the contrary regarding said team; that the representations of the defendant were false in a number of essential particulars set forth in the complaint, of all of which the defendant had full knowledge at the time the representations were made. The complaint was otherwise sufficient in point of form as to the requisites of an action for rescission. The defendant did not demur to the complaint, but answered, specifically denying its averments, and the cause went to trial upon the issues thus presented.

The court found that the defendant, being possessed of the team of horses, "willfully, falsely, and fraudulently stated and represented said team to be then and there a well-matched team, to work together under harness, a true pulling team under harness for wagon and general farm work, not balky, and physically sound, no bad habits, without fault, disorder, or disease." The court also found that the plaintiff had relied upon these representations of the defendant, and had been deceived thereby in purchasing said team, and also specifically found that the horses were defective in the particulars set forth in the complaint, and judgment was thereupon rendered in favor of the plaintiff for the rescission of the sale. The appeal is from this judgment, and is presented upon the judgment roll alone.

The two main contentions of the appellant are: First, that the complaint is insufficient in the respect that it does not contain an allegation that the representations of the defendant upon which the plaintiff relied were made by the defendant with intent to defraud; and, second, that the findings do not respond to the issue of fraud presented by the pleadings in the respect that they do not set forth the facts constituting the fraud.

[1, 2] We do not think that the contention of the appellant in either of these respects can be sustained. The case as presented by the pleadings has two aspects. It may be treated as an action to rescind a contract on the ground of fraud; and viewed from this aspect we think that a complaint which avers that representations, such as those made respecting the essential qualities of the property involved in this action, were false and were known to be false by the persons making them, and were willfully, falsely, fraudulently, and deceitfully made, sufficiently avers an intent to defraud the person to whom they were made, and who relied upon them in purchasing the property. Spreckels v. Gorrill, 152 Cal. 383, 92 Pac. 1011. We think, also, that the findings in the case, viewed from this aspect, which set forth specifically the representations made, and also specifically recite the elements of their falsity, and which then proceed to find that these representations were willfully, falsely, and fraudulently made, sufficiently respond to the issue of fraud presented by this aspect of the case.

[3-5] The other aspect in which the pleadings present this cause is that of an action to rescind a contract for the breach of an essential warranty as to the quality of the property sold. Viewing the case from this aspect, the complaint and findings amply set forth the specific terms of the warranty, the fact of its falsity, and the specific nature and extent of its breach. The contention of the appellant that an action cannot be brought to rescind an executed contract for the breach of a warranty of the kind in question here, under the terms of section 1786 of the Civil Code, cannot, we think, be sustained. That section of the Code provides that:

A "breach of a warranty entitles the buyer to rescind an agreement for sale, but not an executed sale, unless the warranty was intended by the parties to operate as a condition." Civ. Code, § 1786.

Whether the parties to an executed contract of sale intended that its warranties should operate as a condition may be determined from the essential nature of the warranty; and if, as in this case, the false representations as to the quality of the property go to the essence of its value, and render it useless, and hence valueless, to its purchaser, it would follow necessarily that the warranty was an essential condition of the sale, and that upon the discovery of its breach the purchaser would have a right to rescind his contract under this section of the Code. Stockton Sav. & L. Soc. v. Giddings, 96 Cal. 84, 30 Pac. 1016, 21 L. R. A. 406, 31 Am. St. Rep. 181; Hoult v. Baldwin, 67 Cal. 610, 8 Pac. 440; Merrifield v. McClay (Or.) 142 Pac. 587.

From this aspect of the case it would be entirely immaterial whether the defendant knew or did not know the representations to be false, or did or did not intend to commit fraud in making them. It is not necessary to either plead or prove an intent to deceive in making such representations. Spreckels v. Gorrill, supra. The proof of their falsity, and of their essential nature as a vital element entering into the contract of sale, would be sufficient to entitle the purchaser to rescind. Both of these elements fully appear in the complaint and in the findings of the court. In all other respects the findings are sufficient to sustain the judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

CAMOZZI v. COLUSA SANDSTONE CO.
(Civ. 1299.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 30, 1914. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 23, 1915.)

1. PLEADING — CERTAINTY — DUPLICITY.

That the complaint in a single count charges several acts of negligence does not render it uncertain, where the several acts are clearly specified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 39, 64; Dec. Dig. —18.]

2. NEGLIGENCE — PROOF — VARIANCE.

Where the complaint in a single count charged several acts of negligence, plaintiff may rely upon any one of the several acts, or may show that all of the acts concurrently caused his injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 200-216; Dec. Dig. —119.]

3. PLEADING — DEFECTS — WAIVER.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 431, the defect in a complaint which united in one count several causes of action is waived, where not attacked by special demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 1355-1359, 1361-1365, 1367-1374, 1386; Dec. Dig. —406.]

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS — AMENDMENTS — EFFECT.

The original complaint in one count charged three grounds of negligence, the negligent operation of the machine by which the injury was inflicted, the employment of an incompetent operator, and negligence in failing to instruct and warn plaintiff. The amended complaint, filed after the limitation period had run, consisted of two counts. The first charged general negligence, and the second alleged incompetency of the operator of the machine. Held, that the amended complaint did not state a cause of action different from that stated in the original complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 543-547; Dec. Dig. —127.]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT — INJURIES TO SERVANT — ACTIONS — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY.

In a personal injury action by a servant, evidence held to warrant a finding that his injuries resulted from the negligence of a fellow servant, whose incompetency was known to the master.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 973-975, 978-980; Dec. Dig. —279.]

6. MASTER AND SERVANT — INJURIES TO SERVANT — NEGLIGENCE OF MASTER — PRESUMPTION.

While it is presumed that an employer has performed his duty in selecting competent fellow servants, the incompetency of a servant may be of such a character as to rebut the presumption.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 877-908, 955; Dec. Dig. —265.]

7. MASTER AND SERVANT — INJURIES TO SERVANT — ACTIONS — EVIDENCE.

In a personal injury action, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that plaintiff's injuries resulted from the negligence of the operator of a crane.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 950-952, 954, 959, 970, 976; Dec. Dig. —276.]

8. MASTER AND SERVANT — INJURIES TO SERVANT — JURY QUESTION.

In a personal injury action by a servant, the question of his contributory negligence held for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1080, 1090, 1092-1132; Dec. Dig. —289.]

9. TRIAL — INSTRUCTIONS — APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE.

Where the evidence of the incompetency of a fellow servant was sufficient to go to the jury, instructions on that issue were warranted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 505, 594-612; Dec. Dig. —252.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Emerico Camozzi against the Colusa Sandstone Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

C. H. Wilson, of San Francisco, for appellant. James Boyer, of San Francisco, for respondent.

HART, J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by him, so it is alleged, through the negligence of the defendant. The trial was by jury, who awarded the plaintiff the sum of $4,525; the court entering a judgment accordingly. The defendant brings the case here on appeal from said judgment and the order denying its motion for a new trial.

The first assignment of error presented for consideration is that the plaintiff in amending his complaint under leave to do so granted by the court, set up a new cause of action, which was barred by the statute of limitations. The original complaint was in one count, and alleged that the accident by which the plaintiff received the injury for which he seeks by this action to recover reparation by way of damages was proximately caused by the defendant by three different forms of negligence, viz.: (1) The negligent and careless operation of the machine by which the injury was inflicted. (2) By the employment of an incompetent and inexperienced person to operate the machine, and who was operating it at the time the accident occurred. (3) That the plaintiff was inexperienced in the duties in connection with said machine which he was required to perform, and which he was engaged in performing when the accident resulting in his injury occurred, that he was therefore unfamiliar with the risks and dangers incident to the discharge of said duties, and that he was not instructed or warned of such risks and dangers by the defendant.

The defendant demurred to said complaint on general and special grounds; the special ground being that the complaint was, in certain particulars pointed out therein, uncertain. The court overruled the demurrer, and when the cause was called for trial, and after the impanelment of the jury, counsel for the defendant moved the court for an order requiring the plaintiff to elect upon which of the several causes of action so alleged in the complaint he intended to rely for a recovery. The court denied this motion. After some other proceedings and discussion bearing upon the averments of the complaint, and after the court had ordered stricken from the complaint the third cause of action stated therein, based upon the inexperience of the plaintiff in working on or about the machinery which was responsible for the accident, etc., the trial was proceeded with.

After the plaintiff had rested his case, he having presented testimony in support of the allegations of the complaint, counsel for the defendant moved for a nonsuit on the ground, generally stating it, that the evidence wholly failed to support the averments of the complaint in any essential particular. The court denied the motion. Thereafter the court granted a motion by counsel for the defendant to discharge the jury and for a trial de novo, and at the same time granted, over objection by the defendant, the plaintiff permission to amend the complaint. In due time the amended complaint was filed and served on the defendant.

We are not prepared to assent to the proposition that each of the several alleged acts of negligence charged in the original complaint against the defendant constitutes a separate and distinct cause of action. This point is not here discussed, however, and, as it is unnecessary to consider it here, we shall assume, for the purposes of this case, that they are different causes of action, and, according to the rules of good pleading, should have been separately stated.

[1, 2] The original complaint in one count clearly alleged sufficient facts to state a cause of action on each of the alleged acts of negligence of the defendant, and, notwithstanding that said several causes of action were not separately stated, the pleading was not, as to any of the causes of action so stated, obnoxious to the objection raised against it by the general demurrer. Estate of Ricks, 160 Cal. 467, 473, 117 Pac. 539. Nor was the original complaint amenable to the objection that it was uncertain, the sole special ground of the demurrer. The allegations of the complaint clearly and distinctly disclosed three separate causes of action or acts of negligence. No uncertainty could arise from the complaint in that regard. And the plaintiff had the right to reply upon any one of the alleged acts of negligence as the proximate cause of his injury, or upon all said acts as operating together or concurrently in so causing the damage. "It can make no difference which of those acts caused the injuries, or whether both, operating together, caused them. The result is the same, so far as fixing the liability upon the defendant is concerned." O'Connell v. United Railroads, 19 Cal. App. 36, 47, 48, 124 Pac. 1022, 1027; Worley v. Spreckels Bros. Com. Co., 163 Cal. 60, 69, 124 Pac. 697. And obviously evidence was admissible to prove either of the several pleaded acts of negligence as the proximate cause of the injury, or all as concurring directly to bring about the disastrous result of the accident.

[3] If the original complaint was faulty in form, because the several causes of action were not therein separately stated, the defendant, if it desired a reform of the pleading in that regard, should have specially demurred to it on that ground. Having failed to do so, the court was authorized to disregard that fault in the pleading. Section 431, Code Civ. Proc.

[4] The amended complaint, however, is not susceptible to the construction given it by the defendant. It sets up and separately states two causes of action, so to speak—the one based upon general negligence and the other upon the alleged incompetency of Minchin, an employé of the defendant, to operate the electric crane, the manipulation of which by him, it is alleged, caused the accident whereby the plaintiff was injured. In substantially the same language both said causes of action were set out in the original complaint. Whatever difference exists between the averments of the two pleadings, if any, in stating the two causes of action referred to, so far as the language thereof is concerned, is merely verbal, and not substantial, and the only distinction between them, so far as the form of stating said two causes of action is concerned, is, as stated, that in the amended complaint, unlike the original, said causes are separately set forth. In other words, the plaintiff, by his amended complaint, introduced into the case neither a new cause of action nor any issues different from those tendered by his original pleading.

[5] The next assignment is the asserted insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict. The misadventure, whereby the plaintiff received injuries which resulted in the severing of his left arm between the wrist and elbow, occurred on the 14th day of September, 1909, at the stoneyards of the defendant, in the city of San Francisco. The plaintiff, at the time of the accident, was about 20 years of age, and was then, and had been for a period of 3 months prior thereto, in the employment of the defendant as a common laborer in and about its stoneyards. The remaining general facts, concerning which there is no dispute, may be stated as they are detailed in the brief of counsel for the plaintiff as follows:

"In said yards, and 16 feet above the ground, were two electric cranes, used for the purpose of transporting heavy blocks of stone over the heads of the workmen, from one end of the yard to the other. Each crane was incased in a house or cab, resting on two parallel beams, supporting iron rails, along which the cab and crane were propelled by electric power. This cab, crane, and these parallel beams, with their equipment, were called 'the traveler.' To each end of these parallel beams wheels were attached, which ran along iron rails adjusted to the top of other beams running at a right angle to the cross-beams upon which the crane and cab rested. The operator of the crane occupied a position in the cab, and could simultaneously cause the crane to operate along the cross-beams upon which it rested and the traveler to run up and down the yard. This crane and traveler were manipulated by means of three levers, a brake, and a controller bar, and contained besides a motor, friction clutch, and an arrester, drop chain, sheaves, and other complex machinery, the whole weighing about 40 tons."

It appears that Minchin, heretofore mentioned, an employé of the defendant, was placed in charge of the smaller of the two cranes on the day of the accident. He attempted to operate it, and, encountering difficulty in causing the cranes to move over the tracks, he asked the foreman of the yards to send some one up the ladder to oil the tracks over which the crane ran.

"The foreman," proceeds the brief of counsel, "directed the plaintiff and another laborer, Wilhoff, to perform this task. They ascended the ladder, used for that purpose, to the roof of the pumphouse, shown on the diagram, and in the presence and under the direction of Minchin oiled and wiped the tracks on the cross-beams. When plaintiff was in the act of descending, and had one foot on the top rung of the ladder, and was steadying himself with one hand, while holding cotton waste in the other, Minchin, suddenly and without warning, started the traveler in motion, and ran one of the wheels thereof over the left arm of plaintiff, crushing it to ribbons and forcing him off the ladder, and holding him by the torn ligaments of his arm, suspended in the air, 3 feet from the ladder and 16 feet above the broken boulders below."

One of the claims made by the defendant, and which is pleaded in its answer, is that the plaintiff's injuries were directly received by him through his own inexcusable carelessness, or, to put it more concisely and in strictly legal nomenclature, the defense of contributory negligence is set up in the answer.

The plaintiff testified that, when he reached the top of the pumphouse, against which the ladder by which he ascended was leaning, Minchin directed him and Wilhoff to oil the tracks over which the cab and crane were propelled.

"I took the left track, on which rested the crane house," said the plaintiff, "and oiled the entire track, working easterly on the north track. When I began working, the crane house rested on cross-tracks at the easterly end, and it was moved to the middle portion of the cross-tracks while I was working on the north cross-track. Then some one called for the oil can which Wilhoff had. He was working with me on the south track and had the oil can, so he took the oil can down, and I finished his work of oiling and wiping the rails with waste. In the meantime Minchin came across from the other crane. He was in the other crane, and he came across there, and he crossed in front of me; and he says, 'As soon as you get done the oiling, here is some dry waste; start to clean it at the top.' I started off on the other end again, and started to do the cleaning. After Minchin said that to me, he went right inside the crane house. * * * When I started to oil, the crane house was nearly all on the other end—the eastern end—the furthest away from where I came up the ladder. When I finished oiling, the crane house had been shoved over about the middle, in the middle of the place. * * * I finished Wilhoff's work for him on the south rail, and so when I was through I went to the other one and finished. Minchin said to me: 'As soon as you get through, hurry up; we have got lots of work to be doing to-day.' I started down on the slanting ladder. I had some waste in my hand. I got my left hand on the rail. The waste was in my right hand. In fact, I had hold of the rail with both hands; the waste being held all the time in the right hand. I had one foot, the left, already on the first ladder rung. I was looking below, and was placing the right foot on the ladder below me. My hand caught in the meantime. Then I left go the right one, and I jumped and got hold of the beam. I got hold of the beam, and was intending to pull it out, trying to pull it out as hard as I can. The crane was on my hand. Up to and prior to the time this accident happened, the crane had not been in motion for about 20 minutes, I mean it was 20 minutes since the traveler was in motion. Altogether I was up there about 15 minutes, and while I was up there the traveler had been still and quiet. When I got caught, the traveler dragged me 3 feet off the ladder. I was suspended there. My arm was like a piece of rag. I do not know how the traveler came to get on my arm."

When the traveler struck the plaintiff's arm, he uttered a loud yell, and the machine was thereupon stopped. The plaintiff further testified that he had seen Minchin operate the crane on but one other occasion previously to the time of the accident.

The witness Wilhoff corroborated the plaintiff as to the occurrences prior to the time when he descended the ladder for the purpose of returning the oil pot to the workmen on the ground. He testified that, in order to go down the ladder from the tracks over which the traveler passed, it was necessary to "kneel down on the beam" and "take hold of the big rail to catch the ladder. I think the top round was about two feet below the shed roof." He said that, during the two or three years that he was employed at the defendant's yards, he personally knew of only one other occasion than that on which the accident to plaintiff occurred when Minchin had operated the crane.

Grover C. Braddock was the engineer of the defendant when the accident occurred. He testified that at that time he was operating the large crane, and in the cab thereof, and about 30 feet distant from the spot where the plaintiff was injured.

"I happened to look out," he said "and saw Camozzi caught. I could see Minchin in his cab at the levers at that time."

The witness halloed at Minchin to draw his attention to the situation of the plaintiff, and told him to back up the machine. Minchin was standing and looking out of the window on the north side of the cab, and did nothing toward removing the machine from the arm of the plaintiff.

"I jumped out of my cab," continued the witness; "walked along the travelers and rail beam from my cab to Minchin's. * * * I took hold of the crane. By that time I halloed for help. Several boys came up the ladder, and by that time they got hold of Camozzi, and they halloed to move the crane, and I took hold of it and moved it."

Frank Donald, who had worked for the defendant in its stoneyards as a laborer and sort of messenger for about a year prior to the date of the accident, testified that during all the time he was so connected with the defendant Minchin was acting as timekeeper for the corporation. He stated, however, that he had seen Minchin operate the crane that injured the plaintiff on three or four different occasions within the year during which he (witness) worked for the defendant; that he had also seen Minchin doing some repair work on said crane "once or twice before the accident."

Upon the close of the case for the plaintiff, the jury, under an order of the court, viewed the premises where the accident occurred, and inspected and examined the machine by which the plaintiff was injured.

Minchin, testifying for the defendant, said that his duties as employé of the defendant were those of a "bookkeeper, engineer, general repair man, and mechanic of all kinds." He stated that the small crane (the one which produced the plaintiff's injury) was not operated "steadily, but intermittently, as it was used only to load cars." He testified that he had operated said crane "altogether over a period of about eight months next preceding the accident. Being run intermittently," he continued, "I probably ran the small crane, altogether, two weeks steady time." On being cross-examined, however, Minchin testified as follows:

"I worked for defendants about three years, and while there was, in part capacity, their bookkeeper. Prior to my employment with defendant, I was assistant general manager of the Madera Sugar Pine Company for ten months. Prior to that I was station agent and night telegraph operator for the Southern Pacific Company at Madera continuously for eleven years. Prior to that I was a student in the Polytechnic High School in San Francisco. I never worked for any person, firm, or corporation as a machinist or electrician at any time. I have done no other work since I left school than that which I have just detailed. The officers of the defendant knew of my past occupations and experience. The president, secretary, and vice president knew of my past occupations and experience."

Minchin further testified, on cross-examination, that he could see the plaintiff from his position in the cab.

"Q. Did you look to see Camozzi? A. No, sir. Q. Made no attempt to look? A. No, sir. * * * The last I saw of Camozzi before the accident was as he stood, just about over the pumphouse, on the main axle beam."

Again, on re-direct examination, the witness testified that he did not, after he went into the cabhouse, look to see if Camozzi—

"was on the crane or any part of the appliance. I did not consider it necessary," he proceeded, "to say anything more to Camozzi after telling him that I was through with him and that he could go down. I went into the cab, knowing that it was necessary that we get immediate action. The work was piling up all the time. I considered that he had ample time to get out of the way. If I had thought for a minute that there was a shortage of time for him to get down, I presume I would have made some effort to look for him."

We have in the above statement given enough of the evidence adduced at the trial to show that the jury, having found it to be entitled to belief, were justified in finding therefrom, not only that the crane was, at the time the plaintiff sustained the injuries complained of, negligently operated by Minchin, but that the latter was incompetent to operate the machine, and that his want of experience and knowledge in that line of duty was, or by the exercise of ordinary diligence could have been, known to the defendant when it assigned him to that employment.

From Minchin's own testimony it is clear that he had had very limited experience in the general handling of machinery, and an equally limited experience in the operation of the machine which produced the injuries received by the plaintiff. His regular duty was not to operate the crane. At intervals he performed that duty, and he figured that, by computing those intervals of time together, he had operated it for a period of perhaps two weeks in about eight months. When the machine struck the plaintiff, Minchin either became confused or was ignorant of the course he should adopt in that contingency, and it was necessary for Braddock, the regular operator of the larger crane, to go to Minchin's assistance, and he was required to take hold of the levers and move the machine from the arm of the plaintiff. Minchin appeared to be helpless and unable to control the situation. In short, Minchin's conduct from the very beginning—first, in starting the crane without taking the precaution to see whether the tracks were clear; and, secondly, the manner in which he acted when the plaintiff's arm was struck—constituted some evidence upon which the jury could justly have predicated the conclusion that he was without the qualifications and experience essential to the operation of the machine with safety. And we have the right to assume, in support of the verdict so far as it may imply a finding that Minchin was incompetent to operate said machine, that, from their personal inspection and examination of the crane and its necessary appurtenances, whereby they were able to and doubtless did form an approximately accurate judgment as to the qualifications and experience essential to the proper operation of the machine, the jury concluded that the testimony disclosed that Minchin was altogether incapable of properly operating said machine.

At any rate, upon that phase of the case, we do not feel at liberty to declare that the conclusion of the jury is unwarranted. And, Minchin having testified that the officers of the defendant—the president, secretary, and vice president—knew of his “past occupations and experience,” which, until he became connected with the defendant, involved no duty appertaining to the handling of machinery of any kind, it is manifest that the jury were warranted in concluding that the defendant placed him in charge of the crane, knowing him to be incompetent to manage it with that degree of skill absolutely necessary to the operation of it properly or in such manner as that there would exist no unusual dangers or risk to those necessarily engaged in working on, around or about it. If, however, the evidence of defendant's knowledge of Minchin's incompetency be so slight as to make it doubtful whether the jury would have been justified in so finding, it is, nevertheless, true that, as stated, the officers of the defendant knew the nature of his occupations prior to the time he became an employé of the defendant, and knew that such occupations were in no way concerned with the duty of handling machinery.

[6] There is no evidence which discloses that the officers of the defendant made any investigation into the qualifications of Minchin to operate the crane, and, while the presumption is that the employer has done his duty in this regard (Beasley v. San Jose Fruit, etc., Co., 92 Cal. 388, 28 Pac. 485; Still v. S. F., etc., Ry. Co., 154 Cal. 569, 98 Pac. 676, 20 L. R. A. [N. S.] 322, 129 Am. St. Rep. 177), yet “there can be no doubt under the authorities that the incompetency of an employé at the time of his employment may be of such a character that the evidence showing it will be legally sufficient to rebut the presumption that the employer used the requisite care in his selection, and make the question one for the jury. This is on the theory that the incompetency was of such a nature that a reasonable investigation would have disclosed it, and that, therefore, the employer either knew of it or omitted to make such investigation” (Still v. S. F., etc., Ry. Co., supra). The case here clearly comes within the rule as thus stated.

[7] But, under the record, the verdict is not required to rest alone on the negligence of the defendant arising from the incompetency of Minchin. There can be no kind of doubt that the moving of the crane by Minchin, at the time of the accident, under the circumstances as admitted by him, was the grossest kind of negligence. According to his own testimony, he entered the cab of the crane and started the machine without having first looked out to see whether Camozzi was still on or near the tracks, or in a position in which collision with his body would follow the moving of the crane. His excuse that he “considered that he [Camozzi] had ample time to get out of the way” is obviously no excuse at all. He knew when he entered the cab that Camozzi had not descended or attempted to descend the ladder, and it was therefore his duty, before starting the crane, to look and positively ascertain whether the plaintiff had or had not entirely removed himself from the tracks or the course along which the crane would travel.

[8] As to the defense of contributory negligence, it is to be remarked that there is nothing in the testimony upon which this court can justly sustain the proposition that the finding implied from the verdict against that claim is without justification. It is true that Minchin testified that “the plaintiff and I finished wiping the top of the rail off, and I instructed the plaintiff to go down; that I was finished with him and was going to start the crane.” But opposed to this testimony was that of the plaintiff, who said that, immediately upon completing his work, he started down the ladder, and that it was at that time the crane was suddenly started. It was, of course, for the jury to say, assuming that there was any real conflict between Minchin and the plaintiff on that point, whether the plaintiff started to leave the tracks immediately upon finishing the work for the doing of which he had been required to go upon the tracks, or unnecessarily loitered there after finishing his work.

[9] The only fault found with the charge of the court is that that part thereof relating to the question of the alleged incompetency of Minchin was inapplicable, since, so the contention proceeds, there is no evidence supporting that theory of the plaintiff's case. It is not claimed that the instructions do not correctly state the law pertinent to negligence growing out of incompetency. The reply to the above-mentioned criticism of the court's charge is involved in the views we have expressed respecting the evidence.

We think the judgment and the order should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

(S. F. 6504.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 29, 1915.)

MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨279 — INJURY TO SERVANT — NEGLIGENCE IN EMPLOYMENT OF SERVANTS.

Evidence held not to justify a finding of negligence of an employer in employing an incompetent employé to operate a crane.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Emerico Camozzi against the Colusa Sandstone Company. A judgment of the District Court of Appeal (147 Pac. 107) affirmed a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant applies for a rehearing in the Supreme Court. Denied.

C. H. Wilson, of San Francisco, for appellant. James Boyer, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The application for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal for the Third Appellate District is denied.

In denying such application, we deem it proper to say that we are not satisfied that the evidence was sufficient to sustain a conclusion that the defendant was negligent in the matter of the selection of Minchin to operate the crane, and our denial is not to be taken as an approval of the conclusion of the District Court of Appeal in this respect. As stated in the opinion, the verdict is not required to rest alone on any such negligence, and it is amply sustained by evidence showing negligence on the part of the defendant in the operation of the crane. As we understand the record, no claim was made by the answer that any injury received by plaintiff was caused by the negligence of a fellow servant.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨854—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE — GRANTING OF NONSUIT — GROUNDS.

The correctness of an order granting a nonsuit generally does not depend on the discussion which the trial court indulged in in the course of granting the order, and, where the order was granted on either or both of the grounds on which the motion therefor was made, the action of the court will be sustained.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨217—INJURY TO SERVANT—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

An employé hauling cars over a tramway leading from a lumber yard to railroad tracks knew of the unsafe and insecure condition of the track, and particularly of its frequently recurring state of unrepaired and danger at a particular point where cars were derailed. He had called attention to the particular defect in the track a few days before the derailment, and the employer undertook to repair the defect. The employé saw the repairs made, and knew their extent, and that they were but temporary and insufficient, and that the track would, within a few days at most, be again out of order. Held, that he assumed, as a matter of law, the risk arising from the defect, and he could not recover for injury caused by a derailment.

Where an employé hauling cars over a tramway leading from a lumber yard to railroad tracks could have seen, where a derailment occurred, whether the tramway was in proper condition, but he did not look while driving over the tramway, he was guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery for injury by a derailment.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Guy Ford against the Weed Lumber Company. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. Lyders, of San Francisco, and Bernard Silverstein, of Oakland, for appellant. Linforth & Herrington, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action for damages for personal injuries. The plaintiff appeals from an order granting defendant's motion for a nonsuit.

The testimony introduced on behalf of the plaintiff showed that he was employed by the defendant to drive a team hauling cars over the defendant's tramway leading from its lumber yard to the tracks of the California Northwestern Railway Company. In the course of his employment it was the duty of the plaintiff several times each day to haul along the said tramway of the defendant four or five flat cars loaded with lumber, taking them to the track of the railroad company, and returning to the yards of the defendant with a string of empty cars. He had been in the employ of the defendant for about three months, and during all of said time had been daily doing said work. On the day of the accident the plaintiff had taken a load to the tracks of the railway company, and was returning with the string of empty cars when he reached a place along the tramway where a switch goes off into what is called in the record yard No. 2. At this point the first and second of the empty cars being hauled by the plaintiff left the track, and the second car struck him, knocked him down, and caused the injuries set forth in the complaint. The evidence further discloses that the accident arose out of the fact that one of the rails at the point of contact with the switch had slipped from its place, leaving a space of several inches, and causing the car wheel to leave the track. The tramway or track on which the accident occurred appears to have been a sort of wobbly and makeshift affair; the ties being laid practically on top of the ground without ballast, and the rails being held to their place with spikes, which frequently worked loose and caused the track to part in a way similar to that which brought about the accident in question.

These facts were known to the plaintiff, having been within his almost daily observation since his employment began; in fact, within a few days before the date of the accident the cars had become derailed at the same point and for the same cause while the plaintiff was engaged in hauling them, and this had occurred at least four or five times to the plaintiff during the three months of his employment by the defendant. On the last of these occasions prior to the accident the plaintiff complained about the condition of the track to the official of the defendant who had control of the tramway, who promised to have the defect repaired immediately, and, in fact, did so. The repair was made by plugging up the holes in the ties where the old spikes had worked loose and driving in new spikes. The plaintiff saw and knew the nature and extent of these repairs, and knew also that they were temporary in character, and, in the nature of things, but a few days, at most, would pass before the same trouble with the track would be renewed at that point and the same danger of derailment arise.

The foregoing facts were shown during the presentation of the plaintiff's testimony, and when he rested his case the defendant moved for a nonsuit upon the ground that "it affirmatively appears from the testimony offered and without conflict that the plaintiff was hurt through his own negligence; that his own negligence contributed to his injury, and that, if the condition of this track was what he says it was, it was one of the risks that he assumed, and he cannot recover in this action." This motion for nonsuit was granted, and from the order granting the same the plaintiff appeals.

[1] The appellant urges as his first ground for reversal that the motion for nonsuit was granted by the court upon a different ground than those upon which it was made, and in support of this contention he quotes the language of the court made use of in the course of granting the motion. In view of the fact, however, that the court by its order granted the motion for nonsuit generally, it may not be contended that its order in granting the same is to be limited by the discussion which the court indulged in in the course of granting the order, and, if it appears that the motion for nonsuit should have been granted upon either or both of the grounds upon which the motion for nonsuit was made, then we think that the action of the court in granting the same should be sustained. An examination of the evidence convinces us that the court was not in error in granting the nonsuit.

[2] Upon both of the grounds upon which it was made, without further reviewing the evidence in the case than as above set forth, it seems quite plain to this court that the plaintiff, from the time of the commencement of his employment down to the moment of the accident, was at all times perfectly familiar with the unsafe and insecure condition of the track, and particularly with its frequently recurring state of unrepaired and danger at the particular point where the accident in question occurred, and that under these circumstances it must be held that, in continuing in his employment with this full knowledge of its dangers, he assumed the risk which arose from the aforesaid condition.

It is, however, urged that the plaintiff is to be relieved from his assumption of this risk of his employment by the fact that he called attention to the particular defect in the track a few days before his injury, and that, the defendant having undertaken to repair that defect, plaintiff was warranted in assuming that it would be properly repaired. This might be true were it not for the fact that, according to the plaintiff's testimony, he saw the repairs made and knew precisely their extent, and that they were but temporary and insufficient, and that the track at the particular point of the injury would within a few days, at most, be again out of order, notwithstanding its present repair.

[3] Further than this, the place upon the track where the derailment occurred was clearly within the plaintiff's line of vision while he was hauling the cars along and over that portion of the track. This being so, we think that his act in driving over this particular spot at the time of the accident in question, without employing his faculties of vision to see whether or not the track was in proper condition, was in itself an act of negligence on his part contributing to his injury and sufficient to prevent a recovery in this case.

We think, therefore, that upon both grounds the motion for nonsuit was properly granted. The order is affirmed.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Guy Ford against the Weed Lumber Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed by District Court of Appeal 147 Pac. 112. Petition for hearing in the Supreme Court denied.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Stanley A. Smith, Judge.

Charles L. Pryal was convicted of crime, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Jacob M. Blake, of San Francisco, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction in a proceeding against the defendant for a criminal libel. The alleged libel consisted in the writing of a letter by the defendant to one Isabel Abbott, containing a charge of forgery against one John A. Sands, consisting of the statement that "Sands forged both Mrs. Pryal's and my name to certain legal documents." Upon the trial of the case the defendant Pryal not only made no effort to prove the truth of this assertion, but expressly admitted, and upon this appeal concedes, that the charge of forgery was untrue. The defendant, however, upon the trial undertook to offer in evidence a large number of documents, including certain letters which had passed between himself and said Sands while the latter was acting as his attorney in a certain litigation, which letters and documents the defendant contended were admissible as tending to show his intention in uttering this libel, and as proving that it was published with good motives and justifiable ends. The court ruled out this evidence; and it is this ruling of the court that the defendant now chiefly relies upon as error requiring a reversal upon this appeal.

[1, 2] We think the trial court committed no error in refusing to admit the evidence thus proffered by the defendant. The charge against the prosecuting witness of having committed the crime of forgery was made in express and unmistakable terms. That it was false the defendant admits, and that it was made and published willfully and deliberately there can be no question. The defendant was therefore, in uttering this libel, engaged in the deliberate commission of an unlawful act for the purpose of injuring another. The Code of Civil Procedure, in enumerating those presumptions which are deemed conclusive, gives (1) a malicious and guilty intent from the deliberate commission of an unlawful act for the purpose of injuring another. Code Civ. Proc. § 1962. If this general provision of our law has application to prosecutions for criminal libel, it would necessarily follow that the proffered proof of the defendant was properly excluded by the court. The appellant, however, contends that this rule is modified in its application to trials for criminal libel, by the terms of sections 250 and 251 of the Penal Code. These sections read as follows:

"Sec. 250. An injurious publication is presumed to have been malicious if no justifiable motive for making it is shown.

"Sec. 251. In all criminal prosecutions for libel, the truth may be given in evidence to the jury, and if it appears to the jury that the matter charged as libelous is true, and was published with good motives and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted. The jury have the right to determine the law and the fact."

It is a well-known rule of construction that the various sections of our Code are to be read together and harmonized if reasonably possible. When the foregoing sections of the Penal Code are read together in the light of section 1962 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it would seem quite plain that proof of an innocent motive or intent in publishing a willful defamation admittedly false will not be permitted in the face of the conclusive presumption of malice which the latter section of the Code creates, unless such proof shows the publication to be in the nature of a privileged communication, and that this was its nature is not contended for in this case.

It may be further said in this connection that it cannot be reasonably urged that the proofs which the defendant herein presented, and which the court refused to submit to the consideration of the jury, contain within themselves any evidence tending to show that the defendant published this defamation from good motives and for justifiable ends. In point of fact the contrary would seem to be the case, for the offered proof only tended to show that difficulties had arisen between the defendant and Mr. Sands, his attorney, over the latter's conduct during certain legal proceedings, resulting in an effort on the part of the defendant to discharge his counsel. The proofs were offered for the purpose of showing that the client had cause for his dissatisfaction. This sort of evidence, instead of showing that the motive for publishing a willful defamation was an innocent one, would rather tend to strengthen the presumption that the publication was inspired by ill will and was malicious.

[3] Counsel for appellant very strongly contends that the court in excluding this evidence has erred in a more vital respect. He urges in an elaborate brief and extended oral argument that the express provisions of the state Constitution (article I, § 9) and of the Penal Code (section 251) that in the trial of a case of criminal libel "the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact" takes away from the court the right to exclude any evidence from the jury which has any bearing whatever on the relation of the parties or the circumstances of the publication; and that in respect to such evidence it is the province of the jury to pass upon the law regulating its admissibility and effect at every stage of the case. We do not understand that the foregoing provisions of the Constitution and statute are to be construed as extending thus far, nor as intended to take away from the court its power and duty to pass upon the admissibility of evidence during the progress of the trial. To adopt the theory or apply the rule contended for by appellant would be to work a revolution in our American system of procedure, and leave the judge in cases of criminal libel powerless to prevent the influx into the case of all sorts of irrelevant matter having as the only purpose of its introduction the prejudice of the minds of the jurymen to the extent of finding verdicts in favor of or against defendants in utter disregard of both the law and the facts material to the issues in the case. The Supreme Court of this state, in People v. Seeley, 139 Cal. 118, 72 Pac. 834, has laid down the rule of construction of the provision of the Constitution and section of the Code under review; and this court is in no position to undertake to overrule that decision and even if it were disposed—which it is not—to disagree with the views of the court as therein exhaustively set forth.

The appellant further contends that the trial court erred in the giving of certain alleged contradictory instructions relating to the power of the jury in its verdict to determine the law and the facts of the case. We do not find, however, upon an examination of the entire body of the court's instructions any sufficient contradiction to warrant a reversal of the case. Neither do we find that there was any misdirection on the part of either the district attorney or of the jury in connection with the return of the latter for further instructions after some hours of deliberation upon the case. The jury apparently desired light upon the question as to what constituted a publication; and the court gave it that light by reading to it section 252 of the Penal Code.

We discover no reversible error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

CRIMINAL LAW §1179—APPLICATION FOR HEARING—DECISION OF COURT OF APPEAL.

The statement in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, on affirming a conviction for a criminal libel, that the evidence, instead of showing that defendant's motive "was an innocent one, would rather tend to strengthen the presumption that the publication was inspired by ill will and was malicious," justified the denial of his application for a hearing in the Supreme Court.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Stanley A. Smith, Judge.

Jacob M. Blake, of San Francisco, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. The application for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal for the First District is denied. The denial of the application is not to be taken as an expression by the members of this court to the effect that evidence tending to show that a publication complained of was published with good motives and for justifiable ends is not admissible in a criminal prosecution for libel or as approving what was said by the District Court of Appeal on this proposition. Upon this question we express no opinion. It further appears on the face of the opinion of the District Court of Appeal that the testimony here offered was of such a nature that it would not have tended to show either that the publication was made with good motives or for justifiable ends, but, as said by the Court of Appeal, instead of showing that the motive for publishing the matter "was an innocent one, would rather tend to strengthen the presumption that the publication was inspired by ill will and was malicious."

This statement sufficiently justifies the denial of the application.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; William P. Lawlor, Judge.

Mary Vaughn was convicted of an attempt to commit grand larceny by trick and device, and she appeals. Affirmed.

N. C. Coghlan, of San Francisco, Gail Laughlin, of Denver, Colo., and M. A. Ross, of San Francisco, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. With reference to the point made upon the sufficiency of the information, we are satisfied that the demurrer was not well taken. The information follows the language of the statute, and therefore, in our judgment, is sufficient.

[1] In regard to the alleged misconduct of the district attorney, we think that, while the comment of that officer upon the conduct and character of the defendant may have been somewhat harsh, nevertheless it was apparently but a deduction from the evidence; and this the prosecuting officer was entitled to make. He had a right to draw any inference from the testimony that in his judgment was logical. Moreover, there was no request to the trial court to admonish the jury to pay no heed to the alleged misconduct. It has been the rule of this court—and we think the settled rule generally—that, even though misconduct be conceded, in the absence of a request to the court to admonish the jury to pay no heed to it, complaint of the same will not be heard in this court.

[2] Coming to the point that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict, we are satisfied that, if the transaction involved in the information and established in evidence at the trial had been completed to the extent of the defendant obtaining the money of the complaining witness and retaining it for her own use, she would have been guilty of the crime of grand larceny by trick and device. The fact that she was prevented from the commission of the crime by any circumstances whatever does not alter the situation; and if upon the completion of the transaction she would have been guilty of the crime of grand larceny by trick and device, then we are of the opinion that the evidence is sufficient to sustain the finding of the jury, implied from their verdict, that she was guilty of an attempt to commit grand larceny by the same means.

[3] It is true that the inference might perhaps be drawn from the evidence that it was the intent of the defendant to get the money of the complaining witness under the pretense that she had some secret influence, and would use it and the money to procure a dismissal of a criminal prosecution then pending against the son of the complaining witness. But, on the other hand, that her intent was to keep the money for herself, rather than to resort to any such course, we think, may be fairly inferred from all of the evidence. True, a verdict of "not guilty" might as well have been founded upon the same evidence; but that was a question for the jury, and not for this court; and if there is any evidence at all to sustain the theory suggested by the people and upon which the case was tried, and the defendant convicted in the lower court, the verdict must stand as far as this court is concerned.

[4] With reference to the contention that a new trial should be had because the sentence of the trial court was postponed beyond the statutory time, that point is answered by the ruling of the lower court, as evidenced by the minutes of the court, and which is conclusive upon that point, particularly in view of the fact that a motion was made to correct the minutes by the defendant. Upon the hearing of that motion evidence was taken as to what was said and done by all of the parties—counsel and court—upon the matter of pronouncing judgment. The court, after hearing the evidence, in which there is some conflict, determined the motion adversely to the defendant, and in effect made an order correcting the minutes, showing that the postponement of the pronouncing of judgment was had at the request of the defendant. That being so, the point cannot be availed of upon this appeal.

[5] Finally, complaint is made of the exclusion of certain testimony proffered for the purpose of showing that the defendant exhibited the note obtained from the complaining witness to one Miss Fairbrother, the president of the Woman's Club, before any trouble concerning the transaction arose. It is argued that such testimony, if admitted, would have tended to rebut the inference resulting from other testimony in the case, that the defendant obtained the note for her own benefit, and that, if such testimony had been admitted, it would have tended to show that the note was obtained for the benefit of the Woman's Political Club, and to be used for legitimate purposes. But there is nothing in the proffered testimony to indicate that it was the purpose and intent of the defendant to transfer the note to Miss Fairbrother, as president of that club, in consideration of the influence of the club to be exercised on behalf of the son of the complaining witness. In other words, it is not apparent to us that the proffered testimony tended in any degree to establish the fact that the defendant's purpose and intent in procuring the note was to give it to the Woman's Club; but, on the contrary, the testimony of the defendant herself would seem to negative such an intent; and, if that be so, the testimony was immaterial and irrelevant, and to a certain extent a self-serving declaration. Moreover and finally, even if the testimony had been admitted, we cannot see from a reading of the entire evidence that the result would have been any different. We feel convinced from a consideration of the entire evidence that, if the particular evidence, the exclusion of which is now complained of, had been admitted, the verdict might as well have been "guilty." In other words, conceding for the sake of argument the error complained of, it did not contribute to or control the verdict.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 1179—REVIEW ON REHEARING.

The Supreme Court will grant a rehearing in a case directly appealable to a District Court of Appeal only when error appears on the face of the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, or when a doubtful and important question is presented on which the Supreme Court desires further argument.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. $\S$ 3001; Dec. Dig. $\S$ 1179.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; William P. Lawlor, Judge.

Mary Vaughn was convicted of an attempt to commit grand larceny, and appeals. Affirmed by District Court of Appeal. Application for rehearing denied.

For opinion of the District Court of Appeal, see 147 Pac. 116.

N. C. Coghlan, of San Francisco, Gail Laughlin, of Denver, Colo., and M. A. Ross, of San Francisco, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. In denying appellant's application for a hearing in this court, after decision by the District Court of Appeal for the First District, we deem it proper:

First. To again call attention to what we said in People v. Davis, 147 Cal. 346, 81 Pac. 718, and in Burke v. Maze, 10 Cal. App. 211, 101 Pac. 438, 440, as to the rule governing our action on such applications, in causes which, under the provisions of the Constitution, are directly appealable to a District Court of Appeal, rather than to this court.

Second. To say, in regard to the discussion in the appellate court opinion of the ruling of the trial court in refusing to admit certain testimony offered, that the same does not show that error was committed in said ruling, and that our action in denying a hearing in this court is had without regard to what is said in the opinion as to the effect of said ruling upon the verdict.

LAWLOR, J., having been trial judge herein, does not participate in the foregoing.

ORO ELECTRIC CORPORATION v. RAILROAD COMMISSION et al. (S.F. 6724.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 24, 1915.)

1. RAILROADS ⇨9—FINDINGS OF RAILROAD COMMISSION—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Under Public Utilities Act (St. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 55) § 67, providing that the findings of the Railroad Commission on questions of fact are final and not subject to review, the Commission's finding of the ultimate fact that public convenience and necessity did not require the exercise of the privileges sought by petitioner precluded consideration of the sufficiency of the evidence or the soundness of the reasoning upon which such finding was based, on application for certiorari to review its orders.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 12-19; Dec. Dig. ⇨9.]

2. RAILROADS ⇨9—RAILROAD COMMISSION—CERTIFICATE OF NECESSITY.

Under Public Utilities Act (St. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 43) § 50, declaring that no electrical corporation, etc., shall begin the construction of a line or system without first obtaining from the Railroad Commission a certificate that the present or future public convenience and necessity require such construction, the granting or withholding of the certificate is an exercise of the state's power to determine whether the rights and interests of the general public will be advanced by the proposed public service, which is an entirely different question from that of the local control of streets by the power vested with such control.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 12-19; Dec. Dig. ⇨9.]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨58—POWERS—CONSTRUCTION.

Language purporting to define the powers of a municipal corporation is to be strictly construed, and any fair, reasonable doubt concerning the existence of the power is resolved by the courts against the corporation, and the power is denied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 145-147; Dec. Dig. ⇨58.]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨59—POWERS—EXPRESS AND IMPLIED POWERS.

A municipal corporation possesses and may exercise powers expressly granted, powers necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to powers expressly granted, and powers essential to its declared objects and purposes, not simply convenient, but indispensable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 149; Dec. Dig. ⇨59.]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨285—CHARTER POWERS—REGULATION OF PUBLIC UTILITIES—ORDER OF RAILROAD COMMISSION—CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

The charter of the city of Stockton (St. 1889, p. 577), in effect when Public Utilities Act (St. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 43) was adopted, as amended by St. 1905, p. 832, provided by section 30, p. 859, subd. 3, for the regulation of electric lights, etc., and the use of streets; by subdivisions 46 and 47 it was authorized to make regulations necessary to execute the powers vested by charter or by general laws and enforce all local regulations not conflicting therewith, and by subdivisions 28 and 34 to grant street franchises to steam and street railroads. Const. art. 11, § 19, then in force, authorized any company incorporated therefor to exercise the franchise of a public light company in every city having none, subject to city regulation, and as amended in 1910 declared that cities might operate their own public light plants and that companies operating such plants should be subject to the regulation of charges. The Broughton Act (St. 1905, p. 777) authorized cities to grant franchises for transmitting electric light and power. Petitioner, who had obtained a city franchise to operate an electric light, heat, and power system, with the use of streets, etc., was denied a certificate under Public Utilities Act (St. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 43) § 50, declaring that no electric company shall construct its system without the Railroad Commission's certificate of public convenience and necessity. Held, that the Constitution merely placed utilities under the control provided by charter or organic law, and did not of itself empower cities to regulate public utilities; that the Broughton Act did not authorize any city to grant a franchise; and that its charter provisions gave the city of Stockton no power to grant a franchise to a public electric company, so that the requirement of a certificate of public convenience and necessity did not impair any power of control vested in the city, and the Commission's denial of such certificate was within its jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 757; Dec. Dig. ⇨285.]

In Bank. Petition for writ of certiorari by the Oro Electric Corporation, petitioner, against the Railroad Commission of the State of California and John M. Eshleman and others, members thereof, to review certain orders of the Commission. On rehearing. Orders affirmed.

Samuel Knight and Goodfellow, Eells & Orrick, all of San Francisco, and C. L. Neumiller, and E. I. Jones, both of Stockton, for petitioner. Max Thelen and Douglas Brookman, both of San Francisco, for respondents. Chickering & Gregory, of San Francisco, Cummins, Stearns & Milkewitch, of Chicago, Ill., Nutter & Orr, of Stockton, H. H. Trowbridge, O'Melveny, Stevens & Millikin, and Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, all of Los Angeles, A. H. Sweet, of San Diego, Charles P. Cutten, of San Francisco, and Short & Sutherland, of Fresno, amici curiæ.

SLOSS, J. This is a proceeding in certiorari, to review certain orders made by the Railroad Commission in response to an application of the Oro Electric Corporation for a certificate of public convenience and necessity, authorizing said corporation to construct and operate lines for the transmission and sale of electric current for light and power purposes in the city of Stockton and in certain other parts of San Joaquin county. The certificate so sought is provided for in section 50 of the Public Utilities Act (Stats. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 43). This section declares that no street railroad corporation, gas corporation, electrical corporation, telephone corporation, or water corporation shall begin the construction of a street railroad, line, plant, or system, or of any extension thereof, "without having first obtained from the Commission a certificate that the present or future public convenience and necessity require or will require such construction."

At the time of its application, the Oro Electric Corporation had not entered the field which was to be covered by the certificate sought. The Western States Gas & Electric Company was occupying that field, and it appeared before the Commission to oppose the granting of the certificate to the Oro Corporation. The Railroad Commission first, on April 29, 1913, made an order in favor of the applicant, so far as concerned the territory outside of the city of Stockton, excepting a described region adjacent to the city. With reference to the city and the excepted adjacent tract, it gave to the Western States Company a period of 90 days within which to complete certain pending work of reconstruction and to present reduced rates that should be satisfactory to the Commission. The order declared that, if these conditions were complied with, the application of the Oro Company would be denied; otherwise it would be granted. After the 90 days had expired, on August 15, 1913, the Commission made its final order reciting that the Western States Company had complied with the conditions of the prior order, and refusing the certificate that public convenience and necessity required that the Oro Corporation be authorized to sell electricity in the city of Stockton and the adjacent territory described in the order of April 29, 1913. It is sought by this proceeding to annul these two orders.

The attack upon the acts of the Commission was, in the opening brief, based upon a variety of grounds. But, as the proceeding progressed through the successive stages leading to final submission, the matter in dispute was virtually narrowed down to the single question whether, under the reservation to incorporated cities of certain powers of control over public utilities, as declared in section 23 of article 12 of the Constitution and section 82 of the Public Utilities Act, the requirement of a certificate of public convenience and necessity was a prerequisite to the right of the petitioner to engage in the business of furnishing electric light and power within the city of Stockton. The other questions originally raised by the petitioner have been, in effect, determined against it by the decision of this court in Pac. Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Eshleman, 166 Cal. 640, 137 Pac. 1119, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 652, rendered since this proceeding was instituted. In that case the constitutional amendments of 1911, relating to the Railroad Commission and the authority of the Legislature to confer powers upon such Commission, were carefully considered and analyzed. The members of the court who participated in that decision, while differing on some of the questions presented, united in an interpretation of section 23 of article 12 of the Constitution of the state which cuts the ground from under the petitioner's claims: (1) That section 50 goes beyond the powers of supervision and regulation which the Legislature may, under said section 23, confer on the Railroad Commission; and, (2) that the requirement of a certificate of public necessity and convenience constitutes an improper delegation of legislative functions to the commission.

[1] And the same decision fully answers the argument that, on the merits, the Commission was not justified in denying the requested certificate. The validity of section 67 of the Public Utilities Act, in so far as it limits the scope of review by state courts of the acts of the Commission, must be regarded as finally settled by the Telephone Company Case. By that section, the findings and conclusions of the Commission on questions of fact are made final and not subject to review. Here the Commission found the ultimate fact that the public convenience and necessity did not require the exercise of the privileges in controversy, and neither the sufficiency of the evidence, nor the soundness of the reasoning, upon which that finding was based, can be considered on this proceeding.

We are thus brought to the inquiry, already mentioned, whether the power to grant or withhold a certificate of public convenience, conferred upon the Railroad Commission by section 50 of the act, was inoperative within the city of Stockton by reason of the limitations contained in section 23 of article 12 of the Constitution and section 82 of the Public Utilities Act. Section 23 of article 12 declares that every person or corporation engaged in operating any one of certain enumerated enterprises, including the furnishing of light or power to or for the public, is a "public utility subject to such control and regulation by the Railroad Commission as may be provided by the Legislature." It goes on to provide that, from and after the passage by the Legislature of laws conferring powers upon the Railroad Commission respecting public utilities, all powers respecting such public utilities vested in boards of supervisors, or municipal councils, or other governing bodies of counties or municipalities, shall cease so far as they conflict with the powers conferred upon the Commission, "provided, however, that this section shall not affect such powers of control over any public utility vested in any city and county, or incorporated city or town as, at an election to be held pursuant to laws to be passed hereafter by the Legislature, a majority of the qualified electors voting thereon of such city and county, or incorporated city or town, shall vote to retain, and until such election such powers shall continue unimpaired. * * *" Section 82 of the Public Utilities Act is in substance identical with the proviso just quoted.

By an act approved January 2, 1912 (Stats. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 168), the Legislature provided for the elections contemplated by the proviso. No such election has been held in Stockton, and that city has consequently not surrendered any of the powers over public utilities reserved to it by the Constitution and the Public Utilities Act. Did it on December 23, 1911, the date when the Public Utilities Act was approved, or 90 days thereafter, when the act took effect, have any powers which would be impaired by the exercise of the power sought to be exercised by the Railroad Commission in this case?

On December 30, 1912, the city council of Stockton passed an ordinance granting to the Oro Electric Corporation a franchise to construct and operate under and along the streets and public places of the city conduits, poles, wires, and other appliances for transmitting and furnishing electricity for light, heat, and power. It is not necessary to enter into an examination of the scope of the franchise thus actually granted, for, as is pointed out in the briefs, the important consideration is not what the city did, but rather what it had power to do. We must first inquire whether the city of Stockton had power, when the Public Utilities Act took effect, to grant a franchise which would authorize the grantee to engage in and carry on the business of furnishing electricity for light and power within the city. If this question be answered in the affirmative, and in that event only, does it become necessary or proper to inquire whether the exercise of this power in the city is impaired by the provisions of section 50 of the Public Utilities Act?

The present proceeding has been heretofore decided by this court and is now before us pursuant to an order for rehearing. On the original submission the respondents did not question the power of the city to grant franchises for the distribution and sale of electricity. Indeed, the brief filed on behalf of the Commission expressly conceded the existence of such power, and no doubt of the propriety of this concession was suggested by other counsel appearing to oppose the relief sought by the writ. The petitioner, in its opening brief, had claimed that the city possessed this power, both under a freeholders' charter approved by the Legislature on December 20, 1911 (Stats. 1911, Ex. Sess. p. 254), and under the pre-existing charter and other law defining the powers of the city. Under these circumstances, this court did not feel called upon to make a minute examination of the point. Relying upon the concession of the respondents, it contented itself, in the opinion heretofore filed, with a reference to the charter of 1911, stating that:

"It is admitted that this charter conferred upon the city the power to grant franchises to corporations to engage in the business of supplying electricity to the inhabitants of the city and to erect poles, wires, and conduits in the streets for that purpose. * * *

The other questions in the case were then treated on the assumption that the admission of counsel was based upon a correct reading of the charter.

Petitions for rehearing were filed, and in these petitions it was urged for the first time that the charter of 1911 had no application to the case, for the reason that by section 170 of that instrument (Stats. 1911, Ex. Sess. p. 302) it was provided that, for all purposes other than the nomination and election of officers, and taxation and assessment, the charter did not go into effect until a date later than that upon which the Public Utilities Act became effective. The point was well taken, and, notwithstanding its belated presentation, the court concluded that the public importance of the question demanded a rehearing, without regard to the merit of other grounds of attack upon the decision rendered.

We are now, accordingly, required to examine the various provisions, whether of statute, charter, or Constitution, governing the city of Stockton prior to the adoption of the charter of 1911, and to ascertain whether, under those provisions, the city had any power over electric corporations which would be impaired by the exercise of the power conferred upon the Railroad Commission by section 50 of the Public Utilities Act.

Prior to the enactment of the last-mentioned act, the city of Stockton was governed under a freeholders' charter, approved in 1889 (Stats. 1889, p. 577) and amended in 1905 (Stats. 1905, p. 832). That charter contained the following provisions, some or all of which, according to petitioner's claim, conferred authority to grant a franchise or right to engage in the business of selling electric current to inhabitants of the city of Stockton:

By sections 146 and 147 the department of streets was placed in the control of the city council and was declared to embrace "the control of the streets * * *; of the public grounds; of the lighting of streets and public buildings, and of everything of a public nature pertaining to said subjects. * * *"

Section 30 conferred upon the council power to pass ordinances:

"3. To regulate the laying of telegraph or telephone wires in or upon the public streets, erecting of gas and electric lights therein, * * * the use of streets and sidewalks for * * * telegraph posts, and other purposes."

"5. To provide for and regulate * * * lighting * * * of the streets, avenues, and public places."

"17. To provide for * * * such * * * lights, * * * and other supplies of any kind necessary for the convenient transaction of public business."

"25. To * * * determine the maximum rate or compensation to be charged by any person, company, or corporation supplying gas, electric or other illuminating power in this city. * * *"

"26. To regulate the quality, capacity, and location of electric wires, water and gas pipes, mains, and fire-plugs, and to provide for and regulate the construction and repair of hydrants, * * * and such other appliances as may be requisite to utilize the distribution of water, electricity and gas in the streets, public places and public buildings."

"28. To grant franchises permitting any company or corporation to lay and maintain tracks, and to pass, with steam railroads * * * along, upon, and across, * * * any streets of the city. * * *"

"34. To grant franchises for the construction of street railroads on and along the streets of the city."

"46. To make all rules and regulations necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this charter or by general laws in said city."

"47. To make and enforce all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws and the provisions of this charter."

"51. To acquire, construct, purchase, lease, own, control, maintain and operate such public utilities and properties as shall be deemed to be for the best interests of the city."

Section 202 contained a general provision requiring a grant of a franchise to be in specific terms, and declaring a forfeiture for nonuser.

Before proceeding to an analysis of these provisions, it will be well to refer briefly to the distinction, drawn by counsel against the petitioner, between a franchise, or grant of a right, to engage in the business of furnishing electric current, and the narrower grant of a right to occupy the streets of the city in carrying on that business. On the former hearing, it was, as we have already stated, taken as conceded that the city of Stockton had the power to grant franchises "to engage in the business," as well as to "erect poles, wires, etc., in the streets for that purpose." It thus became unnecessary to consider whether section 50 of the Public Utilities Act "impaired" the power of a city, if that power extended merely to control of the use of its streets in connection with a public service; the right to engage in such service being derived from some source other than a grant by the city. If the power of a city were thus limited, we think it is entirely clear that the power would not be impaired by the provision of the Public Utilities Act requiring a certificate of public necessity and convenience as a condition precedent to the construction or extension of the plant or line of a public utility.

[2] The granting or withholding of the certificate is an exercise of the power of the state to determine whether the rights and interests of the general public will be advanced by the prosecution of the enterprise which it is proposed to carry on for the service of the public. See People v. Willcox, 207 N. Y. 86, 100 N. E. 705, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 629. This is an entirely different question from that of the local control of the streets, and power over the two subjects may well be vested at the same time in different governmental bodies, without the one in any way clashing with or interfering with the other.

The Railroad Commission might grant a certificate authorizing a public utility to engage in its business in a given city, but the certificate would not authorize the use of the streets, unless the right to so use them had been given by the authority vested with the power to grant such right. This is recognized by subdivision "c" of section 50 itself, where we find an express provision that the applicant shall furnish to the Commission evidence that the required local consent, franchise, or permit has been obtained. On the other hand, the fact that a city may, in the exercise of its control over its own streets, give or withhold the right to use its streets, has no direct bearing upon the power to decide whether or not a given business, in the conduct of which the use of the streets may be convenient or necessary, shall be carried on. Where there is this limited control, its exercise is not impaired by legislation under which the state reserves to itself the determination of how far, if at all, the given business may be conducted. The city's powers are fully preserved if its streets are not occupied, except by its consent, given as may be provided by law.

Different considerations might prevail where a city had power to confer the right, not only of using the streets, but of conducting a public utility occupation within the municipal borders. This was the situation which, by reason of the concession of the respondents, we were called upon to consider in our former opinion. But since, as will presently appear, we are now satisfied that the charter and other provisions actually in force at the time when the Public Utilities Act took effect gave the city, at most, the limited power above mentioned (i. e., nothing more than the power to grant to electric corporations the right to use its streets), there is no occasion to reconsider, as we are asked to do, the correctness of the views expressed under the mistaken assumption that the city had power to grant franchises to carry on the business of selling electricity to the inhabitants, as well as to use the streets for that purpose. The impropriety of deciding anything more than is necessary to the decision gains added force, in this instance, from the circumstance that, during the pendency of this case, the proviso to section 23 of article 12 has been altered by constitutional amendment approved in November, 1914.

We return to a review of the provisions of the Stockton charter of 1889.

[3] It is thoroughly settled that language purporting to define the powers of a municipal corporation is to be strictly construed, and that any "fair, reasonable doubt concerning the existence of the power is resolved by the courts against the corporation, and the power is denied." 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 89. This rule has been clearly announced by this court in various cases, of which it will suffice to cite Von Schmidt v. Widber, 105 Cal.

151, 38 Pac. 682, and Hyatt v. Williams, 148 Cal. 585, 84 Pac. 41. In the latter case the question was whether, under the very charter we are now considering (as it read prior to the amendments of 1905, by which, among other changes, subdivision 51 was added to section 30), the city of Stockton had power to maintain works for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants of the city with electric light. The application of the rule of strict construction led to a denial of the existence of the power.

[4] In both Von Schmidt v. Widber and Hyatt v. Williams, supra, it was declared as a "general and undisputed proposition of law," quoting from 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 85m (5th Ed.) § 237, that:

"A municipal corporation possesses and can exercise the following powers and no others: (1) Those granted in express words; (2) those necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the powers expressly granted; (3) those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation—not simply convenient, but indispensable."

[5] Using the mode of construction thus indicated, we find in the charter under discussion no language giving power to grant franchises to furnish electric light and power to the inhabitants. Certainly such power is not granted in express terms. Nor can it be said to be either "necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to" the powers expressly granted, or "essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation." The charter provisions which we have quoted go no further than to assert the city council's control over the streets, its power to regulate the laying of wires and the erecting of lights in or upon such streets, to provide for the lighting of the streets, and to fix the rates to be charged for lighting.

It may be conceded that the broad grant of power to control and regulate the streets would, if standing alone, be sufficient to confer authority to determine whether or not the streets may be occupied by light or water companies in furnishing service to the inhabitants and to grant franchises authorizing such occupancy. City of Owensboro v. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co., 230 U. S. 58, 33 Sup. Ct. 988, 57 L. Ed. 1389. So, too, the general grant of authority found in subdivisions 46 and 47 of section 30 of the charter might, if unrestrained by more specific provisions, suffice to empower the city council to grant such franchises to corporations organized to furnish water or light. See City of Joseph v. Joseph Water Works Co., 57 Or. 586, 111 Pac. 864, 112 Pac. 1083; Andrews v. Nat. Foundry, etc., Co., 61 Fed. 782, 10 C. C. A. 60; Levis v. City of Newton (C. C.) 75 Fed. 884; Pike's Peak Power Co. v. Colorado Springs, 105 Fed. 1, 44 C. C. A. 333. But an entirely different position is presented when it is observed that subdivisions 28 and 34 of section 30 make specific and express provision for the grant of franchises for steam and street railroads. There is no express grant of power to confer franchises for furnishing light or power, or for any purposes other than the two specified. The case thus falls within the established rule that where a municipal charter "authorizes the enactment of by-laws in certain specified cases, and for certain purposes, and after this specific enumeration a general provision is added, that the corporation may make any other by-laws or regulations necessary to its welfare, good order, etc., * * * the power which the corporation would possess under * * * the 'general welfare clause,' if it stood alone, may be limited, qualified, or, when such intent is manifest, taken away by provisions specifying the particular purposes for which by-laws may be made." 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. (5th Ed.) § 585. Here the power to grant franchises to electric corporations could, at best, be said to be drawn by inference or implication from the general words of the charter touching control of the streets and the making of rules and regulations of a local, police, and sanitary character. Under the rule of interpretation to which we have just adverted, these general words will not be given the effect of extending power over a given subject covered by the charter (i. e., franchises) to a class of cases outside of those embraced within the grant. The principle is well illustrated in City of St. Louis v. Bell Telephone Co., 96 Mo. 623, 10 S. W. 197, 2 L. R. A. 278, 9 Am. St. Rep. 370. The city had undertaken, by ordinance, to regulate and limit telephone charges. The charter conferred power to "license, tax and regulate" persons engaged in a large number of specified occupations, "and all other business, trades, avocations or professions whatever." Telephone companies are not included in the enumeration, but telegraph companies are. The court held that such companies are "ejusdem generis" with telegraph companies, and therefore included in the words of the final clause. The opinion then considers whether the power to "regulate" gives the right to fix rates. This question was answered in the negative; the court basing its conclusion upon the fact that the charter gives express power to establish ferry rates, to fix the rates for carriage of persons, and of wagonage, drayage, and cartage of property, to regulate the price of gas, and to regulate and control railways within the city as to their fares, hours, and frequency of trips. "These express powers to fix prices, fares, and charges, in these specified cases," says the court, "are followed by no general words. With this specific enumeration of cases where the city may regulate the compensation to be charged, it impliedly appears that such a power was not intended to be given in other cases." Finally, it is held that the result is not affected by a "general welfare" clause contained in the charter.

In City of Stillwater v. Lowry, 83 Minn. 275, 86 N. W. 103, the question was whether villages having a population of less than 3,000 had power to grant franchises for street railways. The statute conferred upon the councils of such villages authority to lay out, open, or change streets, to prevent the incumbering of streets, to ordain and establish "all such ordinances and by-laws for the good government and order of the village, * * * the protection of public and private property, the benefit of trade and commerce * * * as they shall seem expedient," to make, erect, establish, and control waterworks, also to build and control electric light plants, and to govern the streets, highways, and public places. While conceding that power to control and govern the streets might, in itself, be sufficient to authorize the council to permit the use of streets for street railway purposes, the court concludes that no such authority was given by the particular statute in question, for the reasons: (1) That power to provide for railways is expressly given to other municipalities; and (2)—a ground directly applicable here—that the express grant of power to authorize water and light plants indicates that power to authorize street railways was not intended to be covered by the general grant of power to control the streets.

The view that those who framed and adopted the Stockton charter of 1889, and the amendments of 1905, did not intend to vest in the city power to authorize private persons or corporations to enter into the business of furnishing light to the inhabitants, or even to use the streets for that purpose, is strengthened by a consideration of the constitutional provisions then in force. By section 19 of article 11, as it read when this charter was made, and amended, any individual or company incorporated for that purpose was given the privilege, in cities which had no public light or waterworks, of using the public streets, and of laying down pipes and conduits therein, for the purpose of supplying the city and its inhabitants with light or water. The only limitations upon the privilege were that the city might, through its appropriate officer, have direction of the work in the streets, and might make regulations for damages and regulate charges. Here was a direct grant or offer of a grant by the state, to all who chose to avail themselves of it, of all substantial rights included in a franchise to operate a light or water plant in every city in the state. In re Johnston, 137 Cal. 115, 69 Pac. 973; Stockton Gas & E. Co. v. San Joaquin, 148 Cal. 313, 83 Pac. 54, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174, 7 Ann. Cas. 511; People v. L. A. Gas Co., 150 Cal. 557, 89 Pac. 108; Ex parte Keppelmann, 166 Cal. 770, 138 Pac. 346. While this constitutional provision remained in force, its effect could not be destroyed by statute or charter. Indeed, the rights conferred by it, when once vested by an entry upon the streets and the furnishing of light or water, could not be taken away by amendment or repeal of the constitutional grant. Ex parte Keppelmann, supra; Russell v. Sebastian, 233 U. S. 195, 34 Sup. Ct. 517, 58 L. Ed. 912, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1282. There was every reason, therefore, for omitting from the charter any provision authorizing the grant of franchises by the city to light or water companies.

Section 19 of article 11 of the Constitution was amended in 1911 (see St. 1911, p. 2180), and the amended section was in force when the Public Utilities Act took effect. It is contended by the petitioner that, regardless of the Stockton charter, the amended constitutional provision gave to every city the power to grant franchises of the character here involved. The amendment evidenced a change in the policy which the state had declared in adopting the Constitution of 1879; the policy, that is to say, of "making these grants (of franchises to use the streets for distributing water and light) directly through the Constitution itself instead of permitting them to be made by the Legislature or by municipalities acting under legislative authority." Russell v. Sebastian, supra. The amended provision, after declaring the right of municipalities to establish and operate their own works for certain public utilities, including light and power, goes on to state that:

"Persons or corporations may establish and operate works for supplying the inhabitants with such services upon such conditions and under such regulations as the municipality may prescribe under its organic law, on condition that the municipal government shall have the right to regulate the charges thereof."

The language just quoted has been considered by this court in Matter of Russell, 163 Cal. 668, 126 Pac. 875, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 152. Our judgment in the case was reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States in Russell v. Sebastian, supra, but the only question presented to that court was the extent of the right vested in corporations which had occupied the streets of a city prior to the amendment of section 19 of article 11. On the construction of the section, as amended, and its application to utilities which had not undertaken to commence operations while the old section was in force, our decision in Matter of Russell remains unaffected by the action of the higher court. The claim of the petitioner in that case was that the new section made a direct grant to persons or corporations of the right to enter upon the streets of a city to operate the works specified in the section, subject only to the power of the city to prescribe conditions relating to the manner of establishing and operating the works. With that interpretation this court did not agree. After reviewing the conditions which had existed before the amendment, we concluded that section 19 of article 11 had been changed for the very purpose of declaring a new policy with respect to public utilities in cities. Instead of seeking, as the old section had done, to destroy the possibility of monopoly, the new section was adopted under the influence of an opinion, more or less generally held, that public utilities in cities should be conducted either by the municipality or by a properly regulated monopoly. "The amendment," says the court in the Russell Case, "shows an intention to allow this policy to be determined by each city in its own behalf." The intention is found in the provision that the work may be established and operated upon such conditions and under such regulations as the municipality may prescribe. The conditions and regulations are to be such as the municipality may prescribe "under its organic law." It seems clear to us that this language contemplates a power of control exercised either in accordance with conditions and regulations defined in the organic law itself or in accordance with conditions and regulations defined by some municipal agency to which the necessary authority has been given by the organic law of the city. In other words, the section does not, ex proprio vigore, give to all cities the power to regulate public utilities operating within their borders; it merely places the utilities under such control as may be provided for by the charter or other organic law of the city. The contrary view was suggested in Ex parte Russell, but a positive expression on the point was said to be unnecessary, since in that case the charter of the city in question (Los Angeles) contained adequate provisions respecting the granting of franchises. After a further study of the new section, we cannot believe that the words conferring on cities a power to control certain public utilities "under their organic law" constitute a grant of unlimited or specific power over such utilities (except in the matter of rates) to any city whose organic law contains no provision for the exercise of such power. It would follow, from the foregoing, that the amendment of section 19 of article 11 did not vest in the city of Stockton any power which would be impaired by section 50 of the Public Utilities Act.

Finally, the petitioner claims that the "Broughton Act" (Stats. 1905, p. 777) gave to every city authority to grant franchises for transmitting electric light and power. But we think it clear that this act merely places restrictions upon the granting of franchises, where the power to grant such franchises exists otherwise. As was said in Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Pasadena, 161 Cal. 265, 272, 118 Pac. 796, 799, the "whole purpose" of the act "was to prescribe the method and conditions upon which the franchises included within its terms might be granted by the legislative body authorized by law to make the grant." The act does not authorize any board or council to grant a franchise.

The result of all that has been said is that, in our judgment, the city of Stockton did not, when the Public Utilities Act was passed or when it became effective, have power to grant to electric corporations franchises permitting them to furnish electricity to the inhabitants of the city, if, indeed, it had the power to grant the limited franchise or right to use the streets for that purpose. It follows that the requirement of a certificate of public convenience and necessity, contained in section 50 of the act, did not impair any power of control vested in the city. This conclusion disposes of the case, since it compels the holding that the Railroad Commission did not exceed its jurisdiction in taking cognizance of the application of the petitioner for a certificate or in denying such certificate. The orders under review are affirmed.

HABEAS CORPUS $\Leftrightarrow$ 30 — CRIMINAL COMPLAINT—KNOWLEDGE OF COMPLAINANT.

Habeas corpus will not lie to determine whether complainant, in a criminal complaint, had actual knowledge of the facts which he swore to positively in such complaint.

In Chambers. Petition by E. K. Vaughan to a chief justice for a writ of habeas corpus. Petition denied.

E. R. Vaughan, of Santa Rosa, for petitioner.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. Petition for writ of habeas corpus, addressed to the Chief Justice.

The petition for writ of habeas corpus states no sufficient ground for the issuance of such a writ. The complaint against petitioner, by which the proceeding under which he is held in custody by the sheriff of Sonoma county was instituted, does not purport to have been made on information and belief, and was sufficient to authorize issuance of the warrant of arrest. Habeas corpus will not lie to inquire into the question whether the complainant had actual knowledge of the matters as to which he swore positively in such a complaint.

Application for writ denied.

VICTORIA HOSPITAL ASS'N v. ALL PERSONS, ETC. (S. F. 6176.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 24, 1915.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS $\Leftrightarrow$ 315—DISTRIBUTION OF ESTATE—DECREE—CONSTRUCTION.

A decree of distribution containing a provision that any other property not known or discovered which might belong to the estate or in which the estate might have an interest is distributed to the residuary legatee and devisee was sufficient to pass title to whatever interest by reversion or otherwise deceased had at the time of her death in property to which she had executed a conveyance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1298-1314; Dec. Dig. ☞315.]

2. DEEDS ☞155—CONSTRUCTION—CONDITION SUBSEQUENT.

A deed will not be construed to create a condition subsequent if it will bear any other reasonable construction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 488-495; Dec. Dig. ☞155.]

3. DEEDS ☞155—CONSTRUCTION—CONDITION SUBSEQUENT—FORFEITURE CLAUSE.

It is not essential to the creation of a condition subsequent by a deed that a forfeiture clause should be inserted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 488-495; Dec. Dig. ☞155.]

4. DEEDS ☞155 — CONSTRUCTION — CONDITIONS—"ON CONDITION THAT"—"ON CONDITION."

While the words "on condition that" are apt and appropriate words both in their technical and popular sense to create a condition in a deed, and generally the words "on condition" are the precise and technical terms by which an estate is created, they do not necessarily create it if the whole deed shows a different intent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 488-495; Dec. Dig. ☞155.]

5. DEEDS ☞155—CONSTRUCTION—CONDITION SUBSEQUENT — "CONDITION" — "CONSIDERATION."

A deed to a corporation chartered "to provide medical attendance and medicines and hospital accommodations" recited that grantor, "for the consideration hereinafter stated," gave, granted, aliened, and confirmed to such corporation, "its successors and assigns forever," the said property, "to have and to hold the said premises under said party of the second part, its successors and assigns forever," and that "this deed is made upon the express condition and for the consideration that the real property hereby conveyed and the income therefrom shall be used by the party of the second part for benevolent purposes and in all respects in compliance with the objects for which said party of the second part is formed," and "it is hereby provided that the hospital to be erected on this land be named the V. Hospital." Held, that the deed did not create a condition subsequent, but that the word "condition" was used with the same idea as "consideration," which was that the real property and the income were to be used for the purposes of compliance with the object of the corporation.

6. TRUSTS ☞31—CREATION BY DEED—CONSTRUCTION.

Such deed did not create a trust for the benefit of the grantor's residuary legatee.

7. QUIETING TITLE ☞50—RELIEF GRANTED—SUFFICIENCY OF DECREE.

Where a grantor conveyed land to a corporation chartered to build and maintain a hospital, the right, if any, which the grantor's residuary devisee would have in such property by virtue of the common-law rule that when a corporation is dissolved its real estate reverts or escheats to the grantor, was only a mere possibility not coupled with an interest, which right would be created by the dissolution of the corporation, and consequently was not such an interest that it was necessary to mention and provide for in a decree in a suit to quiet title brought by the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. § 100; Dec. Dig. ☞50.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action to quiet title by the Victoria Hospital Association against G. A. Wright and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant G. A. Wright appeals. Affirmed.

Olney, Pringle & Mannon and J. R. Pringle, all of San Francisco, for appellant. F. D. Brandon and John L. McNab, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is an action under the McEnerney act, so called, to establish plaintiff's title to a lot of land, 100 by 100 feet, at the corner of Nineteenth and Valencia streets in the city and county of San Francisco. By the judgment it was decreed that plaintiff is "the sole owner and seised in fee simple absolute" of said property, that its title thereto "is good and valid," that the same "is hereby established and quieted as against all the world" except as to a certain deed of trust to secure a loan, "and that no other person has, holds or is entitled to any mortgage, or other lien, estate, right, title, interest or claim" in and to said property or any part thereof. We have here an appeal upon the judgment roll from said judgment by one G. A. Wright, the only person contesting the claim of plaintiff in the court below.

The findings show the facts relied upon by appellant for a reversal or modification of the judgment.

Plaintiff has only such interest in the property as it obtained by virtue of a deed executed and delivered to it by Mary A. Lapidge, a widow, on February 24, 1908, she being then the owner thereof. By this instrument, "for the consideration hereinafter stated," she gave, granted, aliened, and confirmed to appellant, "its successors and assigns forever," the said property, "to have and to hold * * * the said premises, * * * unto said party of the second part, its successors and assigns forever." The habendum and tenendum clause was followed by this provision, viz.:

"This deed is made upon the express condition and for the consideration that the said real property hereby conveyed and the income therefrom, shall be used by the said party of the second part for benevolent purposes and in all respects in compliance with the objects for which said party of the second part is formed, pursuant to its articles of incorporation, a copy of which was filed in the office of the Secretary of State of the state of California, on the 28th day of November, 1888.

"It is hereby provided that the hospital to be erected on this land be named the Victoria Memorial Hospital."

The objects for which plaintiff corporation was formed, as set forth in its articles of incorporation, were as follows, viz.:

"Second. That the purposes for which it is formed are, to provide medical attendance and medicines, and hospital accommodations, for the sick; to establish and conduct an hospital to be known as the 'Victoria Hospital'; to acquire, buy, sell or encumber real estate or other property in connection with the objects of the association; to take charge of the property thereof; and generally to do and perform, in accordance with the law and the by-laws thereof, all and every act and thing requisite or desirable to carry out the objects of the association."

Plaintiff entered into possession of the property under said deed, and has ever since been in such possession. It is not claimed that plaintiff has ever used or threatened to use said property for any purpose other than the purposes stated in the deed.

[1] Mrs. Lapidge died testate in the year 1909. No mention was made in her will of this property. Appellant was named therein as sole and residuary devisee and legatee. In due course, all the property of her estate was distributed to appellant, this property not being specifically referred to in the decree. The decree, however, contained a provision to the effect that any other property not now known or discovered, which may belong to said estate, or in which the estate may have an interest, is distributed to appellant. This, according to the decisions, was sufficient to pass title to whatever interest deceased had at the time of her death in this property. See Humphry v. Protestant Episcopal Church, 154 Cal. 170, 97 Pac. 187.

The act under which this proceeding was brought provides that:

The judgment "shall ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, * * * and shall be binding and conclusive upon every person who at the time of the commencement of the action, had or claimed any estate, right, title, or interest in or to said property, or any part thereof."

It is not disputed that the effect of the decree appealed from is to conclusively establish the fact to be that plaintiff is the sole owner, in fee simple absolute, of all the property, and that neither appellant nor any one else has any interest whatever, "legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent," therein.

1. It is claimed that the language of the deed creates a condition subsequent, upon the failure to perform which appellant, as successor of Mrs. Lapidge, will become entitled to re-enter and become the absolute owner of the property. It is urged that for this reason the judgment appealed from is erroneous, in that it neither so limits the interest of plaintiff, nor saves the right of appellant.

We are of the opinion that the deed should not be so construed.

[2-4] It is, of course, a familiar principle that such conditions are not favored in law because they tend to destroy estates, and that no provision in a deed relied on to create a condition subsequent will be so interpreted if the language of the provision will bear any other reasonable construction. As said in Hawley v. Kafitz, 148 Cal. 395, 83 Pac. 249, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 741, 113 Am. St. Rep. 282:

"There must be language used which is so clear as to leave no doubt that the grantor intended that an estate upon condition subsequent should be created—language which ex proprio vigore imports such a condition."

It has, however, many times been held that it is not essential to the creation of a condition subsequent that a forfeiture clause should be inserted, such as that a failure to comply with said conditions will render this conveyance null and void, and said premises shall revert to said first party (see Papst v. Hamilton, 133 Cal. 631, 66 Pac. 10, approved in Fitzgerald v. County of Modoc, 164 Cal. 493, 129 Pac. 794, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1229; Quatman v. McCray, 128 Cal. 285, 60 Pac. 855), though some such clause would appear to be extremely desirable and in some cases absolutely necessary for the purpose of showing clearly and unmistakably the intent of the grantor. As said in City of Portland v. Terwilliger, 16 Or. 465, 19 Pac. 90, such provisions "sometimes become very important in construing the language of the conveyance when its meaning would otherwise be left in doubt." As said in Hawley v. Kafitz, supra:

"While no precise form of words is necessary to create a condition subsequent, still it must be created by express terms or by clear implication."

It is true that the words "on condition that" are apt and appropriate words, both in their technical and popular sense, to create a condition, and it appears to be the generally accepted doctrine that, as the words "on condition" are the precise and technical terms by which an estate or condition is created, such a phrase is sufficient to create a conditional estate, unless there is something else in the deed indicating the contrary. As said in Guild v. Richards, 16 Gray (Mass.) 309:

"In such cases, to use the quaint language of the books, 'without any more saying, the feeoffee hath an estate upon condition.'"

See, also, Clapp v. Wilder, 176 Mass. 332, 57 N. E. 692, 50 L. R. A. 120.

This is the accepted doctrine in this court (see Papst v. Hamilton, supra; Hawley v. Kafitz, supra; Fitzgerald v. County of Modoc, supra), and such words ex proprio vigore import such condition, in the absence of other language inconsistent therewith. But it has never been held here, and we do not understand it to be the rule elsewhere, that, simply because these words are used, we necessarily have an estate on condition. It may freely be conceded that with such words we have such an estate unless upon consideration of the whole deed a different intent is indicated. As was said in City Mission v. Appleton, 117 Mass. 326:

"Although the words 'upon condition,' in a conveyance of real estate, are apt words to create a condition, any breach of which will forfeit the estate, yet they are not to be allowed that effect when the intention of the grantor, as manifested by the whole deed, is otherwise," or when "the intent of the parties as gathered from an examination of the whole instrument" is otherwise. Stanley v. Colt, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 119, 18 L. Ed. 502.

They must be given that effect "in the absence of anything appearing in the deed to the contrary." See Clapp v. Wilder, supra.

[5] Coming to a consideration of the deed here involved: We have as the grantee a corporation, the expressed objects of which, according to its articles of incorporation, are "to provide medical attendance and medicines, and hospital accommodations, for the sick" and "to establish and conduct an hospital to be known as the 'Victoria Hospital.'" The grantor purports, "for the consideration hereinafter stated," to give and grant to this corporation, "its successors and assigns forever," a lot of land 100 by 100 feet. She declares that said corporation, "its successors and assigns," are to have and hold the same forever. Then follows the declaration that the deed "is made upon the express condition and for the consideration," etc. Said "condition" and "consideration" are "that the said real property * * * and the income therefrom shall be used by the said party of the second part for benevolent purposes and in all respects in compliance with the objects for which said party of the second part is formed," according to its articles of incorporation on file, in other words, to assist in providing medical attendance, etc., for the sick, and to assist in establishing and conducting a hospital to be known as the Victoria Hospital. The statement, "It is hereby provided that the hospital to be erected on this land be named the Victoria Memorial Hospital," clearly constitutes no part of the expressed "condition" and "consideration," and indicates nothing more than that it was then contemplated that a hospital would be erected on this property. The "condition" or "consideration" was that the real property and the income thereof were to be used for benevolent purposes, in compliance with the objects for which the corporation was organized.

It is to be observed that there is nothing herein limiting the use to be made by the corporation of this property, so long as such use is for one or more of the objects for which the corporation was formed. There is nothing that can be construed as requiring the property to be used as a site for a hospital. "The said real property," and "the income therefrom," are to be "used" by the grantee for the same purposes, i. e., for any of the benevolent purposes for which the corporation was formed and exists. It could not be held, for instance, that there would be any forbidden diversion of any of the property, corpus or income, if all of the same were devoted by the corporation to the payment of charges incurred by it for medical attendance and medicines and hospital accommodations for the sick, although no hospital was ever established or conducted by it. Such a use would be strictly in accord with the language of the alleged condition or consideration, being one "for benevolent purposes," in all respects in compliance with the objects for which the corporation was formed. The same would be true of an absolute sale of the property with the bona fide intent to devote the proceeds to the objects of the corporation, or of continuing to hold the property as income-producing property, using the income for such objects. It is to be noted that the deed grants the property to the party of the second part and "its successors and assigns" forever, thus implying to some extent at least the right on the part of the corporation to dispose of the property, free of restriction or limitation in so far as the grantee is concerned. The considerations we have referred to materially differentiate the case at bar from those wherein the language was such as to require the property itself to be retained and used for a prescribed purpose, or to require improvements of a certain character to be constructed thereon, etc. The use here prescribed is one that does not necessarily have to do with the land itself at all, being entirely consistent with an absolute disposition thereof free of all claims in the hands of the grantee of the corporation. It is further to be noted that the grant is made "for the consideration hereinafter stated," and that the "consideration" thus referred to is the matter relied upon as expressing a condition. The words "upon the express condition" are followed by the words "and for the consideration that the said real property * * * shall be used," etc., indicating that the words "condition" and "consideration" were used as expressing the same idea. If the words "upon the express condition" be here given the technical effect claimed for them by appellant, they are inconsistent with the words "for the consideration" which simply imply a promise or covenant on the part of the grantee to use the property in the way prescribed, rather than a mere condition having no promissory force. We are utterly unable to read this deed as manifesting an intent on the part of the grantor to express a condition affecting the title to this land, and are of the opinion that, notwithstanding the use of the words "upon the express condition," an examination of the whole instrument fairly indicates the intent on the part of the grantor to convey the property absolutely to the corporation in consideration of its mere promise to use the same for the purposes specified, being all the purposes for which the corporation was organized and exists, with the result that we have nothing more than a covenant on the part of the grantee to the effect that the property will be so used. See Fitzgerald v. County of Modoc, supra. In Papst v. Hamilton, 133 Cal. 631, 66 Pac. 10, specially relied upon by appellant, the conveyance to certain persons as "joint tenants, with right of survivorship as such," was "upon the conditions, however, that the premises shall be used solely for the purpose of erecting, furnishing, keeping and maintaining thereon an academic or collegiate school" for certain purposes, "and for a residence or residences thereon for the professors," etc., "and for no other purpose whatever," and there was nothing in the deed to indicate any other intent than that manifested by these words. As said in Fitzgerald v. County of Modoc, supra, in regard to this, "it was clear that the estate was upon condition."

[6] 2. The claim that appellant has some contingent reversionary interest in this land, based upon the theory that even if it be held that the conveyance was not upon condition, nevertheless a trust was created thereby, cannot, in our opinion, be sustained. Much of what we have already said as to our construction of the instrument is in point here. It appears to be conceded on both sides that the corporation was, as is indicated by the record, one organized and existing purely for certain charitable purposes. The conveyance, as we read it, was an absolute one of all of the interest of the grantor in the land to the corporation, for any and all of said purposes, with the result that the corporation can lawfully use the property in any manner it sees fit for any of the purposes for which it may lawfully use any property owned by it. The conveyance was, in substance, an absolute grant to the corporation for all the purposes of the corporation, in consideration of the implied undertaking on the part of the corporation that it would use the property for such purposes. The use to be made of the property was not so limited by the grantor as to indicate an intent to impose a trust on this land. As is said by counsel for plaintiff:

"The only trust, if it can be so denominated, is one imposed upon the conscience of the grantee and its directors, viz., that the property shall be used for some of the benevolent purposes contemplated by the articles of incorporation. Those articles contemplated sale, incumbrance, and every other beneficial use to which the property or its proceeds might be put."

We think that the cases relied upon by learned counsel for appellant in this regard are all distinguishable from this upon the facts. In our own Schlessinger v. Mallard, 70 Cal. 326, 11 Pac. 728, relied on by appellant, the conveyance appears to have been specifically made "in trust for the uses and purposes of a cemetery." The cases cited by appellant in this connection involve conveyances dedicating the land itself to some particular use, for which it is to be kept intact and retained, and express prohibitions as to sale, mortgage, etc., were contained in some of such conveyances.

[7] 3. It is said that the old common-law rule, to the effect that when a corporation is dissolved such real estate as it then has "reverts or escheats" to the grantor or donor, is in force in this state in so far as charitable corporations are concerned. It is consequently urged that appellant, as the successor of Mrs. Lapidge, has some sort of contingent interest in this property which should be protected by the decree, so that in the event that plaintiff corporation is dissolved at some future time, and at the time of such dissolution it still owns this property, he may receive the same. We do not deem it necessary to determine whether the doctrine that the real estate owned by such a corporation reverts or escheats to the donor upon its dissolution exists in this state, though it has been stated in one of our decisions that it does. See People, etc., v. President and Trustees of College of California, 38 Cal. 174. We are satisfied that, assuming for all the purposes of this decision the rule here to be in all respects as claimed by appellant, nevertheless he now has at most, so far as any of this property is concerned, only a mere possibility, not coupled with an interest. Whatever legal interest in the property he may ever have, on this account, will be created only by the dissolution of the corporation at a time when it still owns this real property. The rule is practically a rule of succession. It is the dissolution of the corporation with the real property still belonging to it that creates the right, and until that event happens, the donor is as much without any legal interest in the land as any stranger. See generally Nicoll v. N. Y. & Erie R. R. Co., 12 N. Y. 121. Obviously the decree here will not bar the assertion by appellant of any such right of interest if he subsequently acquires it. It is necessary to ascertain and determine in such a proceeding as this only existing interests.

"A mere possibility, such as the expectancy of an heir apparent, is not to be deemed an interest of any kind." Section 700, Civ. Code.

We cannot see that appellant at best has anything more than such "a mere possibility." It is very clearly and definitely held in one of the cases cited by appellant (Trustees v. Venable, 159 Ill. 215, 42 N. E. 836) that such a naked possibility of a reverter is not assignable and will not pass to a devisee. It is there said:

"He (the grantor) had no future estate in the land, but only what is called a naked possibility of reverter, which is incapable of alienation or devise."

Our own Civil Code provides that "a mere possibility, not coupled with an interest, cannot be transferred." Section 1045. So it is very much to be doubted whether appellant, simply as the residuary devisee and legatee under Mrs. Lapidge's will ever could have any interest under the rule referred to. But as to this it is, of course, not necessary to decide here.

No other matter suggested by the briefs appears to merit discussion.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

WILSON v. BLAKE et al., City Council of Vallejo. (Sac. 2257.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 23, 1915.)

1. ELECTIONS ⇨166 — BALLOTS — DESIGNATION OF OFFICES—DIFFERENT TERMS.

Vallejo City Charter, § 15, subd. 17, provides that on the ballot the offices to be filled "shall be arranged in separate columns in the following order: * * * For commissioner (if any) vote for (giving number)." Subdivision 21 of that section provides that, in case there are two or more persons to be elected to any office, as that of commissioner, the candidates equal in number to the number to be elected receiving the highest number of votes for such office shall be declared elected. Section 6, subd. 1, makes the law of the state applicable to the elections of the city and to the canvass of the returns. Pol. Code, § 1211, subd. 2, declares that in canvassing the votes, if it is impossible to determine the voters' choice for any office to be filled, the ballot shall not be counted for such office, and section 1197, subd. 8, provides that, if any two or more officers are to be elected for the same office for different terms, the term for which each candidate for such office is nominated shall be printed on the ballot. At a special election held on petition for the recall of two commissioners whose terms expired at different times, the names of the two commissioners and of the two opposing candidates were printed on the ballot without any designation as to the term for which any of them were nominated. Held, that the state law should govern in such a case; since otherwise it was impossible to tell which commissioner the voters desired to have removed or for how long they desired to have the opposing candidates serve, and the ballots were void for uncertainty and could not be counted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. § 140; Dec. Dig. ⇨166.]

2. MANDAMUS ⇨74—ADEQUACY OF REMEDY—CANVASS OF VOID VOTES.

Mandamus will not issue to compel a city council to canvass votes cast at a city election, where the ballots were void for uncertainty; since the writ will not issue to compel the performance of an act which can accomplish no useful purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 150-157; Dec. Dig. ⇨74.]

In Bank. Petition in the Court of Appeal by J. R. Wilson against William P. Blake and others, as the City Council of the City of Vallejo, for mandamus to compel the defendants to canvass the returns of a city election. The Court of Appeal awarded the writ, and defendants apply to the Supreme Court for a rehearing. Demurrer to the petition sustained, and application denied.

Stetson & Koford, of San Francisco, for petitioner. Hoefler & Morris, of San Francisco, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Petitioner applied to the Court of Appeal for mandate to compel the respondents, constituting the city council of the city of Vallejo, to canvass the returns of a certain election held in the city. The proceeding was heard in the Court of Appeal upon issue joined by general demurrer to the complaint. The Court of Appeal awarded the mandate, and, upon petition to this court, a rehearing of the controversy was ordered here to be had.

Under the charter of the city of Vallejo the city council consists of a mayor and two commissioners. The incumbents of those offices are the respondents herein. Defendant Tormey is the mayor, and defendants Blake and Warford are commissioners. Recall proceedings were commenced against Commissioners Blake and Warford, and upon April 23, 1914, a recall election was held. Commissioner Blake at the time of this election had about one year to serve. Commissioner Warford had been elected for a four-year term, and at the time of the election had served about one year, and therefore had three years more to serve. For convenience, Blake's term may be designated the short term and Warford's term the long term. Two candidates had been named by petition for the office of commissioner, but without specification or designation of the particular office (long or short term) to which they aspired. These were Wilson and Jones. Thus it did not appear that Wilson was a candidate to succeed Blake or a candidate to succeed Warford, and the same is true of the candidacy of Jones. The ballots used at this election were, so far as these candidates and their offices are concerned, in form as follows:

For Commissioner Vote for two
For Commissioner William P. Blake
For Commissioner William A. Jones
For Commissioner George H. Warford
For Commissioner Joseph R. Wilson
For Commissioner
For Commissioner

The election returns showed the vote to be: For Wilson 2,071; for Warford, 2,024; for Blake, 2,012; and for Jones, 1,648. Upon the failure of the council to canvass and declare the returns of this election, Wilson filed his petition in mandate to compel action.

The council bases its failure and refusal to make this canvass, and, consequently, its defense to this petition, upon the ground that the election itself accomplished nothing, by virtue of the illegal form of ballot employed; wherefore to canvass the returns of such an election would be the doing of a vain and useless thing.

[1] The charter of the city of Vallejo (section 6, subd. 1) makes the law of the state applicable to its municipal elections and to the canvass of the returns thereof. The state law governing the canvass of returns (Pol. Code, § 1211, subd. 2) declares that:

"In canvassing the votes: * * * 2. If a voter marks more names than there are persons to be elected to an office, or if for any reason it is impossible to determine the voter's choice for any office to be filled, his ballot shall not be counted for such office."

The contention of respondents is that at this election, while the title to the office is the same—namely, that of commissioner—there were, in law and in fact, two offices to be filled; one, the office of commissioner for the short term, the incumbent of which was Blake; the other the office of commissioner for the long term, the incumbent of which was Warford. Petitioner makes answer that the matter is controlled by the provisions of the city charter; that section 5, subd. 17, of this charter provides that on the ballot—

"offices to be filled shall be arranged in separate columns in the following order: * * * For commissioner (if any) vote for (giving number)."

While subdivision 21 of the same section provides:

"In case there is but one person to be elected to an office, the candidate receiving the majority of the votes cast for all the candidates for that office shall be declared elected. In case there are two or more persons to be elected to an office, as that of commissioner or school director, then those candidates equal in number to the number to be elected who receive the highest number of votes for such office shall be declared elected. * * *"

From these provisions petitioner argues that the form of ballot adopted is that prescribed by the charter, which designedly makes no distinction in the office of commissioner growing out of the duration of the terms of the incumbents. But the language of the charter of Vallejo is not all-controlling in the matter. That charter itself makes the election laws of the state applicable to the municipal elections, and the law of the state declares (Pol. Code, § 1197, subd. 8):

"If two or more officers are to be elected for the same office for different terms, the term for which each candidate for such office is nominated shall be printed on the ballot as a part of the title of the office."

And this is not only a most reasonable, but a most necessary, provision of the law. In all of those cases where the title to the office is one, and the officers and incumbents of the office many, as boards of supervisors, city councils, commissioners, judges of the superior court, justices of the Courts of Appeal and of the Supreme Court, it would be impossible in any election, where more than one was to be voted for, and the terms were of different periods, to determine the expressed will of the voters without such provision. And with peculiar force does this apply to recall elections. It will not be disputed that, where the incumbent of an office is subjected to this form of rebuke, he, upon the one hand, is entitled to the simple and uncomplicated verdict of his fellow citizens upon his right to continue in office, and, upon the other hand, the electors in turn are entitled to the untrammelled and unembarrassed right to declare, as to that officer, whether or not he shall be continued in office. The result of an election held as this one was gives rise to endless confusion and to astounding consequences. We may pass over the fact that the opposing candidates were not nominated against either of the incumbents; in other words, that Jones was not a candidate to defeat Blake, nor Wilson a candidate to defeat Warford, nor Wilson a candidate to defeat Blake, nor Jones a candidate to defeat Warford, with the remark that, since there were two offices to be filled, these candidates, by petition, should have looked to it that the office which they sought was specifically designated in their petitions. But, when attention is paid to the possibilities which may arise from an election so conducted, the confusion destroys the possibility of the conclusion that such an election affords a fair, or even a determinable, answer to the essential proposition upon which the voters are to act, which proposition, under the Vallejo charter, is: "Shall A. be recalled and B. be elected in his place?" This we may briefly illustrate, and in so doing it is to be noted that six forms of marked ballot are permissible under this election as held: (1) Ballots for Blake and Warford; (2) ballots for Wilson and Blake; (3) ballots for Wilson and Warford; (4) ballots for Jones and Warford; (5) ballots for Jones and Blake; and (6) ballots for Jones and Wilson. Upon the basis of 100 ballots, and thus 200 votes, assuming that Blake received 60 and Warford 61, it would appear that 6 out of 10, or a clear majority, had voted to retain the commissioners. But it is quite possible that Jones may receive 69 and Wilson 10 votes; thus accounting for a total of 100 ballots and 200 votes. The result would be that Jones would be elected. Or, again, turning our consideration to the form of ballot cast, in ballots 2 and 3 Wilson, and in ballots 4 and 5 Jones, manifestly received votes for two different and distinct offices, which votes are counted in their favor for one office. In the event that their sum in the aggregate exceeds the sum received by either of the incumbent commissioners by this method of cumulating votes, they are elected. Some of the electors may have desired to displace Warford; others to displace Blake. By this election and its method of computation, the result of their balloting is perhaps to displace a man whom they desired to retain.

And, without expatiating further upon the matter, assume that Jones and Wilson had received a majority of votes over the incumbents, for whose office—Blake's or Warford's—was Jones elected, and for whose office was Wilson elected? Sufficient has been said to show that the form of the ballot employed at this election renders the returns void for uncertainty. We hold therefore, as matter of principle, supported by our positive law, that while it was permissible to hold the elections at one time, the offices of the men sought to be recalled, because of their different terms, were separate offices; that they should have been so designated upon the ballot, as the state law prescribes; and that the names of the candidates for those offices against each of the incumbents should have been placed respectively in the proper spaces set apart on the ballot for that purpose.

Upon the proposition, which is, in effect, declared by our statute law, that differing terms make different offices, though the title be one, the authorities are uniform, and it is sufficient to refer to Page v. Kuykendall, 161 Ill. 319, 43 N. E. 1114, 32 L. R. A. 656; Chamberlain v. Hartley, 152 Pa. 544, 25 Ati. 572; Contested Election of Gilleland, 96 Pa. 224; Appeal of Milligan, 96 Pa. 222.

[2] To the suggestion that the court should order this mandate, to the end that the city council be directed to perform the public duty of canvassing the returns, even though the result shall be as above indicated—a declaration from the city council that the election returns are void for uncertainty—the answer is that the writ of mandate is issued in the discretion of the court to compel the performance not only of a public duty, but of a useful public duty. State v. Ely, 23 N. D. 619, 137 N. W. 834; Belcher v. Treat, 61 Me. 577. A court having authority to issue the writ will not do the vain and foolish thing of ordering an inferior board or tribunal to do that which accomplishes nothing. It will exercise its power to issue the writ only when some useful purpose may be accomplished thereby. Boyne v. Ryan, 100 Cal. 265, 34 Pac. 707; French v. State Senate, 146 Cal. 604, 80 Pac. 1031, 69 L. R. A. 556, 2 Ann. Cas. 756. No such result can here be accomplished, for the reasons already given.

Wherefore the demurrer to the petition is sustained, and the application for a writ is denied.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. (concurring). I concur in the judgment and in the foregoing opinion. I am of the opinion, further, that there is nothing in the charter provisions of the city of Vallejo independent of the state law that, fairly construed, purports to authorize such manner of proceeding as was had in this matter, entirely regardless of the fact that the two officers here proceeded against were commissioners for terms of different length. The provisions of the charter specially applicable to the matter of recall clearly show, in my opinion, that the recall proceeding contemplated is necessarily one against a single officer. In view of the nature of the question to be submitted to the people at a recall election, I do not see how any other system would be practicable. However this may be, the language of the charter shows that nothing else was contemplated. And, where proceedings are instituted for the recall of two officers at the same time, even though the title to the office is the same, as is the case here, they are separate and distinct proceedings, and must be separately submitted to the people. As is suggested in the opinion, such submission need not necessarily be on different days, but where, for convenience and to save expense, two or more proceedings are voted on at the same time, they must be kept separate and distinct on the ballot, so that the will of the people may be expressed as to each. In such a case, as many recall elections are being held at the same time as there are officers involved, and they are being held at the same time solely for convenience and to save expense. As each of these involves but one officer, the provision of subdivision 17 of section 5 of the charter prescribing the form of ballot cannot be construed as warranting the form of ballot that was, in fact, used at the election of April 23, 1914.

169 Cal. 484

Ex parte COOMBS. (Cr. 1825.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 2, 1915.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ☞200—OFFENSES —SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

In a prosecution under a county ordinance forbidding any one to solicit, take, or receive any order for the sale or delivery of intoxicating liquors in a precinct where the voters had declared against retail liquor dealers' licenses, a complaint, not pleading the terms of the ordinance itself or its exceptions, but averring that defendant's acts were done at a place other than a fixed place of business for the sale of intoxicating liquors, sufficiently excluded him from the classes of dealers who might solicit trade at their licensed places of business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 219, 220; Dec. Dig. ☞200.]

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ☞10 — POLICE POWER—REGULATION OR PROHIBITION.

County supervisors, in the exercise of the police powers, may impose upon the sale of liquor within the county any restrictions not in conflict with general laws, and the police power is efficient for the regulation or even for the prohibition of the liquor traffic by supervisors within their respective counties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 7-12; Dec. Dig. ☞10.]

3. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ☞17 — REGULATION—PROHIBITION OF LAWFUL INDUSTRY.

A county ordinance forbidding one to solicit, take, or receive orders for the sale or delivery of spirituous or vinous liquors within a voting precinct, the voters of which have declared against the granting of retail liquor dealers' licenses, was limited to the precinct, and did not attempt to prohibit the manufacture of wines within the precinct nor their sale therein for delivery in territory outside the precinct, so that it did not attempt to prohibit the conduct of a lawful industry.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 21-23; Dec. Dig. ☞ 17.]

4. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ☞ 17—REGULATION—VALIDITY OF ORDINANCE.

The Wyllie Law (St. 1911, p. 599) only limited the powers of county supervisors in territory that had been voted dry, and hence did not prevent a board from exercising its police power in any part of the county not subject to that law, so that its ordinance forbidding one to solicit, take, or receive any order for the sale or delivery of any intoxicating liquors in a voting precinct, where the voters had declared against retail liquor dealers' licenses, was not subject to attack on the ground that it provided a different scheme of local option.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 21-23; Dec. Dig. ☞ 17.]

5. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ☞ 17—ORDINANCE—DISCRIMINATION.

An ordinance adopted by county supervisors, directing that, at general election in each precinct, the voters should decide as to granting of different classes of licenses within the precinct, was not objectionable as discriminating against wines manufactured in the county, since neither foreign nor domestic wines could be sold in the precinct where it was in force by one taking orders at other than a fixed and licensed place of business, and the fact that he could not do business upon the same terms as those engaged in a different branch of the liquor business would not destroy the ordinance, as the power to regulate involves a wide discretion in the selection of classes of dealers in intoxicants, who shall be subject to regulation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 21-23; Dec. Dig. ☞ 17.]

6. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ☞ 17—REGULATION—PROHIBITING DISPOSAL OF PROPERTY.

Such ordinance, the operation of which was confined to territory under the regulative authority of county supervisors, was not objectionable as an attempt to prohibit the disposal of goods lawfully possessed, as they might be sold at any place outside that area.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 21-23; Dec. Dig. ☞ 17.]

7. COMMERCE ☞ 40—INTERSTATE COMMERCE—SALE OF LIQUOR.

An ordinance forbidding one to solicit, take, or receive any order for the sale or delivery of intoxicating liquors in a voting precinct, where the voters had declared against retail liquor dealers' licenses, did not by its terms prevent the shipment of goods in interstate commerce.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Commerce, Cent. Dig. §§ 29, 30; Dec. Dig. ☞ 40.]

8. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ☞ 17—POLICE POWER—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

An ordinance forbidding the soliciting, taking, or receiving of orders for the sale or delivery of liquor within a precinct where the voters have declared against retail liquor dealers' licenses, which was a legitimate exercise of police power, did not violate the fourteenth amendment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 21-23; Dec. Dig. ☞ 17.]

In Bank. Habeas corpus by John Coombs against William A. Hammel, sheriff of the county of Los Angeles. Writ discharged, and relator remanded to custody.

Byron C. Hanna, Joseph Musgrove, and Charles W. Lyon, all of Los Angeles (W. S. Wright, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for petitioner. A. J. Hill, J. D. Fredericks, and Percy V. Hammon, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Petitioner has been arrested upon a warrant issued as the result of the filing of a complaint wherein he is charged with violating a certain ordinance of the county of Los Angeles. More specifically the charge is that John Coombs did "at a place other than a fixed licensed place of business for the sale of intoxicating liquors, to wit, in Lamanda Park precinct, in Los Angeles county, solicit, take, and receive an order for the delivery of, and did then and there deliver, intoxicating liquors, to wit, three gallons of wine, to one A. L. Bradley, at his permanent residence in Lamanda Park precinct; said precinct being then and there a voting precinct in which a retail liquor dealer's license was not and could not be obtained."

The ordinance in question was adopted by the supervisors of Los Angeles county in 1910. It is known as Ordinance No. 245 (new series), and is entitled "An ordinance regulating and licensing certain kinds of business."

By the first section of this by-law it is made unlawful for any person to conduct any business specified therein without first procuring the prescribed license.

By section 18 the term "intoxicating liquors" is defined, and "vinous liquors" are included within the definition.

It is provided, among other things, in the nineteenth section, that:

"No person shall sell any intoxicating liquors in any quantity whatsoever, except at a fixed place of business, or without first obtaining a license therefor under the provisions of this ordinance. No person shall, in any voting precinct in which a retail liquor dealer's license cannot be obtained, as hereinafter provided, solicit, take or receive any order for the sale or delivery of any intoxicating liquors: Provided that nothing herein contained shall be deemed to prohibit the soliciting, taking, or receiving of such orders by a duly licensed winery keeper or hotel or restaurant liquor dealer at his licensed place of business."

Section 22 establishes the method to be adopted by those seeking licenses; and the next section establishes the procedure to be followed by the board of supervisors in hearing and passing upon such applications. That part of the section which requires particular examination by us in the decision of the questions arising in this proceeding is as follows:

"No application for either a wholesale or retail liquor dealer's license, or a winery keeper's license, or a hotel or restaurant liquor dealer's license, shall be granted unless at the last preceding general election at which the question of granting licenses of the kind applied for was submitted to the people, the majority of the votes cast upon the question of granting licenses of the kind applied for, in the voting precinct in which the business is proposed to be carried on, was in favor of granting such licenses. For the purposes of this ordinance the respective voting precincts of the county and the boundaries thereof shall be deemed to continue unchanged from any general election until the next general election thereafter."

Section 25 directs that at every general election four questions shall be presented on the ballot to the electors in each precinct of the county outside of incorporated cities and towns. By their answers to these questions the voters of each precinct express their desires with reference to the granting of "wholesale and retail liquor dealers' licenses," "winery keepers' licenses," "hotel and restaurant liquor dealers' licenses," and "licenses for public billiard rooms," within the precinct.

Section 29 defines a "retail liquor establishment." It is not necessary to quote the definition. It is sufficient to note that no part of it gives permission to solicit orders for liquor at any place, except upon the premises devoted to the retail business. The section also contains the following language:

"Every person who, either as owner, agent or otherwise, conducts or carries on or assists in conducting or carrying on a retail liquor establishment as herein defined, or who sells intoxicating liquors in any manner not included in the definitions of the terms 'hotel liquor dealer,' 'restaurant liquor dealer,' 'winery keeper' or 'wholesale liquor dealer,' as herein defined, is, for the purposes of this ordinance, declared to be carrying on the occupation of a retail liquor dealer, except as provided in section 36 hereof."

The exception stated in the above quotation is not material to this discussion.

Section 31 defines a winery to be:

"A place for the manufacture and sale of vinicultural products manufactured in this county from grapes grown in this state, when sold by the manufacturer in quantities of not less than two gallons, such minimum quantity to be all delivered at one time, and when sold on the premises where manufactured and not permitted to be drunk in, upon or about said premises; and any person, who, either as owner, agent or otherwise, conducts or carries on or assists in conducting or carrying on a winery, is, for the purposes of this ordinance, declared to be carrying on the occupation of a winery keeper."

It is alleged in the petition that John Coombs is an employé of the Sierra Madre Vintage Company, a Californian corporation conducting the business of manufacturing wine, in Lamanda Park precinct, from grapes grown in California; that said corporation has been thus engaged for more than a quarter of a century; and that the acts charged in the complaint were committed by petitioner as an employé of said corporation, the wine sold and delivered having been manufactured by his employer from grapes grown in California. It is also averred that on April 1, 1913, the board of supervisors denied the application of the Sierra Madra Vintage Company for a license, "solely and only for the reason that a majority of the voters in the precinct, in which the said winery is situated, had, at the previous general election, voted against the issuing of winery licenses."

The ordinance is attacked by petitioner, who advances the following reasons for its asserted invalidity:

"First, that the ordinance contravenes the express public policy of the state of California; second, that it attempts to prohibit the conducting of a lawful industry; third, that the enactment of such an ordinance by the board of supervisors is not authorized; fourth, that it is in conflict with the provisions of the general law in that it provides a different scheme of local option from that authorized by the Wyllie Local Option Law; fifth, that it unlawfully discriminates against products manufactured in Los Angeles county and against grapes grown in the state of California; sixth, that it is unreasonable in that it attempts to prohibit the disposal of goods lawfully possessed; seventh, that it attempts to prevent the shipment of such goods in interstate commerce; eighth, that it violates the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States."

[1] It is not seriously contended that the complaint fails to state an offense under the ordinance. True, there is no pleading in the terms of the ordinance itself, of the exceptions to the rule that no soliciting may be done by a dealer in liquors, but there is an averment that the acts of the petitioner were done at a place "other than a fixed place of business for the sale of intoxicating liquors." This sufficiently excludes him from classes of dealers who may solicit patronage, because even such licensed merchants or hotel or restaurant keepers may not solicit business, except at their fixed places of business.

At the outset petitioner concedes that the court is not bound to consider the ordinance by any particular state of facts presented in the petition for the writ of habeas corpus, but his counsel contend that nevertheless we should test the ordinance by the allegations of the petition, because the alleged facts are necessarily within the scope of the by-law. This question need not trouble us, because, conceding the full force of the petitioner's argument in this regard, we feel constrained to uphold the ordinance upon the authority of Californian cases.

Petitioner calls the attention of the court to the unvarying legislative policy in California of fostering and encouraging the manufacture and sale of native wines. By resolutions, by the offering of prizes for the best wines, by the establishment and generous support of a department of viticulture in the University, and by many other methods, the policy of the state to encourage this industry has been established. Petitioner argues, therefore, that the ordinance before us is opposed to public policy in that, according to his interpretation, it destroys a wine manufacturing industry in the precinct in which his employer's place of business is located. All that is said in the able briefs of counsel for petitioner, regarding the state's policy toward the growers of grapes and the producers of wine, is true. It is true that, in reliance upon that policy, vast sums have been expended. It is true that tens of thousands of citizens derive their means of livelihood from this legitimate business of making and selling wines.

[2] But it is equally true that, in the exercise of its police power, the board of supervisors of a county may impose, upon the sale within such county of vinous and other liquors containing alcohol, any restrictions which are not in conflict with general laws. If, therefore, upon a reasonable construction of the ordinance, it appears to us to be a police measure, it will be our duty to sustain it. In this state the police power is efficient for the regulation or even for the prohibition of the liquor traffic by boards of supervisors within their respective counties. Ex parte Campbell, 74 Cal. 20, 15 Pac. 318, 5 Am. St. Rep. 418; Ex parte Young, 154 Cal. 322, 97 Pac. 822, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 330; Matter of Application of Ellsworth, 165 Cal. 685, 133 Pac. 272; Matter of Application of Anixter, 166 Cal. 763, 138 Pac. 353. We might cite scores of other authorities to the same effect. In the opinion delivered for this court by Mr. Justice Henshaw in the matter of Anixter's Application he used the following language:

"It is, of course, well settled that a state and its subordinate municipal agencies may pass laws, even laws penal in their character, regulating and indeed prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, or the soliciting of orders, or the making of contracts for the sale of such liquors"—citing many authorities.

[3] Examining the ordinance with reference to the contention that it attempts to prohibit the conducting of a lawful industry, we find no such result. It does not prevent the manufacture nor the sale of wine. True, the language of the section under which the petitioner was charged is rather general. It forbids a citizen, under the conditions set forth, to "solicit, take or receive any order for the sale or delivery of any intoxicating liquors" in the voting precinct. Similar but even more emphatically prohibitory language was used in the ordinance considered in the proceeding with reference to Anixter's application, but this court interpreted the language of the by-law in the light of the police power of the town of Winters. It was held that since the utmost power of the municipality extended, not to the control of those beyond its borders, but to the regulation of the liquor traffic within its limits, the ordinance in question only prevented soliciting and the making of contracts of sale in the town for the delivery of intoxicants therein. That authority is entirely applicable to the language of the ordinance here under review. So interpreted, it places no ban upon the manufacture of wines within the precinct nor the sale of such products therein for delivery in territory outside that part of Los Angeles county in which such traffic is prohibited.

Under the above interpretation of the ordinance, there is no force in petitioner's assertion that the enactment of such an ordinance is not within the legitimate power of the board of supervisors.

[4] The by-law is also attacked upon the ground that it provides a different scheme of local option from that authorized by the Wyllie Law. In the construction given to the Wyllie Law in the opinion of this court in Matter of Application of Ellsworth, supra, it was decided that the Wyllie Law only limited the powers of the supervisors in territory that had been voted "dry"—that in other parts of a county the police power of the board of supervisors was undiminished. Nothing in the Wyllie Law prevents a board of supervisors from exercising this power in any part of the county which has not been subjected to the prohibitive force of that law. In Davis v. Board of Supervisors of Merced County, 7 Cal. App. 572, 95 Pac. 170, the District Court of Appeal had under examination an ordinance providing that a majority of the voters living in the precinct within one mile of a proposed saloon might by protest prevent the issuance of a license to sell liquor. The ordinance was held to be a valid exercise of the police power. In Denton v. Vann, 8 Cal. App. 677, 97 Pac. 675, the ordinance considered was very similar to the one before us. It furnished exactly the same plan for ascertaining the wishes of the electors in each precinct. The ordinance also provided that no license would be granted in precincts in which a majority of the voters had declared against its issuance. The learned District Court of Appeal held that the ordinance did not by its terms delegate any legislative power, but established a valid condition to the granting of licenses by the governing power. A petition to have that cause heard in this court was denied. The case of Galindo v. Walter, 8 Cal. App. 235, 96 Pac. 505, is easily distinguishable from Denton v. Vann. In the latter case the ascertainment of the will of the electors was not made the basis of the issuance of licenses under an existing ordinance. The common council sought to have the electors advise them by ballot whether or not the majority favored prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors. The district court held that under the existing law the council had no power to submit the proposed question on the ballot.

[5] Respondent argues, correctly, we believe, that under the authority of Ex parte Beck, 162 Cal. 702, 124 Pac. 543, the taking effect of the ordinance is properly made to depend upon the vote of the electors of a particular locality. In that case the submission of the question to the voters in a supervisory district was achieved under the Wyllie Law; in this it was under the general power given to the supervisors by section 11 of article 11 of the Constitution of California, which carries with it the power to select the subdivision in which the vote may be taken. Under the authorities cited above, we must hold that this ordinance does not conflict with the Wyllie Law, and that the submission to the voters of the questions relating to issuance of licenses in Lamanda Park precinct was proper.

We do not see that the ordinance is essentially discriminatory against wines manufactured in Los Angeles county. We are told that possibly in a precinct retail liquor licenses might be issued but winery keepers' licenses might be denied. In such a condition of affairs, it is argued, wines of foreign manufacture might be sold, while those made in the precinct could not be disposed of. But we are not confronted with that phase of the matter. Neither foreign nor domestic wines could be sold in Lamanda precinct by a solicitor taking orders at a place other than a fixed place of business. But even if the hypothetical condition presented by petitioner did exist, the mere fact that he could not do business upon the same terms as others engaged in a different branch of the liquor traffic would not necessarily destroy the ordinance. The power to regulate involves a wide discretion in the selection of the classes of dealers in intoxicants who should be subjected to regulation. For example, an ordinance is valid which gives the right to sell liquors only by keepers of hotels, and permits the serving of intoxicants only in the dining rooms of such hotels and as parts of regular meals. Indeed, the governing power which may prohibit a thing altogether may impose even arbitrary restrictions upon its existence. Denton v. Vann, supra; In re Kidd, 5 Cal. App. 159, 89 Pac. 987; Ex parte Christensen, 85 Cal. 213, 24 Pac. 747.

[6, 7] There is no force in the contention that the ordinance attempts to prohibit the disposal of goods lawfully possessed. Its operation is confined to the territory under the regulative authority of the supervisors of Los Angeles county. Petitioner is at liberty to dispose of his employer's products in any place without that area. Upon the same reasoning and under the interpretation which we have given it, the ordinance does not by its terms prevent the shipment of goods in the practice of interstate commerce.

[8] Being a legitimate exercise of police power, the ordinance does not violate the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Ex parte Campbell, supra.

For the reasons given above, the writ is discharged, and the prisoner remanded to custody.

(Supreme Court of California. March 4, 1915.)

1. BOUNDARIES ⇨3—DESCRIPTION.

Where deeds and partition decrees define the line between points B and C, as following the ordinary high-water mark, the statement following, that C is distant from B "in a straight line" a certain number of yards, merely fixes the location of C, more definitely, and does not limit the previous description.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 3-41; Dec. Dig. ⇨3.]

2. BOUNDARIES ⇨3—DESCRIPTION—REFERENCE TO MAP.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2077, subd. 6, as to construing the descriptive part of a conveyance when the construction is doubtful, providing that, when the description refers to a map, it controls them if it appears the parties acted with reference to the map, a decree in partition is not controlled, as to a boundary, by a map filed in connection with the referee's report, and referred to; the decree containing definite terms of description, sufficient to enable a surveyor to trace the course of the boundary without the aid of the map.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 3-41; Dec. Dig. ⇨3.]

3. BOUNDARIES ⇨8—DEFINITE TERMS.

The description in a deed of the boundary line between the points B and C as along the south boundary of Wilmington is a term of definite description, though the act incorporating the city of Wilmington had been repealed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 66-76; Dec. Dig. ⇨8.]

4. BOUNDARIES ⇨3—INCONSISTENCY—NATURAL OBJECTS—COURSES BY ANGLES.

Where a deed gives a boundary line between points B and C as the south boundary of Wilmington, which had been located definitely along the line of high-water mark, the addition of a description of a course by angles may, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2077, subd. 2, be rejected as opposed to the description of a definite course well known and fixed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 3-41; Dec. Dig. ⇨3.]

5. BOUNDARIES ⇨3—CONTROLLING DESCRIPTION—AMOUNT OF LAND.

The statement in a conveyance of the amount of land to be conveyed is not a factor in establishing boundaries, unless the more particular description expressed is indefinite and uncertain.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 3-41; Dec. Dig. ⇨3.]

6. BOUNDARIES ⇨48—ABANDONMENT.

Mere setting of stakes by a grantee of land back from the true boundary does not show an abandonment of the remainder of the land conveyed to him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 232-242; Dec. Dig. ⇨48.]

7. BOUNDARIES ⇨48—ACQUIESCENCE.

That a boundary may be fixed by acquiescence, it must be by agreement, at least implied, and continued for the period of limitations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 232-242; Dec. Dig. ⇨48.]

8. ADVERSE POSSESSION ⇨100—COLOR OF TITLE—CONSTRUCTIVE POSSESSION—PLACE OF ACTUAL POSSESSION—"THE PROPERTY."

The rule as regards title by adverse possession under color of title, that where a deed gives a good title to part of the land included, and color of title only to the remainder, actual possession which will give constructive possession must be within the part to which color of title only is given, is not changed by Code Civ. Proc. § 322, providing that when the occupant enters into possession of "the property" under claim of title, founded on an instrument as being a conveyance of it, and there has been a continued occupation and possession of the property included in such instrument, or of some part of it, under such claim, for five years, the property so included is deemed to have been held adversely, the "property" being that of the opposing owner; as section 312 declares that in order to set the various periods of limitation running there must first be a cause of action, that is, an occupancy of such a character that it would be cause of action by the owner of the senior title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 547-574; Dec. Dig. ☞ 100.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Action by W. T. Wheatley against the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company. From an adverse judgment and order, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. S. Halsted, W. F. Palmer, F. A. Waters, and Wilfred M. Peck, all of Los Angeles, for appellants. Woodruff & McClure, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This cause having been transferred to the District Court of Appeal for the Second District, that court, upon an opinion by Mr. Justice James, affirmed the judgment and order appealed from. The cause was then transferred to this court for rehearing. Upon further consideration, we adhere to the decision of the District Court and adopt its opinion, which is as follows:

Action to quiet title to certain lands. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, appeals were taken.

The lands as to the title to which controversy is made are lands lying along the northerly shore of the Bay of San Pedro in Los Angeles county. These lands, together with those composing the entire town site of the city of Wilmington and lands east and south thereof, were originally owned, under the name of Rancho San Pedro, by one Christopher Dominguez, whose title rested on a grant from the Spanish government. The heirs of Dominguez, in the year 1855, conveyed to B. D. Wilson, John G. Downey, and four others the tract of land upon which the town of Wilmington was afterwards platted. The conveyance was to the grantees as tenants in common. In general, the southerly boundary of the tract so conveyed was fixed at the line of high-water mark on the bay. The description given in the deed traced a course from the intersection of the westerly boundary of the tract with the line of the bay, easterly until a point on the shore line designated as "B" was reached. The point where the easterly boundary intersected the shore line of the bay was designated as "C." The high-water mark between points B and C made a meandering line and mainly followed a course southerly of a straight line drawn between points B and C. The diagram accompanying this opinion is referred to as illustrating roughly the conditions just described:

It then appears that a straight line drawn between B and C would leave between such line and high-water mark an irregular shaped plat of ground. A portion of this ground is the land about the title to which this litigation revolves. The deed of conveyance by the Dominguez heirs to the grantees hereinbefore mentioned described the southerly line of the tract, after the point B was reached, as follows: "From the said point B unto a stake marked 'C,' following the ordinary high-water mark, and distant in a straight line sixteen hundred and nineteen yards and three inches, with the course by compass east 47° north," etc. In the year 1855 a decree of partition entered in the district court of the county of Los Angeles partitioned the land of the Rancho San Pedro among the Dominguez heirs and their grantees, and the description quoted from, which refers to the southerly boundary of the tract deeded to Wilson et al., was incorporated into the decree. In 1862, in the same district court and in case No. 877, a partition by decree was made of the tract purchased by Wilson and others. In this suit of partition the referees appointed one Frank Lecouvreur, a surveyor, to assist them, and he prepared a map of the tract showing the boundaries thereof. The tract as delineated upon this map was also subdivided into blocks with streets between them, which blocks composed the town site of the city of Wilmington thereafter incorporated. The subdivision was at that time designated by the name of "New San Pedro." The interlocutory decree entered in action No. 877 described the boundary line between the points B and C in substantially the same terms as were used in the deed from the Dominguez heirs to Wilson et al., and in the decree in the first partition suit. In the final decree in this second suit (No. 877) were these clauses: "Having reference, in the descriptions in this decree, for fuller explanation, to the map made by Frank Lecouvreur, the surveyor appointed by said referees to assist them in said partition, which map was submitted by the referees with their said report and filed herein with said report. And it is further ordered * * * that the entire tract of land included within the exterior boundaries of said map be and shall be partitioned between the parties in this suit, the said tract being * * * described as follows: Commencing at the point know as 'Los Barriles,' marked 'Station A' on said map; thence following the line of ordinary high-water mark, easterly as far as the point marked 'C' on said map, or where the eastern exterior boundary of said tract of land will intersect said ordinary high-water mark, the courses and distances from said point A to station C, according to said map, being as follows, * * * links to station B; thence north 43° east seventy-three (73) chains, sixty (60) links to station C, * * * the same being the resurvey of the lands first described in the complaint in this case, and in said former decree of date September 6, 1862, i. e., the interlocutory decree, excepting from said lands the strip of one mile in length by one hundred yards in width within said estuary whereon the said lands are situated, commencing from station B." On the map filed with the referees' report in case No. 877 the side lines of the blocks were not shown extended through to high-water mark, but all such lines intersected a straight line drawn from B to C. The decree of partition adopted the subdivision lines shown on the map, but, in allotting the blocks fronting the bay between points B and C, extended the side lines of such blocks through the straight line drawn from B to C by recitation in each case as follows: "Extending its east and west line southerly across * * * to ordinary high-water mark." Following this decree, a map was drawn and filed for record in the county recorder's office, which map was a duplicate of the map filed with the referees' report, except that the blocks within the subdivision were not numbered, but were lettered according to the township, as allotted under the decree, and except also that the side lines of the blocks were shown thereon extended through the straight line drawn from B to C and extended to what appears to be the mark made by the waters of the bay. The various instruments of conveyance hereinbefore mentioned and the decree of partition contained (referring to the entire tract allotted to Wilson and others), and after the terms of description referred to, this clause: "So as to include neither more nor less, but exactly 2,400 acres of land within the above-described limits."

Defendant's claim of title to the strip of land in controversy is based, first, upon a deed from the Dominguez heirs. These heirs, in 1892, deeded to the Terminal Land Company, the grantor of defendant, a large body of land lying easterly of the tract previously granted to the predecessors in title of the plaintiff, and immediately adjoining it. In the deed to the Terminal Land Company the dividing line between points C and B was described as follows: "* * * To station C of Wilmington; thence along the south boundary of Wilmington, south $56\frac{1}{2}$ degrees west, $73^{60}/_{100}$ chains to station B of Wilmington." By the testimony of a surveyor it was shown that the course of the boundary as described in this deed by angles and distances from station C to B was along a straight line. The Terminal Land Company in 1892 prepared a map of its lands lying easterly of the town of Wilmington. Lot 3 as designated on this map had for a portion of its northerly boundary the straight line C B. This map was recorded in the office of the county recorder and thereafter was used by the assessors of the county of Los Angeles, the city of Wilmington, and later the city of Los Angeles, in making up the tax rolls. It was shown that defendant had paid all of the taxes assessed against the land in controversy for more than five years prior to the commencement of this action. The negative fact was also shown that the owners of the land lying north of the straight line B C had not evidenced their claim of title to the lands in dispute by improving or entering upon actual possession of the same until a short time before the commencement of this action. It was also shown that neither the defendant nor its immediate predecessor in title had improved the land in dispute, nor entered into actual possession of the same by the making of any use thereof, until just prior to the time plaintiff commenced his action. Various improvements had been made more than five years prior to the commencement of the suit on the land easterly and southerly of the disputed ground, and upon the tract designated generally as "Lot 3" on the map made by the Terminal Land Company, being the map before mentioned as having been recorded and used by the city and county assessors. In 1872 the city of Wilmington was incorporated by an act of the Legislature (Stats. 1871-72, p. 108). The description of the municipal boundaries used in that act were those found in the deeds of the Dominguez heirs to Wilson et al., and the recorded Lecouvreur map (showing the disputed boundary to be along the water's edge) was referred to in the act and expressly adopted as the official map of Wilmington. The act of incorporation was repealed in 1887, and the town was reincorporated as a city of the sixth class in 1905. The main facts upon which the judgment was based have now been fairly stated.

It is contended by appellant that the facts are such as to compel a judgment in its favor because: First. The description used in the early conveyances should be construed as indicating a straight line between the points B and C; that the map filed in partition suit No. 877 delineated that line as running in a direct course between the points named, and this map should control other language of the decree inconsistent therewith; that, should the southerly line of the tract be fixed at the high-water mark, then more than the intended amount of land would have been included in the grant, which parcel was to be composed of "neither more nor less, but exactly 2,400 acres." Second. That, conceding the location of the boundary between B and C to be a matter of uncertainty under the various instruments of conveyance and decrees of partition, it had become fixed and certain by long acquiescence and agreement as being located along a straight line. Third. That appellant has obtained a prescriptive title to all of the ground in dispute.

[1, 2] The terms of description used in the conveyances, and also the partition decrees, were reasonably clear and certain; they all defined the line between points B and C as following the ordinary high-water mark. The statement that the point C was distant from B "in a straight line 1,619 yards and 3 inches" fixed the location of C more definitely, but did not purport to be used in limitation of the other specific terms of description by which the southerly boundary had already been fixed as being along the line of ordinary high water. Section 2077, Code of Civil Procedure, is cited in support of the contention that the map filed in the partition suit determined B C to be a straight line. It will be remembered that the particular description in the decree carried the side lines of the blocks of land through to high-water mark. The plat recorded in the office of the county recorder, made after the partition was made, also showed the side block lines so extended. This last map was one apparently filed for the benefit of the partitioning parties, and it showed that they construed the decree as providing for the partitioning of the property down to the water's edge. Section 2077, Code of Civil Procedure, provides rules for construing the descriptive part of a conveyance of real property where the description is doubtful. Subdivision 6 of that statute reads as follows: "When the description refers to a map, and that reference is inconsistent with other particulars, it controls them if it appear that the parties acted with reference to the map; otherwise the map is subordinate to other definite and ascertained particulars." Admitting for the moment that the descriptive terms contained in the deed from the Dominguez heirs to the predecessors in interest of the plaintiff were indefinite, it must appear clearly that the original parties all relied upon the high-water mark as constituting the southerly boundary of the Wilmington tract. The decree of partition in case No. 877 was not controlled by the map filed in connection with the referees' report. That decree contained definite terms of description—sufficient to enable a surveyor to trace the course of the southerly boundary without the aid of the map. The recorded map followed the decree in delineating the block lines as extending to the water's edge.

[3-5] From what has been stated it may be understood that the view the court takes is that the particular descriptions used in the deeds of the Dominguez heirs to the predecessors in title of plaintiff and in the partition decrees referred to clearly and sufficiently describe the boundary line between the points B and C as being located at the line of high water. The deed of the Dominguez heirs to the Terminal Land Company did contain inconsistent terms of description. It has been noted that this deed in particular described the line between B and C along a straight course. At the same time it described that course first as being "along the south boundary of Wilmington." The south boundary line of the municipality of Wilmington had been fixed by the act of 1872, whereby the recorded Lecouvreur map had been adopted as the official map of the city and the particular description of the boundary of the municipality between points B and C had been described in the terms of the original conveyance to Wilson et al. In this deed the points B and C were referred to as established monuments and were identified further as being referable to the Lecouvreur survey. The phrase used in the deed, that the line between points B and C was along the south boundary of Wilmington, constituted a term of definite description, notwithstanding that the act of 1872 incorporating the city of Wilmington had been repealed by the act of 1887. Wilmington was not reincorporated until 1905. So far as the testimony shows, the south boundary line of Wilmington was the line established by the Legislature in the act of 1872, and it is reasonably apparent that the Dominguez heirs intended to adopt that line as the boundary between points B and C. This line, as has been hereinbefore declared, had been located definitely along the mark of high water. The addition of the description of a course by angles may well be rejected as being opposed to the description of a definite course well known and fixed. Section 2077, Code Civ. Proc., subd. 2; Mills v. Lux, 45 Cal. 273. However, for the purposes of a full consideration of the claim made by appellant that it holds a good prescriptive title, it may be conceded that the Dominguez heirs by their instrument of conveyance pretended to clothe their grantee with title to that property. As the argument of appellant is here understood, it is admitted that, where in an instrument of conveyance or other description of real property the quantity of land to be conveyed is stated, that term is not to be viewed as a factor in establishing boundaries, unless the more particular description expressed is indefinite and uncertain. The following decisions are in point to that effect: Baldwin v. Temple, 101 Cal. 396, 35 Pac. 1008; Dutra v. Pereira, 135 Cal. 320, 67 Pac. 281. It may be suggested, also, that the evidence does not establish that by the location of the southerly boundary line along such high-water mark the tract conveyed to Wilson et al. would have included more than 2,400 acres.

[6, 7] As to the line in dispute having become fixed by agreement or acquiescence at the location claimed by appellant, the facts do not bear out that contention. The ground was not improved for a long period of years by either plaintiff or his predecessors, or by appellant or its predecessors. The line could not have become fixed at a place different from that at which the record title located it, where there was no active possession on the part of claimants adverse to the record, nor any dispute or question expressed as to the true location of the line. Some testimony was given tending to show that surveyors had, in years subsequent to that during which the Terminal Land Company obtained its deed, found certain stakes, called lot and block stakes, along the straight line B

C. As to when these stakes were set and by whom, the evidence did not show. Assuming that the stakes were placed there by plaintiff's predecessors in title, their location at those points would not show an abandonment of the remainder of the land conveyed to them under their deeds. There must be an agreement in order that a division line shall become fixed; this agreement must be express or implied from the acts of the parties and acquiesced in for the period fixed by the statute of limitations. Helm v. Wilson, 76 Cal. 476, 18 Pac. 604. There was no evidence that appellant took possession of the disputed strip of land or openly claimed that it was entitled to it until a short time prior to the bringing of this suit. There was no evidence of any agreement as to the straight line B C being adopted as the true boundary, and no acquiescence in that line was shown; but, on the contrary, when appellant did enter upon the strip of ground and begin to make improvements thereon, it was met by this suit, by which it was called upon to establish its legal right to be there.

[8] Appellant's claim to title by adverse possession rests upon the following facts for support: The deed from the common grantor of both plaintiff's and appellant's predecessors describing the line B C both as a straight line (by angle description) and as being the southerly line of Wilmington; the deed of appellant's immediate grantor following the Terminal Land Company's map which had been recorded and which showed B C to be a straight line. It was proven and not denied that appellant had paid all taxes on the land in dispute for more than five years prior to the commencement of this action; also, that upon a considerable portion of the tract purported to be conveyed, not including the ground in dispute, improvements had been made by appellant and its predecessor. The deeds were sufficient to give color of title. Wilson v. Atkinson, 77 Cal. 485, 20 Pac. 66, 11 Am. St. Rep. 299; Owsley v. Matson, 156 Cal. 401, 104 Pac. 983. It has been held that, where a tract of land is claimed adversely, the possession that will be held sufficient is not necessarily an actual possession and occupancy of the whole, but that, if some part of the tract has been subjected to the continuous possession of the claimant, this possession will extend to the whole (Owsley v. Matson, supra), for the possession of one who enters under color of title and who sets up a prescriptive claim may be in part constructive. Where the entry is without color of title, the possession and occupancy must be actual as to the whole body of the land claimed. The underlying theory of this rule, which is of general application, is that there must be notice given to the legal owner as to the adverse claim; that where color of title is held by the claimant the extent of his claim is evidenced by the paper or judgment conferring such colorable title; and that when possession is taken of part of the land it will be presumed to extend to the limits of that described in the instrument or judgment conferring the imperfect title. "Where possession has been taken under color of title, the law, operating on the 'color,' puts the claimant in constructive possession of that part of the land called for by the 'color,' although it is not in his actual possession." Ruling Case Law, vol. 1, § 44. On the other hand, when color of title is not so possessed by the claimant, the real owner has no means of notice as to the extent of the adverse holder's claim, other than his acts of possession indicate; and it is said that constructively the possession of land is prima facie in the owner of it. Our Code sections express this rule as it is generally applied. Sections 322, 324, Code of Civil Procedure. Nevertheless, in order that this rule of constructive possession shall apply in favor of the adverse claimant, it must appear that that portion of the land upon which he plants his hostile possession is a part of that claimed adversely. He cannot, under a deed which conveys a good title to a portion of a tract and a colorable one only to another portion thereof, take possession of the portion to which he has received good title and by so doing maintain the claim that constructively he is in possession of the whole of the tract. His right to the possession of property, the complete title to which he has acquired, would be no sort of notice to the true owner of the land not occupied that he claimed to be in possession of that also. The law as to this is well established. Schmitt v. Traphagen, 73 N. J. Eq. 399, 69 Atl. 189, 133 Am. St. Rep. 739; Turner v. Stephenson, 72 Mich. 409, 40 N. W. 735, 2 L. R. A. 277. The possession proved in favor of appellant in this case was not a possession of land subject to an adverse claim. A good title was acquired by the predecessor of appellant to a large part of the tract of land which it received from the Dominguez heirs, and it was upon such portion of the tract only that possession was established and improvements made. There was no entry upon or actual possession maintained of any part of the land in dispute until a date less than five years prior to the commencement of this action. Under the rule stated, the proof of possession was insufficient to sustain the claim of title acquired by prescription.

The other errors assigned relate mainly to rulings of the trial judge as to the admission and rejection of evidence. These rulings, conceding error, were not such as to prejudice the rights of appellant, in view of the conclusions expressed on the main and controlling questions of the case.

The rehearing was ordered to again consider the provisions of section 322 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is claimed by the appellant that the foregoing opinion is inconsistent with the rule laid down in that section.

The section defines constructive adverse possession of land where the possession is taken under color of title. It provides that where "there has been a continued occupation and possession of the property included in such instrument, decree or judgment, or of some part of the property, under such claim, for five years, the property so included is deemed to have been held adversely," except where it is divided into lots and the actual possession is of only one lot. Under this provision, appellant claims that where the boundaries of the junior title interfere with those of the senior title, so that part only of the area of each is common to both and is unoccupied, the junior holder who occupies a part of his land not within the interference thereby becomes an adverse occupant of the overlap, although the right of the owner of the senior title to the whole of his tract is nowhere invaded or disturbed.

We are satisfied that this construction of the section cannot be sustained. The section is a part of the chapter relative to the statute of limitations, and it is intended to prescribe a rule to determine the time within which an action to recover real property, or an action arising out of the title thereto must be begun in order to avoid the bar of sections 318 and 319 relating thereto. All of these sections must be read in connection with section 312, declaring that in order to set the various periods of limitation running there must first be a cause of action; that the period begins to run only "after the cause of action shall have accrued." This is a necessary condition to the application of section 322; the occupancy must be of such a character that it would constitute a cause of action by the owner of the senior title. If the boundaries in the conflicting deeds are coterminous, the occupancy of any part of the tract by the owner of the junior title is an invasion of the right of the previous grantee and creates a cause of action in his favor. In such a case the constructive adverse possession extends to the entire tract. But if the boundaries given in the respective deeds of the two claimants are not coterminous, but only interfere, the senior owner has no cause of action, and, consequently, there is no constructive possession against him, unless some part of the land embraced in his deed is occupied by the junior holder. This proposition was well established at the time the Code provision was adopted, and will be found declared in the following cases: White v. Burnley, 61 U. S. (20 How.) 251, 15 L. Ed. 886; Bailey v. Carleton, 12 N. H. 9, 37 Am. Dec. 140; Turner v. Moore, 81 Tex. 206, 16 S. W. 929; Parker v. Bains, 59 Tex. 18; s. c., 65 Tex. 605; Trimble v. Smith, 7 Ky. (4 Bibb) 257; Pogue v. McKee, 10 Ky. (3 A. K. Marsh.) 128; Fox v. Hinton, 7 Ky. (4 Bibb) 561; Talbot v. McGavock, 9 Tenn. (1 Yerg.) 275; 3 Wash. Real Prop. (6th Ed.) § 1984. In Sedgwick & Wait on Trial of Title, § 770, the authors say:

"An actual entry and disseisin of the true owner by the adverse claimant under a paper title is therefore necessary for the latter to acquire any constructive possession under it."

In Bailey v. Carleton, supra, the court says that the principles upon which the rule is founded are "that the entry and possession of the party is notice to the owner of a claim asserted to his land," and that, if he makes no objection within the period of limitation, "he may well be presumed to have made some grant," and, further:

"We are of opinion that the rule cannot apply to a case where a party, having a deed which embraces land to which his grantor had good title, and other land to which he had no right, enters into and possesses that portion of the land which his grantor owned, but makes no entry into that part which he could not lawfully convey. There is no notice in such case to the owner of the land thus embraced in the deed and no possession which can be deemed adverse to him," and that, in order to give the entry the character of a disseisin of the true owner, "there must be actual possession of some portion of the land of such owner, and that of a nature to give notice of an adverse claim."

In that case there were adjoining lots with separate descriptions. But, as the quotation shows, the reasoning does not proceed upon that fact as a basis. Speaking of a case of interfering boundaries, the Supreme Court of Texas said:

"A condition precedent to the operation of the statute of limitations is possession, 'actual, visible, notorious, distinct, and hostile.' In this case, as against the true owner, no such possession was taken."

The possession of the adverse occupant did not include any part of the overlap. Turner v. Moore, supra. The other cases cited involved interfering boundaries and in this respect were practically identical with the case at bar.

The appellant endeavors to avoid the force of these decisions by the claim that in those states adverse possession gains title only to the part actually occupied. But this is not the case. The rule regarding occupancy under color of title is substantially the same as here. The condition precedent here involved was recognized in this state in Kimball v. Stormer, 65 Cal. 120, 3 Pac. 411, where the court said:

"It is apparent that, for a person to acquire a constructive adverse possession of land, he must actually oust the true owner of some part of his land."

Any other rule would be in some cases productive of great injustice. One could be deprived of title to his land without ever having actual notice that his title was disputed or claimed, and with no visible invasion of his premises. The present case is a good illustration of the consequences that would ensue. The strip in dispute bounded upon tidewater. The actual occupancy mainly relied on by appellants consisted of a railroad and appurtenances situated a mile distant and across an estuary of the bay. It did not give the least indication of a claim to the land along the meander line of the estuary and on the opposite side thereof.

We conclude therefore that the opening clause of section 322 reading as follows, "When it appears that the occupant, or those under whom he claims, entered into the possession of the property under claim of title," must be understood to refer to the "property" of the opposing owner, as distinguished from that described in the instrument constituting the color of title; that the "property," upon which he must enter to start his adverse claim against the true owner, must be some part of the property of that owner. It is the true owner whose title is to be destroyed, and it is some part of his rightful ownership which must be invaded. Once that is done, the adverse claim extends to all of the true owner's land embraced within the junior conveyance; but, until that is done, the section has no application.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

BOUNDARIES — 3 — IRREGULAR NATURAL BOUNDARY—STRAIGHT COURSES.

Where a deed gives the south boundary of a city, which is the high tide line of a bay, an irregular boundary, as the boundary between the points B and C of the land conveyed, such boundary is not changed by the additional description by straight courses.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Action by Marie Dolores D. De Watson, a widow, against the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company. From an adverse judgment and order, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. S. Halsted, W. F. Palmer, F. A. Waters, and Wilfred M. Peck, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. Woodruff & McClure, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. With one exception, the questions in this case are the same as those considered and decided in Wheatley v. San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company (L. A. No. 3299), 147 Pac. 135, this day decided. Upon the authority of that case those questions are determined against the appellant.

In this case the plaintiff was one of the grantors in a deed under which the appellant derives title. From this fact the appellant makes the additional point that she is estopped by her deed to assert a claim to the land in controversy. This proposition is based upon the theory that the deed executed by her conveyed title to the grantee to the strip of land between the straight line from B to C referred to in the opinion in the Wheatley Case, and the tide line to the south of it. This claim is without foundation. The boundary of the land described in her deed to the Terminal Land Company was not, as appellant claims, the straight line extending from B to C, but was the south boundary of Wilmington itself; that is to say, the actual high tide line of the bay. That deed presents the familiar case of an irregular boundary located by means of a meander line giving straight courses from point to point along the irregular line to be located thereby. In such cases the boundary extends to the irregular natural object which is meandered by the straight courses. See Wood v. Appal, 63 Pa. 221; 1 Jones on Real Prop. § 491.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. March 4, 1915.)

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Action by George C. Flint against the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company. From an adverse judgment and order, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. F. Palmer, F. A. Waters, and Wilfred M. Peck, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. Woodruff & McClure, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The questions in this case, based upon similar facts, are considered and decided in the case of Wheatley v. San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company (L. A. No. 3299) 147 Pac. 135, this day decided. Upon the authority of that decision, the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

169 Cal. 521

PATTON et al. v. CITY OF WILMINGTON et al. (L. A. 3485.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 4, 1915.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS — 144 — SALE — TIDELANDS.

A sale by the state of uplands and adjoining tidelands being void as to the tidelands, because they were within two miles of an incorporated town, and so reserved from sale, subsequent repeal of the incorporation of the town would not vest title to the tidelands in such purchasers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. §§ 391-399; Dec. Dig. — 144.]

2. NAVIGABLE WATERS — 44 — RIPARIAN OWNERS — ACCRETIONS.

Accretions, caused by an embankment built by a railroad across tidelands under license from the state, do not inure as such to the owner of the upland, so as to divest the state of title to tidelands so covered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Navigable Waters, Cent. Dig. §§ 266-278, 281, 282; Dec. Dig. — 44.]

3. NAVIGABLE WATERS — 44 — RIPARIAN OWNERS — FILLED IN TIDELANDS.

That the city, to which the state grants tidelands in trust for the purposes of public navigation and commerce, to fit it for such purposes, fills in along the shore, does not have the effect of passing to the owner of the upland the title to the tidelands so filled.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Navigable Waters, Cent. Dig. §§ 266-278, 281, 282; Dec. Dig. — 44.]

4. NAVIGABLE WATERS — 39 — RIPARIAN OWNERS — TIDELANDS.

All rights of riparian owners over adjacent tidelands are subject to the public easements for the purposes of navigation, and must yield thereto when asserted by the state or its agencies.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Navigable Waters, Cent. Dig. §§ 21, 53, 82, 103, 112, 117, 127, 239-244; Dec. Dig. — 39.]

5. ADVERSE POSSESSION — 7 — TIDELANDS.

No title to tidelands can be acquired by adverse possession against the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 24-42; Dec. Dig. — 7.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by Ruth Patton and others against the City of Wilmington and another. From an adverse judgment, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Smith, Miller & Phelps, of Los Angeles, for appellants. John W. Shenk, City Atty., Anderson & Anderson, and Leslie R. Hewitt, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The plaintiffs have appealed from the judgment. The city of Los Angeles was not named as a defendant in the complaint. It was, however, substituted as defendant instead of the city of Wilmington. Thereupon the action was dismissed as to all the other defendants. The action proceeded as an action between the plaintiffs and the city of Los Angeles as the sole defendant, the city filed an answer, and upon these pleadings the trial took place. The complaint states a cause of action to quiet title to a tract of land, a part of which lies within the bay of San Pedro, containing about seven acres, and incidentally to enjoin the defendants from removing the soil therefrom and from depositing soil thereon, and for damages. The pleading of the city of Los Angeles denies the plaintiffs' title and the alleged trespasses and damages. It further alleges that the part of the land described in the complaint which lies south of the southern boundary line of the San Pedro or Dominguez ranch is tideland and is covered by the ordinary tides of the bay of San Pedro. Thereupon it asks judgment that the plaintiffs have no right or title in or to said tideland. The findings state that the plaintiffs are the owners of the part of the tract lying north of the San Pedro ranch boundary and that the city of Los Angeles is the owner of the part lying south of said line, that is, of the tidelands, and is entitled to the possession thereof, and further that said land has been reserved, for purposes of navigation, by the United States government. Judgment was given that the plaintiffs are the owners of the said upland parcel and that the city of Los Angeles is the owner of the parcel of tideland, in trust for the uses set forth in the act of the Legislature granting said lands to the said city.

In explanation of what would otherwise seem to be a finding outside of the issues, it is to be observed that, after the filing of the answer and before the trial, the Legislature passed the act of May 1, 1911, granting to the city of Los Angeles all the right, title, and interest of the state in all the tide and submerged lands within the city boundaries, as then constituted, which included the tideland in controversy here, in trust for certain enumerated uses and purposes which may be described in general terms as the uses and purposes of public navigation and commerce. Stats. 1911, 1256. At the time of the trial, therefore, the city of Los Angeles had succeeded to the title of the state. The case is to be considered as a controversy between the plaintiffs and the city of Los Angeles as the successor of the state. As this was shown as matter of law, of which the court will take judicial notice, and as there seems to have been no objection made in the court below to the substitution of the city of Los Angeles for the city of Wilmington, or to the filing of the answer by the former, or to the sufficiency thereof, or to the making of the finding of title in the former, provided it is supported by the law and the evidence, the irregularity of the proceedings may be disregarded. The trial manifestly proceeded upon the theory that the title of the defendant, under the aforesaid statute, and the title previously held by the state as well, was in issue.

The first point urged is that the land south of the boundary of the San Pedro or Dominguez grant is not tideland. If it is tideland, then, under the decisions in People v. California Fish Co., 166 Cal. 576, 138 Pac. 79, and the companion cases decided at the same time, it was withheld from sale at the time the predecessors in interest of the plaintiffs claim to have purchased it from the state, and the patents and purchases made by them from the state officers are void. In so far as it proves to be tideland, a secondary question is presented, namely, the claim of the plaintiffs that they have acquired title thereto from the state by prescription. The appellants also claim littoral rights as owners of the upland riparian to the navigable water.

[1, 2] It is first contended that a part of the land south of the boundary has ceased to be tideland because of an accretion to the mainland caused by the erection of an embankment leading from the upland by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company along the line of its road leading from the mainland across a part of the bay. Regarding this and other claims of accretions by and additions to the upland, or because of erections and embankments of others, it is sufficient to say that the point assumes that it was once tideland, and that, this being so, it was reserved from sale, and was not alienable by any state officer under any law, during the time when the alleged accretions occurred, and therefore no artificial embankment, made by third persons, or made or suffered by state officers or agents, nor any accretion to the adjacent upland caused thereby, could operate to divest the state of its title to the tideland so reserved. There was an interval of nearly a year, being the period between March 12, 1887, the date of the repeal of the act incorporating Wilmington, and March 1, 1888, the date of the incorporation of the city of San Pedro, during which there was no incorporated city or town within two miles of this land and it was free from the reservation aforesaid. We do not think this fact could have effect to attach to the upland, as part thereof, the previously formed accretions and embankments, or to divest the state of its title to the tideland with which it had not previously parted. The railroad embankments were made pursuant to a license from the state under the Civil Code. We can see no plausible reason for the contention that the making of such embankments, or accretions caused thereby, would operate in favor of third persons to divest the state of its title to tidelands covered by the embankment and accretions extending out over it from the adjacent upland, and transfer the title to the owner of the upland. The case of Ledyard v. Ten Eyck, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 102, cited by appellants in support of the proposition that such embankments or accretions belong to the owner of the adjacent upland, is really authority to the contrary. That was a controversy between the owner of the upland and the owner of other land in the vicinity. What the court decided was that the possession of the accretions by the owner of the abutting upland could be disputed by no one except the state. In view of the statute under which this railroad embankment was made and the purposes for which it is used, the state cannot have intended to put itself in the position of one who affixes his property to the land of another without an agreement for its removal, and thus to transfer the affixed property to the owner of the land, as provided in section 1013 of the Civil Code. That section can have no application to an accretion thus caused.

[3] The appellants also claim title to a part of the tideland that has been filled in by the city of Los Angeles since its acquisition of the title, in the improvement of the land to fit it for navigation and commerce. The city, under its grant, has no power to deal with the land otherwise. This change in the character of the land could have no effect to transfer it to the owners of the abutting upland. Our conclusion, upon all these points, is that the land south of the ranch boundary still retains its character as tideland.

[4] With regard to the claim of littoral rights, we need only refer to the discussion thereof in People v. Southern Pacific Co., 166 Cal. 629, 138 Pac. 103, and in the more recent case of Henry Dalton & Sons Co. v. Oakland, 143 Pac. 721, wherein it is held that all rights of riparian owners over the adjacent tidelands are subject to the public easements for the purposes of navigation, and must yield thereto when the latter are asserted by the state or its agencies.

[5] The remaining proposition urged for reversal is that of the claim of the appellants to title by adverse possession. There is evidence that in 1874 the plaintiffs' predecessor in interest took possession of the part of the land north of the ranch boundary, under a deed from Banning & Alexander, purporting to describe and convey the entire tract in controversy, including the tideland, and that said predecessor and the plaintiffs have ever since that date held possession of such upland, claiming title to the entire tract. The claim is that, under this deed and possession of the upland, the plaintiffs have for that period had constructive adverse possession of the tideland. If this is correct, and such adverse possession could lawfully divest the title of the state to the tideland, the plaintiff would thereby have acquired such title, and the judgment awarding said tideland to the city would be erroneous.

It is conceded that no character or period of adverse possession could terminate or affect the public easements for purposes of navigation and fishery. It has long been the doctrine in this state that no length of time of maintenance, or number of repetitions, of wrongful encroachments, can legalize a public nuisance; that adverse possession of land devoted to public use does not divest the right of the state, or other public body corporate in which the title is vested, to maintain such public use, nor in any manner affect the public right or the public use. People v. Kerber, 152 Cal. 731, 93 Pac. 878, and cases there cited, to which may be added, Ex parte Taylor, 87 Cal. 95, 25 Pac. 258; Bowen v. Wendt, 103 Cal. 238, 37 Pac. 149; Hoadley v. San Francisco, 70 Cal. 324, 12 Pac. 125; San Francisco v. Itsell, 80 Cal. 59, 22 Pac. 74; San Francisco v. Straut, 84 Cal. 125, 24 Pac. 814; People v. Holladay, 93 Cal. 245, 29 Pac. 54, 27 Am. St. Rep. 186; Hargro v. Hodgdon, 89 Cal. 631, 26 Pac. 1106; Board v. Martin, 92 Cal. 209, 28 Pac. 799. So far as the public easements and the right of the state to improve and control the land for such purposes are concerned, therefore, the claim based on adverse possession gives the plaintiffs no rights whatever.

The theory is advanced that, although the public easements are not impaired or affected, the adverse possession is effectual to vest in the possessor the servient estate, the fee subject to the public easements. The general doctrine is that the title acquired by complete adverse possession is a title in fee simple. Wright v. Carillo, 22 Cal. 595; Arrington v. Liscom, 34 Cal. 370; Cannon v. Stockmon, 36 Cal. 541, 95 Am. Dec. 205. The suggestion is that, if this be so, the adverse possession will be given effect as far as it can go, and will divest that part of the estate which the state had power to alienate without a violation of its duty to protect and improve the land in furtherance of the public use, the same effect that this court, in People v. California Fish Co., supra, held will be given to sales of unreserved tidelands under the law for the disposition of swamp and tidelands; that is, to give the possessor the naked title to the soil without right to interfere with the public easements.

There can be no doubt that this proposition has not heretofore had the approval of this court. The contrary has been often, in effect, adjudged. An examination of the cases above cited and referred to shows that in many of them the decision and judgment was, in effect, a denial of the doctrine.

In People v. Kerber, supra, the plaintiff sued to recover possession of tidelands in San Diego Bay. The defendants denied the plaintiff's ownership and claimed title by prescription. The judgment in favor of the state, covering the entire fee, was affirmed. The defendants had held possession for some 15 years, claiming title-in fee. If this possession had availed to give them title by prescription, to the fee, subject to the public easement, the judgment should at least have been modified so as to preserve to them that title. It was a valuable right, for a seawall had been established by the state, which, if built as planned, would have excluded this land from navigation, the public easements over it would have ceased, and the defendants would have thenceforth held the land in fee simple, free from the public right.

In San Leandro v. Le Breton, 72 Cal. 170, 13 Pac. 405, a judgment declaring that defendants could not, by prescription, become owners of land dedicated as a public square, was affirmed. Under the doctrine claimed, the adverse possession would have given them the fee subject to the public use. If that doctrine had been sanctioned, the judgment should have been reversed or modified.

In Mills v. Los Angeles, 90 Cal. 522, 27 Pac. 354, an absolute judgment for defendant, notwithstanding the fact that plaintiff had held the land adversely many years, was unconditionally affirmed, thus virtually denying that plaintiff had acquired any title or interest by the adverse possession, though it had continued for more than 10 years.

In Archer v. Salinas, 93 Cal. 47, 28 Pac. 839, 16 L. R. A. 145, the action was to quiet title to land dedicated as a public park. Plaintiff had held adverse possession for more than 10 years, but judgment was given for defendant. This judgment was affirmed, with no provision for any subordinate estate in Archer, in effect declaring that he gained no right by the adverse possession.

Home v. San Francisco, 119 Cal. 534, 51 Pac. 950, was in all respects identical with Archer v. Salinas on this point, except that the lot had been set apart for a different public use. The cases of Holladay v. San Francisco, 124 Cal. 352, 57 Pac. 146, and San Francisco v. Sharp, 125 Cal. 534, 58 Pac. 173, the first involving land dedicated as a park, and the second land dedicated as a hospital lot, are each to the same effect. The adverse claimants were awarded no title whatever, whereas, under this doctrine, they should have been awarded the fee, subject to the public use. These decisions are all, in effect, a denial of the proposition.

In Yolo Co. v. Barney, 79 Cal. 378, 21 Pac. 833, 12 Am. St. Rep. 152, the land in controversy had been dedicated to public use for a county hospital. The defendant had been in possession of part of it, under adverse claim of title, for 15 years. About a year before the suit was begun, the county hospital had been removed from the tract, and the actual public use seems to have been then discontinued and abandoned in fact, though the court found that there had been no abandonment of the right to the public use. The action was to quiet title, and the judgment in favor of the plaintiff, covering the entire fee, was affirmed without qualification.

If we look to the language of the decisions, we find many expressions wholly inconsistent with the theory here advanced. The italics in the subsequent quotations are ours. In Visalia v. Jacob, 65 Cal. 434, 4 Pac. 433, 52 Am. Rep. 303, the court said:

"The right of possession is held by the corporation for the benefit of the public, and this right cannot be conveyed to any private person. The lands so held are effectually withdrawn from commerce while the street continues. * * * As the municipality cannot convey the title, or release itself of the trust, private persons are virtually precluded from acquiring it."

In Yolo Co. v. Barney, supra, the court said:

"As we understand the decisions of California, they place the nonrunning of the statute of limitations upon the ground that the public is in the use of the land, and that while in such use a trespasser may neither erect a nuisance thereon, nor acquire a right to hold the land based upon a supposed grant to the land from the owner."

In Mills v. Los Angeles, supra, the opinion concludes with this statement:

"Of course, no adverse rights could be acquired in the property after it had become a public street."

In Orena v. Santa Barbara, 91 Cal. 631, 28 Pac. 270, is this language:

"If the premises are a part of the public street, there could be no adverse possession. Individuals may intrude upon or obstruct a public thoroughfare, but the public cannot be dispossessed of such lands, and such intruder acquires no rights."

In San Francisco v. Bradbury, 92 Cal. 418, 28 Pac. 805, speaking of land reserved for public use, this is said:

"An individual could not by mere adverse possession acquire any title to such land, or invoke the aid of the statute of limitations as a defense to its recovery."

In Board v. Martin, supra, 92 Cal. at page 217, 28 Pac. 802, on the same point it is said:

"The lands so reserved could not thereafter have been divested by any adverse possession."

In Archer v. Salinas, supra, 93 Cal. 51, 28 Pac. at page 841, 16 L. R. A. 145:

"The property dedicated has become public property, impressed with the use for which it was dedicated, and neither can the public divert it from that use, nor can it be lost by adverse possession."

In Ames v. San Diego, 101 Cal. 394, 35 Pac. 1006, it is said that land held by a city in trust for a public use "cannot be alienated by the city, and the title of the public thereto cannot be lost by a possession adverse to the city."

In Southern Pacific Co. v. Hyatt, 132 Cal. 244, 64 Pac. 274, 54 L. R. A. 522, the court says:

"Individuals may intrude upon or obstruct the public thoroughfare, but cannot acquire title by prescription."

And finally, in People v. Kerber, supra, the subject is treated at length in a case where, as above stated, the subordinate estate was involved and was of immediately prospective value. Speaking in terms of "tidelands," and not merely of the public easements therein, the court says (152 Cal. 733, 93 Pac. 879):

"And when such tidelands are situated in a navigable bay and constitute a part of the waterfront thereof, as is the case here, they constitute property devoted to the public use, of which private persons cannot obtain title by prescription, founded upon adverse occupancy for the period prescribed by the statute of limitations. * * * Property thus held by the state in trust for public use cannot be gained by adverse possession, and the statute of limitations does not apply to an action by the state or its agents to recover such property from one using it for private purposes not consistent with the public use."

And referring to the abandonment of the public use, after saying that upon such abandonment the state will hold the land as a proprietor and not as a public agent in charge of a public use, the opinion proceeds:

"If an adverse possession can be maintained, or if the statute of limitations can run against the state, in regard to such proprietary property, it will begin from the date when the public use ceased and not before."

Further referring to the provisions of the Constitution withholding from grant or sale "all tidelands" within two miles of any incorporated city or town" fronting on navigable waters, the opinion proceeds to say that:

Such property "cannot without an amendment of the Constitution be disposed of by the state in any manner, except in furtherance of the purpose of navigation to which it is dedicated. * * * If the state is without power to dispose of this land for private use at all, its officers and agents must be without power to make a virtual disposition of it by their neglect in permitting private persons to occupy it for a period of 10 years, under claim of ownership, and thus giving such persons an opportunity to invoke for their benefit a legislative declaration that such occupancy will bar the state of its title. * * * In this view of the case, it is immaterial whether title by prescription under the code is, or is not, founded upon the presumption that the possession was originally taken under a grant which has been lost in the lapse of time, as was the case at common law, even if it were conceded that the rule that there can be no adverse possession of property devoted to public use did not apply to this land."

In considering the effect of these statements, it must be remembered that, in order to sustain the judgment of the lower court in that case, it was necessary to establish the proposition that the defendants had not, by their admitted adverse possession, acquired any title, interest, or estate whatever in the land. They asserted title, and, if they had shown any interest, it would have been necessary to modify or reverse the judgment. The decision must be deemed to hold that they did not acquire a subordinate estate subject to the public easement, nor any estate of any character.

From this review of the decisions, it is certain that it has hitherto been the opinion of this court, many times reiterated, that possession under adverse claim of title, of land devoted to public use at the time, is wholly ineffectual, not only upon the public use or easement, but also upon the title to the soil, or land, including the public easement and every subordinate estate, as well.

Against the force of these decisions the argument seems to be that as in the recent decision in People v. California Fish Co., supra, we declared that a sale of tideland, in pursuance of the swamp and tideland provisions of the Political Code, while not a disposition of the public easement or a discontinuance of the use for navigation was nevertheless a valid transfer of the subordinate estate, and since it is well settled that a prescriptive title is a title in fee simple as against all upon whom prescription is effective, we must now hold that prescription runs against the state with respect to the subordinate estate and is sufficient to divest it of title to that interest. We do not think the conclusion is necessary or reasonable. Mainly because of the entire absence of anything in the swamp land laws purporting to deal with the subject of navigation, or to protect, preserve or provide for it, or to show a design to execute the public trust upon which the state holds tideland in the interest of navigation, we held in that case that such a sale did not affect the public easement. But, because the law clearly indicated the intent and purpose to dispose of some estate in the land, we gave it effect upon the subordinate estate only, the title to the soil subject to the public easement. The cases are not analogous or parallel. There is nothing in our law from which it can be reasonably inferred that the state intends that adverse possession shall operate against the subordinate estate in cases in which it is inoperative upon the public use. Such possession is a plain trespass upon the public easement, an easement to the enjoyment of which actual possession is necessary. The proposition requires us to say that a possession which is entirely ineffective against the public right which involves possession is at the same time silently working upon the servient estate which it does not in any practical manner disturb so long as the public easement exists. This is in direct contravention of the well-established principle that nothing can be taken by implication against the state, that it will not be presumed to have intended to divest itself of its property, unless such intent is expressed in terms or necessarily implied from the words used. Oakland v. Oakland W. F. Co., 118 Cal. 171, 50 Pac. 277; Clark v. Los Angeles, 160 Cal. 39, 116 Pac. 722; Helena W. Co. v. Helena, 195 U. S. 392, 25 Sup. Ct. 40, 49 L. Ed. 245; Knoxville v. Knoxville, 200 U. S. 33, 26 Sup. Ct. 224, 50 L. Ed. 353. This principle is more frequently applied to public statutes or express grants, but we see no reason why it does not also apply to acts in pais whereby public property may be taken. The conduct of public officers in charge of these lands in failing to dispossess trespassers, clearly, is no evidence of an intent of the state to dispose of any interest therein. We regard this argument as wholly insufficient to justify a disregard of the numerous precedents and declarations to the contrary in our decisions.

Moreover, it is not in accord with the reasons upon which the rule that adverse possession does not affect land devoted to public use rests. Upon this point it has been said:

"The distinction between public rights and private ones is quite natural. Every man must look to his rights; but in the case of public rights, where no individual has a prior right or interest, distinct from his fellows, where he can bring no action for a public nuisance, acquiescence—silence—goes for nothing. No man wishes in such a case to single out himself, and to be the actor against his neighbor; what is every one's concern is no one's concern, and therefore it is that length of time is no answer to a public prosecution for a public injury." Commonwealth v. McDonald, 16 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 394.

True, this was said in a case where the defendant was prosecuted for obstructing a public highway; public right alone was involved; but no distinction between the public easement and the subordinate estate was mentioned. And in civil cases similar reasons are given.

In Almy v. Church, 18 R. I. 187, 26 Atl. 58, the court said that the grounds of the doctrine "are variously stated, as: That an obstruction is a nuisance and no nuisance can ripen into a right; that individuals may reasonably be held to a limited period to enforce their rights against adverse occupants, because they have an interest sufficient to make them vigilant; while in public rights of property, each individual feels but a slight interest and will tolerate a manifest encroachment rather than seek a dispute to set it right; that public policy requires the preservation of public rights; and that a municipality cannot by permissive neglect invest an intruder with title to a public highway." The main idea seems to be that a hostile occupancy of land devoted to a public use cannot be allowed to initiate an effective adverse possession, the reason being that land so used is not ordinarily as well guarded against intruders as proprietary land or land in private ownership. The reason applies to the underlying estate as forcibly as to the public easement.

And, lastly, it cannot be said that the rule so long followed has been productive of such injury or injustice that public policy requires its abrogation. Almost invariably an adverse possession of land is manifested by acts occurring only on the surface and consists solely of the control of the surface. The subordinate estate, the estate which can be enjoyed without control of the surface, is not disturbed or injured in any manner by the ordinary or usual adverse possession. Where, under the law, the hostile possession cannot operate upon the easement for the enjoyment of which the surface is necessary, and where no notice of any claim to the servient estate is brought home to the owner thereof, it would not occur to the ordinary mind that such possession would affect or divest such servient estate. To declare that it does would cause injustice oftener than it would prevent it.

All these considerations are emphasized by the character of the possession upon which this hostile claim is asserted. There has been no actual occupancy of this tideland by the plaintiffs or their predecessors in interest. Their claim is based on the fact that the lines of the deed under which they claim extended out into the bay and included this tideland. If such constructive possession were allowed to accrue into a title, all that would be necessary to divest the state of the fee in the soil under the tidewater would be to go into possession of upland under a deed which included any desired area of the soil under the ocean, claiming title to the entire tract, and hold the possession for the required time. The plaintiffs claim that there was evidence of actual possession; but we find that it consisted of mere occasional passage across the tideland to deep water, and we cannot say that the implied finding on this point was contrary to the evidence. We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

I concur: SLOSS, J.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. I concur in the judgment, and in the opinion, except in so far as it deals with the question of the effect of the statute of limitations. I am not prepared to hold that the statute will not run against the state as to tideland with respect to the subordinate estate which it holds in a proprietary capacity, and which it may convey subject to the paramount trust under which the state holds all tideland. This precise question, discussed at great length in the opinion, has never been expressly decided, and I do not think the conclusion reached by Mr. Justice SHAW is at all compelled by any previous expression of this court. Of course, it was involved in one or two of the cases cited, though probably never argued, and certainly never discussed in any opinion.

A discussion of this question is entirely unnecessary in this case. It appears here, as stated in the opinion, that the implied finding that the plaintiffs and their predecessors have not had actual possession of any of the tideland is sufficiently sustained by the evidence. Their real claim is that, by virtue of a deed purporting to describe and convey to their predecessor such tideland and adjoining upland, the grantors being the owners of the upland, the subsequent possession by their predecessor and themselves of the upland carried constructive possession of the tideland. That such a claim is without good foundation is expressly held in Wheatley v. San Pedro, etc., R. R. Co., 147

Pac. 135, L. A. No. 3299, decided March 4, 1915, where the question is exhaustively discussed, and it is not necessary to say more on the subject here. This sufficiently disposes of the contentions of plaintiff herein based on a claim by prescription or under the statute of limitations.

HENSHAW, J. I concur in the judgment, but for reasons quite distinct from those announced in the prevailing opinion. The effort of appellants in this case was directed to establishing that they had acquired some sort of a prescriptive title to the lands in question—a fee growing out of the just privatum which is subject to the public control of the state under the jus publicum. It is learnedly argued, with an elaborate review of the authorities, that “this proposition has not heretofore had the approval of this court,” and pains are taken to show that certain judgments of this court have been given which could not have been given if the right to acquire such a title existed. All this argument is superfluous in view of the fact that no court nor jurisconsult ever conceived of the possibility of the existence of such a split fee until it was declared, or rather, I should say, was created by this court in People v. California Fish Co., 138 Pac. 79, and People v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 138 Pac. 94, 166 Cal. 576 et seq. In those cases the people of California were for the first time advised that this state, in offering for sale the fee of certain of its tidelands, without the slightest reservation of any rights in the act authorizing the sale, and in making grants and patents of these lands, without the suggestion of a reservation or limitation upon the title, and in taking its citizens’ money, under these circumstances was practicing the art of a Jeremy Diddler by hoodwinking its citizens into the belief that they were acquiring a fee simple to lands, whereas in fact they were but acquiring a nondescript jus privatum which entitled them to use the lands until the state should re-take them. The reason why no one of our early cases gives consideration to the proposition of this divided fee—the reason why no lawyer ever advanced it for the consideration of this court—is that it first came into existence in the law as the creation of this court in 1913. Indeed, it is said in the cases above referred to that in our earlier decisions “the double right of the state, private and public, does not seem to have been suggested or considered.” What more natural, since the creation by construction put on our tideland statute of this novel character of estate, than that litigants should come to this court for further definition of it and further light as to the method of its acquisition? Therefore it seems to me a wholly unsatisfying answer to such litigants to say that because a title by prescription embraces the whole fee, and that because our earlier decisions do not recognize that one may acquire a partial fee subject to a governmental right, their appeals are groundless. If there be such a divided fee as that which this court has said exists, why should not the right to acquire it be open to every one as is their right to acquire any other property by the same means? This is but the first of many questions that are certain to arise under this newly created fictional fee. The true and simple answer, under long and well-established principles of law, is that there is no such divided fee. That title to public land may not be acquired by prescription or adverse possession does not call for any refined and meticulous reasoning, made necessary only by our new creation, but may still rest safely upon the old familiar principles that one who by occupancy, however open, tries to gain an exclusive right in such lands, is maintaining a continuous public nuisance in the first place, and, in the second place, regardless of the length of time of such occupancy, he will not be protected against the state for his invasion of its rights, for the reason that under such circumstances the state is never charged with notice that its rights are invaded. Wherefore, and still applying these old and familiar principles, if the asserted occupancy of the appellants was constructive merely, manifestly no prescriptive title could be acquired. If the occupancy was actual and visible, then, if not under license or grant of the state, it was a mere purpresture, subject to abatement at any time at the will of the state. For these reasons I concur in the judgment.

HORSBURGH et al. v. MURASKY, Superior Court Judge. (S. F. 7038.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 3, 1915. Rehearing Denied April 1, 1915.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⚡214—JOINDER OF HUSBAND—TORTS.

Unless modified by statute, the common-law doctrine prevails that a husband must be joined as party defendant in a suit growing out of the wife's tort.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 791-794; Dec. Dig. ⚡214.]

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⚡212—JOINDER OF HUSBAND—STATUTES.

Code Civ. Proc. § 370, authorizing a wife to sue alone when the action concerns her separate property, does not authorize a suit against the wife without joinder of her husband for injuries resulting from a defective sidewalk in front of her property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 784-786; Dec. Dig. ⚡212.]

3. MANDAMUS ⚡43—REMEDY AT LAW—DISMISSAL OF SUIT—NONJOINDER OF HUSBAND.

Where suit is brought against husband and wife for injuries from a defective sidewalk in front of the wife's property, and the action is dismissed as to the husband, mandamus is the proper remedy to compel the dismissal of the action as to her; the wife not being suable alone, and no adequate remedy at law existing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 88, 89; Dec. Dig. ⚡43.]

In Bank. Petition for mandamus by Frances B. Horsburgh and James Horsburgh, Jr., against Frank J. Murasky, Judge. Alternative writ made final.

Charles S. Wheeler, John F. Bowie, and Nathan Moran, all of San Francisco, for petitioners. Lewis F. Byington, of San Francisco, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Petitioners applied for a writ of mandate requiring the respondent as judge of the superior court to dismiss a certain action as to Frances B. Horsburgh. An alternative writ issued, and the matter comes on regularly for decision and a determination whether or not the writ shall be made permanent.

The action in which petitioners were defendants was commenced on July 9, 1910, by Joseph B. Keenan and Carlotta Keenan, his wife, against a number of persons, including the Horsburghs. The complaint averred that they were husband and wife. The basis of the action was an alleged claim for damages for personal injuries sustained by Carlotta Keenan on July 12, 1909, by reason of the defective condition of a sidewalk in front of property belonging to Frances Horsburgh in the city and county of San Francisco. On July 1, 1913, summons and complaint were served on Mrs. Horsburgh, but her husband was not served until more than three years after the date of the issuance of the summons, and upon motion the action was dismissed as to him. On August 1, 1913, Mrs. Horsburgh moved for dismissal of the action on the ground that, as it had been dismissed so far as her husband was concerned, it might not be prosecuted against her because, under the provisions of section 370 of the Code of Civil Procedure, he was a necessary party. In denying the motion the learned judge of the superior court said, among other things:

"The statement made in McDonald v. Porsh, 136 Cal. 301 [68 Pac. 817], that, under the express provisions of the statute, the husband is a necessary party defendant in all cases where the wife is sued, a reading of the statute will show is incorrect. Section 370, Code of Civil Procedure, by its terms creates exceptions to the general rule, and this action falls within the exception stated in subdivision 1 of the section. This section but states the doctrine as laid down in Pomeroy: 'It is the settled rule in all the states which have adopted the reform procedure that in actions to recover damages for all torts, whether with or without violence, negligence, frauds, deceits, and other such wrongs done by the wife personally, and not done merely by or by the use of her separate property, the common-law principle is unaltered, and the husband and wife must be joined as codefendants.' Pomeroy on Remedies and Remedial Rights, § 320."

[1, 2] It is the settled law of this state that, unless modified by statute, the common-law doctrine that a husband must be joined as a party defendant in a suit growing out of a wife's tort still prevails. Henley v. Wilson, 137 Cal. 273, 70 Pac. 21, 58 L. R. A. 941, 92 Am. St. Rep. 160. If the action may be maintained against the wife alone, there must be therefore some statutory authority for such course. We do not find it in section 370 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section, at the time the action against petitioner was instituted, provided that:

"When a married woman is a party, her husband must be joined with her, except: (1) When the action concerns her separate property, or her right or claim to the homestead property, she may sue alone. (2) When the action is between herself and her husband, she may sue or be sued alone. (3) When she is living separate and apart from her husband by reason of his desertion of her, or by agreement, in writing, entered into between them, she may sue or be sued alone."

The recent amendment of this section (Stats. 1913, p. 217) did not alter the first subdivision in any respect which is at all material to this discussion.

Mrs. Horsburgh is admittedly living with her husband and they are not adverse parties in the suit in which the Keenans are plaintiffs. Therefore, if any authority exist for maintaining an action against her, it must be found in the first subdivision of the quoted section, and it will be noticed that said subdivision, while it permits a married woman to sue alone in an action concerning her separate property, does not provide that she may be sued alone. The learned trial court was in error therefore in construing that subdivision as giving authority for maintaining a suit against a married woman without joining her husband as a party. The rule is correctly stated in McDonald v. Porsh, supra, and in Taylor v. Darling, 19 Cal. App. 232, 125 Pac. 249, in which that case was followed. The quotation from Pomeroy's Remedies and Remedial Rights does state the general rule correctly, but the learned author also uses this language:

"If, however, the tort is not committed by the wife personally, but is done by means of her separate property, or in the use thereof, or under color or claim of ownership of her separate property, the action should be brought against her individually, without joining the husband as codefendant, in all those states whose statutes permit a married woman to be sued alone in respect of all matters which concern her separate estate."

See Pomeroy's Code Remedies, p. 314, § 222.

In many of the states the wife may sue or be sued in actions relating to her separate property without the necessity of her husband being joined as a party to the action. This is the rule in New York, for example (Rowe v. Smith, 45 N. Y. 233); but Prof. Pomeroy points out the fact that in California, Idaho, and Washington the law provides that she may sue alone in actions concerning her separate property. Pomeroy's Code Remedies (4th Ed.) § 152, note. In the brief filed on behalf of respondent the following language from Henley v. Wilson is quoted as sustaining the ruling of the lower court:

"Furthermore, by the express provision of the statute, the wife cannot be sued without her husband for a tort which does not concern her separate estate. She can sue or be sued alone only when: (1) The action concerns her separate property or her claim to the homestead; (2) when the action is between herself and husband; (3) when she is living in separation by his desertion, or under an agreement in writing. Code Civ. Proc. § 370."

The sole question in that case was whether or not the husband was liable in damages for the tort of his wife in committing an assault upon the person of another. It was held that he was liable. There was no question with reference to the kind of tort which we are here considering, and the quoted language was a dictum. Doubtless the quoted interpretation of subdivision 1 of section 370, Code of Civil Procedure, was due to an inadvertence.

We are of the opinion therefore that under our Code provisions the husband is a necessary party in an action for tort arising from the condition of the wife's separate property.

[3] Mandamus is the proper remedy. As we said in Puterbaugh v. Wadham, 162 Cal. 613, 123 Pac. 805:

"It is undoubtedly true that the writ of mandamus is not a writ of error, and that, generally speaking, it is not available for the purpose of altering or varying in any particular the finding of a judicial or quasi judicial body or officer acting within its or his appropriate jurisdiction; but where the facts are not disputed, and the only matter to be determined is the duty of the body or officer under the law, the court will define such duty and enforce not only its performance but the carrying out of the obligations of the respondent body or officer in a particular manner."

There is no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy available to petitioners for the court's failure to grant their motion to dismiss the action for damages so far as it related to Mrs. Horsburgh. Appeal is no such remedy, for there is no assurance that the cause will be promptly brought to trial, and Mrs. Horsburgh may be subjected for years to the inconvenience of having a suit for damages pending against her. Neither should she be put to the expense of defending in the action to which she remains a party through the trial court's error in denying her motion. Mandate will issue to compel the superior court to reinstate an appeal erroneously dismissed (Golden Gate Tile Co. v. Superior Court, 159 Cal. 474, 114 Pac. 978), or to grant a motion to dismiss an indictment upon which the court should have acted in accordance with petitioner's prayer (In re Ford, 160 Cal. 348, 116 Pac. 757, 35 L. R. A. [N. S.] 882, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1267). If follows, from the foregoing discussion, that petitioners in this proceeding are entitled to the relief for which they ask.

Let the alternative writ be made final, and the judge of the superior court be required to dismiss the action as to Frances B. Horsburgh according to the direction contained in said writ.

2. DEATH ⚡86—DAMAGES FOR DEATH—COMPENSATORY DAMAGES.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 377, authorizing the jury to give such damages for death as under the circumstances may be just compensation, damages for grief and wounded feelings cannot be awarded, nor can the suffering by decedent in consequence of receiving the fatal injuries be considered, but the law seeks only to compensate in terms of money for the loss, and, where children sue for the death of a parent, they may recover their reasonable expectations of financial benefit from the continued existence of the parent, including in this estimate the loss of the nurture, instruction, training, and care of which the children have been deprived.

In an action by children for the negligent death of a parent, evidence of the property received by them in the distribution of the estate of the deceased parent was not admissible.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Maud McLaughlin and others against the United Railroads of San Francisco. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. M. Abbott and Wm. M. Cannon, both of San Francisco, for appellant. Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiffs are the children and heirs at law of Margaret McLaughlin, a widow, whose death was occasioned by the admitted negligent act of defendant. Two of the children, Maud and Ralph, had attained their majority. Juanita, at the time of her mother's death, was a minor, aged 17 years. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs for the sum of $7,500. From the judgment which followed and from the order of the court denying defendant's motion for a new trial this appeal is prosecuted. Upon the appeal the principal question urged and argued is the error of the court in refusing to admit certain evidence offered by defendant. The case was first heard and decided in department, and a reconsideration of it was ordered before the court ~~in~~ bank because the question of the admissibility of the evidence here presented is new in this state, and in other states there is a contrariety of judicial opinion upon it.

Mrs. McLaughlin was a woman of refinement and of executive ability. Upon the death of her husband, a physician, she successfully conducted a drug store, which business brought in a net income of $250 a month. In addition to this she had a fixed income by way of rentals from real property of about $85 a month. The offered and rejected evidence was the inventory and appraisal and decree of final distribution in her estate. In short, it was evidence showing that the children—plaintiffs herein—had by the death of the mother come into the ownership of all of her property. The contention of the defendant upon the offer was that this evidence, showing what property the children had received because of the death of the mother, was not only proper, but necessary, for the consideration of the jury in the latter's effort to arrive at and declare in terms of money the loss with which the children had met because of her wrongful death, and that this is peculiarly and especially true as to the sum of $85 a month from rentals, which monthly sum represented a return in no wise dependent upon the skill, ability, or exertions of the deceased; that the exclusion of this evidence would necessarily result in a verdict by the jury greater than is warranted by the law.

[1, 2] At common law no right of action existed in favor of any one for the wrongful death of another. Human life was considered to be of such a character that its wrongful destruction could not be measured in terms of money. Where, therefore, such an action exists, it is the creature of statute. It is so in England by virtue of Lord Campbell's Act (Stats. 9 and 10, Victoria, c. 93). It is so in many of the states of the United States. These statutes differ in important respects. Thus in England and in some of the states, while the action may be brought by all of the heirs, there is the wise provision that the award shall be segregated amongst the heirs, for manifestly the loss by the death of a mother to a dependent minor daughter is much greater than the loss by the death of the same parent to an adult self-supporting married son. Some states in turn, because of the difficulty which they thought the jury would experience in making the award, have limited the maximum amount to various named sums. In this state (Code Civ. Proc. § 377) the jury is advised that it may give "such damages as under all the circumstances of the case may be just." Upon two propositions, however, all the statutes and all the decisions are agreed, that compensation for the grief and wounded feelings is not a legitimate element of the damages to be assessed, nor is the suffering of the injured person, though a matter for which he, had he lived, might recover, an element of the compensation of the plaintiffs. Indeed, it may be said that upon the fundamental principle governing the award in such cases all of the authorities are in harmony. The elements of damage differ, as for example, the elements of damage to a husband for the loss of his wife are not identical with the elements of damage to the minor children for the loss of their mother. But fundamentally the law seeks to compensate in terms of money for the loss (in the case here of children) of their reasonable expectations of financial benefit from the continued existence of the parent, including in this money estimate the loss of the nurture, instruction, training, and care, of which the children have been deprived. These latter elements are not here in question, and what is said has no reference to them. Our concern is solely with the question of the direct material, property loss, and of the legitimate evidence bearing upon that consideration.

[3] The English courts adopted the broad view that whatever of property the plaintiffs could be shown to have received through the death was competent evidence for the consideration of the jury in their effort to determine the amount of damage occasioned by the death. Thus the English courts held that, if a father had nothing and earned nothing and contributed nothing to the support of his family, the heirs' recovery under the statute would be nominal; that if the father's income was from fixed property, wholly independent of his own exertions, and this property went to plaintiffs, this could be shown to lessen the amount of the damages which might otherwise be awarded. Lord Campbell instructed his jury that the amount of an accident policy which the plaintiffs had received should be deducted from any award made to them. He thought that deduction should also be made on account of a regular life insurance policy, and suggested the nature of the allowance. But he ended his advice to the jury in this regard, by "leaving the matter, however, entirely in your hands." Pym v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 4 Best & Smith, 403; Bradburn v. Great Western Ry. Co., 10 Exch. 1; Jennings v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 13 App. Cas. 800. Diametrically opposed to this line of authority are the decisions of many of the courts of the United States, holding, for the reasons hereinafter considered, that it is not permissible to present such evidence to the consideration of the jury; while occupying a middle ground are cases typified by one which is perhaps the most quoted—San Antonio Ry. Co. v. Long, 87 Tex. 156, 27 S. W. 116, 24 L. R. A. 637, 47 Am. St. Rep. 87. Certain expressions in the Long Case would seem to carry the doctrine of the Texas court to the full extent of the English decisions, as "under such a law we cannot see how it can be maintained that one has been damaged by the death, when he has received from the estate of the deceased property exceeding in value all the prospective benefits which would have accrued to him had the death not ensued." But the force of this general language is much modified by later decisions. Gulf, etc., Co. v. Younger, 90 Tex. 387, 38 S. W. 1121; Tyler, etc., v. Raspberry, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 186, 34 S. W. 794; Lipscomb v. Houston, etc., Ry. Co., 95 Tex. 5, 64 S. W. 923, 55 L. R. A. 869, 93 Am. St. Rep. 804; Houston, etc., Co. v. Le Mair, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 237, 119 S. W. 1162. In short, the Texas courts have shown no disposition to put into judicial effect the language of the Long Case, above quoted. And yet it must be apparent that there is no logical middle ground such as that sought to be established in the Long Case. The English doctrine is at least logical, in allowing all of the evidence of this character to go before the jury. It is certainly extremely illogical to admit certain evidence and refuse consideration to other evidence of like character tending equally to establish the controverted issue, namely, the amount of damage sustained. The other doctrine, which may be designated the American doctrine, since it finds acceptance in most of the courts of the United States, announces, as has been said, the diametrically opposite view, that none of this evidence is admissible, and none of it is entitled to the jury's consideration. The best-reasoned of these cases is Stahler v. Philadelphia Ry. Co., 199 Pa. 383, 49 Atl. 273, 85 Am. St. Rep. 791. While the discussion is all of interest and value, we must content ourselves with a brief quotation, which succinctly presents the view in opposition to that of the English courts:

"The true question is: What had these plaintiffs the right to expect to receive from the parent during his life? And for the loss of this they are to be compensated. What they got after his death does not enter into the case. The loss spoken of is the taking away of that which they were receiving, and would have received had he lived. It is the destruction of their expectations in this regard that the law deals with, and for which it furnishes compensation. To say, 'True it is we have taken from you his benefactions, but you get by law, not from us, but from his estate which we thus make available for you, something better,' is to substitute the heirs' legal right under the law for the company's liability."

This rule of evidence has its foundation in the refusal of the court to allow the defendant to benefit by his own wrong, to lessen his responsibility in damages for the injury which he has inflicted, by a showing that, quite fortuitously, through no contribution of defendant's own, the plaintiffs have received a certain pecuniary benefit.

As we have said, there is no tenable middle ground and no sound fluctuating rule of evidence. Under the English view all such evidence is admissible and logically admissible. Under the American view such evidence is in its nature base, is founded upon the tort of the party who seeks to avail himself of it, and should not be admitted; so the law will admeasure the consequences of the defendant's act by the situation existing at the time of the act, and not by after-accruing consequences. That this, as has been said, is the American view, citation may be made to numerous cases, viz.: Kellogg v. N. Y. C. & Hudson R. R. Co., 79 N. Y. 72; Althorf v. Wolfe, 22 N. Y. 355; Geary v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 73 App. Div. 441, 77 N. Y. Supp. 54; Ill. Cent. Ry. Co. v. Barron, 72 U. S. (5 Wall.) 90, 18 L. Ed. 591; Ladd v. Foster (D. C.) 31 Fed. 833; Clune v. Restine, 94 Fed. 749, 36 C. C. A. 450; Chicago, etc., Co. v. Hambel, 2 Neb. (Unof.) 607, 89 N. W. 643; Houston v. Gran, 38 Neb. 687, 57 N. W. 403; Western Ry. v. Meigs, 74 Ga. 867; Harding v. Townsend, 43 Vt. 536, 5 Am. Rep. 304; Carroll v. Railway Co., 88 Mo. 239, 57 Am. Rep. 382; Sloss-Sheffield Co. v. Holloway, 144 Ala. 280, 40 South. 211; C. R. I. & P. Co. v. Holmes, 68 Neb. 826, 94 N. W. 1007; Tiffany on Death by Wrongful Act, § 176; 13 Cyc. p. 364; 8 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 935; 4 Sutherland, Dam. 1265. In conclusion upon this matter, we hold that the rule of evidence thus announced by the American authorities is more in consonance with justice than that which obtains in England, and that therefore the proffered evidence was properly rejected.

[4, 5] Appellant complains of the court's refusal to give an instruction in the following language:

"The pecuniary value of the life of the deceased to the plaintiffs is the value in money of the life of said decedent to the plaintiffs at the time of her death."

It is said that this instruction was approved as a correct exposition of the law in Hillebrand v. Standard Biscuit Co., 139 Cal. 236, 73 Pac. 163. In the Hillebrand Case the action was on behalf of the father and mother, sole heirs, to recover for the death of their daughter. The court had instructed the jury that its award must be limited to the pecuniary damages, and then had said that:

"The pecuniary loss in such case means the value in money, if any, of the life of the deceased to her father and mother."

Appellant, objecting to this instruction, contended merely that the phrase "to her father and mother" would justify an allowance greater than the actual pecuniary loss sustained. This court declared merely that such a ground of objection was trivial and untenable. But to hold that an instruction is not erroneous for the reason above indicated is an entirely different matter from saying that a case should be reversed for a refusal to give the instruction. And, indeed, such an instruction, standing alone, might very properly be refused, as tending to confuse, rather than to enlighten. It states a truth as obvious as that two and two make four, and therefore there is no necessity for giving it. The giving of it alone and unexplained therefore would tend to arouse inquiry in the jurors' minds as to some deeper significance, some profounder truth, which it might be thought to contain. In a very broad sense, the plaintiffs do recover for the "value in money" to them of the life which is taken away. But unless fully advised, the jury might not understand that that value in money includes elements upon which in truth no real value in money can be placed, elements the value of which the law, for utter lack of a better method of compensation, says shall be estimated in terms of money. Who can accurately estimate, for example, in terms of money, the value to a growing daughter of the care of a wise and loving mother? With that companionship the daughter may grow into a worthy successor of the mother; without it she may fall upon evil ways, and her loss be incalculable in any terms of money. These are legitimate elements of consideration by the jury, but they are elements which are not obvious in the mere declaration, standing alone, of "the value in money of the life of the deceased." Wherefore we hold that, since the jury was fully and fairly instructed upon all of these matters, the refusal to give this particular instruction was not error, and, if the jury had not been fully instructed upon these matters the court would have been justified in refusing to give this instruction, which, though verbally accurate, might have occasioned misleading confusion in the jurors' minds.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

GOLDSMITH v. GOLDSMITH. (Civ. 1544.)(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 2, 1915.)DIVORCE ⚡129—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2079, and Civ. Code, § 130, declaring that a divorce cannot be granted upon the uncorroborated statement, admission, or testimony of the parties to an action, a divorce cannot be granted on the ground of misconduct of the wife, where the only proof of it was contained in letters claimed to have been written by her to her alleged paramour.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Meyer Goldsmith against Lena Goldsmith, who cross-complained. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

W. A. Martin, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Frank S. Adams and Adams & Mahan, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Respondent brought this action to secure from appellant a decree of divorce on the ground of adultery. A cross-complaint was filed in which appellant set up causes of action for extreme cruelty, desertion and failure to provide. The trial judge granted to plaintiff the decree, and defendant appealed from an order made denying her motion for a new trial.

It is urged that the evidence is insufficient to justify the decision of the court, and with this contention we must agree. In the complaint four specific acts of adultery were charged as having been committed by appellant with one Ben Gordon (or Van Gordon) in the year 1910. The court made a general finding that in the year mentioned appellant had been guilty of the acts charged against her. Respondent, the husband, testified that he knew nothing of the alleged adulterous acts having been committed of his own knowledge. He testified that the man Ben Gordon had called upon him and handed him a number of letters which the witness said were in the handwriting of appellant. These letters were introduced in evidence and constituted practically the entire evidence which tended to show that appellant was guilty of the acts of which she was accused. The letters were addressed to the man Gordon at various places and contained terms of endearment and expressions from which it might be fairly deduced that the relations between the writer and Gordon were of an intimate character. There were two letters introduced in evidence written by the man Gordon to appellant at about the time the action for divorce was commenced. These letters were full of malicious and revengeful statements directed by the writer against appellant, and furnished no evidence of the commission of the adulterous acts alleged, either when considered alone or in connection with the letters previously written by appellant to Gordon. The trial judge, at the conclusion of the hearing, announced that he would grant the decree based on the letters alone. Of course, if it appeared from all of the evidence, irrespective of the statement of the court as to the particular items thereof which influenced his decision, that the charge as found against appellant had been made out, it would be the duty of this court to sustain the judgment. But there was no other evidence of a material character which, when considered with the contents of the letters, could be said to make out a case for respondent. It is expressly provided by our statutes, both in the Civil Code and in the Code of Civil Procedure, that such a decree as that rendered herein cannot be based upon the uncorroborated statement, admission, or testimony of the parties to the action. Civ. Code, § 130; Code Civ. Proc. § 2079. The evidence was insufficient to support the decision of the court. Hayes v. Hayes, 144 Cal. 626, 78 Pac. 19.

The order denying the motion for a new trial is reversed.

SULLIVAN v. GILLON. (Civ. 1310.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 26, 1915. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court March 25, 1915.)

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS § 82 — "AFTER CAUSE OF ACTION SHALL HAVE ACCRUED"—STATUTES.

An action for the possession or value of personalty wrongfully taken by defendant after owner's death is within the three years' statute of limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 3), though no administration was had for more than 16 years after the wrong, notwithstanding section 353, providing that where one entitled to sue dies before the expiration of the time limited to sue, and the cause of action survives, an action may be commenced by his representative within a specified period, and the statute limiting the commencement of civil actions "after the cause of action shall have accrued"; the quoted phrase not implying in addition the existence of a person legally competent to sue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 425, 427; Dec. Dig. § 82.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; A. J. Buckles, Judge.

Action by Anna B. Sullivan, as administratrix of Rose Bartels Sullivan, deceased, against Jennie A. Gillon. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Frank E. Powers, of San Francisco, for appellant. Andrew Thorne and C. J. Goodell, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. The action is claim and delivery to recover possession or the value of certain articles of jewelry, of the agreed value of $360, alleged to belong to decedent's estate which defendant wrongfully withholds from plaintiff. Plaintiff's intestate died on April 24, 1895, and on August 21, 1911, more than 16 years thereafter, plaintiff was appointed administratrix of the estate of said deceased.

It is alleged in the amended complaint that on the 10th day of May, 1895, and after the death of decedent, defendant wrongfully took possession of said personal property "and has ever since the 10th day of May, 1895, unlawfully and wrongfully withheld all of said goods and chattels"; that no administration upon the estate of said deceased "was ever had, except as hereinbefore alleged"; that plaintiff is the daughter of deceased, and, at the time of the death of deceased, plaintiff was 13 years old.

There are certain averments in the complaint which appellant contends were intended to charge defendant as a trustee either voluntary or involuntary. Respondent, however, claims that the action is simple claim and delivery, and in this we agree with respondent.

Among other defenses, subdivision 3 of section 338, Code of Civil Procedure, is pleaded in bar of the action. This section provides that actions for the detention or recovery of personal property shall be commenced within three years after the cause of action has accrued. The averment of the amended complaint is and the court found on sufficient evidence that the cause of action accrued on May 10, 1895, about two weeks after the death of deceased.

Unless some statute can be found making an exception in cases such as this, the action, in our opinion, is barred by the section of the Code above cited. The only section to which our attention has been drawn by respondent is section 353, Code of Civil Procedure. The precise question was, we think, decided in Tynan v. Walker, 35 Cal. 634, 95 Am. Dec. 152. That was an action of eject-ment brought by plaintiff, as administrator of the estate of William D. Bell, deceased, to recover possession of certain land. Defendant took possession under claim of right after the death of decedent, who died in April, 1854, but plaintiff was not appointed administrator until 12 years subsequent to the death of Bell. It was held that the statute of limitations must run in all cases not expressly excepted from its operation. Referring to the statute (section 24 of the act of 1850, which is the same as section 353 of the Code of Civil Procedure), the court, speaking through Chief Justice Sanderson, said:

"No provision is made excepting a case where the party who would have been entitled to sue dies before the cause of action has accrued." "Nor," said the learned judge, "do we perceive any substantial reason why an exception should be made. If the cause of action does not accrue until after the death of the party who would have been entitled to sue, the persons interested in his estate—his creditors, heirs, and devisees—have the full time allowed by the statute in which to move in the matter to obtain a grant of administration and commence an action."

Speaking of the statute which provides that civil actions shall be commenced within certain periods therein prescribed "after the cause of action shall have accrued," it was said:

"The clause 'after the cause of action shall have accrued' does not, in our judgment, imply, in addition, the existence of a person legally competent to enforce it by suit."

Respondent is mistaken in assuming that adverse possession in the Tynan v. Walker Case was taken before Bell died. The facts stated show that Walker went into possession at the request of Bell, and after the latter's death Walker set up a claim in his own right, and this was the right litigated. Besides, it was held immaterial whether the right of action accrued before or after the death of Bell, since the exception related exclusively to cases where the action accrued against the deceased; there being no exception covering the case of an action accruing in his favor.

Respondent cites several California cases involving section 353, but they are all cases where the cause of action accrued against the deceased either before or after his death. Among them is In re Bullard, 116 Cal. 355, 48 Pac. 219, in which the early cases of Danglada v. De la Guerra, 10 Cal. 386, and Smith v. Hall, 19 Cal. 85, were cited.

The question in the Bullard Case arose under section 353, Code of Civil Procedure, which, as already pointed out, is identical with section 24, Acts of 1850 (Stats. 1850, p. 346), under which the earlier cases were decided, and were all cases where the cause of action accrued against the deceased, which are expressly provided for in the act of 1850 and in section 353, Code of Civil Procedure.

In a concurring opinion by Chief Justice

Beatty, in the Bullard Case, he places his concurrence on the doctrine stated in Smith v. Hall, supra, and upon section 1500, Code of Civil Procedure, which forbids the commencement of any action upon a claim against a decedent unless the claim is first presented to an executor or an administrator, etc.; and he adds:

"It seems to have always been considered absurd to hold that the statute would run against a cause of action which could not possibly be put in suit."

Further he said:

"Tynan v. Walker, 35 Cal. 634, 645, 95 Am. Dec. 152, was the converse of this case, in which it was held that the representatives of an intestate could not keep alive a right of action indefinitely by neglecting to take out administration. The reasoning of Judge Sanderson (35 Cal. 643, 644, 95 Am. Dec. 152) does seem to support the contention of the appellant, but the case was different and the point decided was different. The reason for the exception ingrafted upon the statute in Smith v. Hall, supra, does not exist when the right of action is one in favor of the decedent." (Italics ours.)

Respondent cites 18 Cyc. 915, 916, and some cases from other states which appear to give the rule as contended for by her, but we do not find it necessary to examine the statutes elsewhere. Tynan v. Walker, supra, has given us the rule in this state, and, so far as we are aware, it has never been departed from. In Cortelyou v. Imperial Land Co., 166 Cal. 14, 24, 134 Pac. 981, 984, it was said:

"This case has been approved in several subsequent decisions, and it must now be deemed to be the established rule in this state."

The judgment is reversed.

HENDERSON v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 1688.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Jan. 29, 1915.)

PARTIES ⇨95—AMENDMENT—JURISDICTION.

A complaint in an action by "United Mercantile Association," which alleged that it was an individual doing business under that name and style, and had complied with Civ. Code, § 2466, which, as amended by St. 1911, p. 440, requires that one doing business under a fictitious name must file with the county clerk a certificate showing his name in full and his residence, and publish it in a newspaper in the county, in view of the following section, that no one may maintain an action on any contract, etc., until such certificate has been filed, sufficiently alleged that the real plaintiff was an individual, and the court had jurisdiction to allow an amendment to show who that individual was.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parties, Cent. Dig. §§ 160-166; Dec. Dig. ⇨95.]

Petition for writ of review by Francena E. Henderson against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Los Angeles, and Charles Wellborn, Judge thereof, to have order of court annulled. Denied.

Carroll Allen and Bertin A. Weyl, both of Los Angeles (Rupert B. Turnbull, of Pasadena, of counsel), for petitioner. I. R. Rubin, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. By writ of review petitioner seeks to have an order made by the superior court annulled. The action of the court which it is claimed was in excess of jurisdiction consisted in the making of an order permitting an amendment to be made in a complaint as to the name of the party plaintiff. An action was brought in a justice's court, the plaintiff there being designated as "United Mercantile Association." Plaintiff alleged in the first paragraph of its complaint:

"That it is an individual doing business under the fictitious name and style of the United Mercantile Association, and that it has complied with section 2466 of the Civil Code of the state of California."

The section referred to, which was amended in 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 440), requires that, where a person is doing business under a fictitious name, he must file with the clerk of the county a certificate showing his name in full and place of residence, and also publish the same for a specified period of time in a newspaper in the county. The following section provides that no such person shall maintain an action upon any account or contract made until the certificate has been filed and published. The action went to trial in the justice's court, and judgment was there rendered in favor of the plaintiff. An appeal was then taken to the superior court. At the time set for trial in the latter court, petitioner as a defendant in said action objected to the introduction of any evidence on the ground, among others, that the plaintiff did not have the legal capacity to sue. The objection was sustained, and the court thereupon made an order allowing an amended complaint to be filed, which changed the title of the suit to read as follows: "I. R. Rubin, suing herein as United Mercantile Association." The complaint was also made to contain the averment that the plaintiff "is an individual, to wit, I. R. Rubin, doing business under the fictitious name and style of United Mercantile Association, and that he has complied with section 2466 of the Civil Code of the state of California."

It is insisted that the decision in the case of Miller v. Superior Court, 146 Pac. 72, is authority for the position taken by petitioner in her claim that the superior court acted in excess of its jurisdiction in allowing the amendment to be made. The decision in the case cited declared that where a fictitious name stands alone in its designation of a party to an action and in the title thereof, and which name imports no legal entity, and where the complaint itself is silent as to the character of the party so designated by a fictitious name, an amendment cannot properly be allowed which will add to the fictitious designation the name of the individual party as being the person in whose favor the action is prosecuted. In the Miller Case, while the caption of the complaint carried as the name of the plaintiff the designation "San Jacinto Packing House," the complaint disclosed that the individual named in the body thereof was the owner of the business which he was conducting in the name and style designated. We think that the complaint here contained a sufficient allegation as to the fact that the plaintiff, while designated by a fictitious name in the title, really was an individual and that under such allegation the complaint was properly allowed to be amended to show who the individual was.

Under this view it follows that the prayer of the petition should be denied, and it is so ordered.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Benjamin F. Bledsoe, Judge.

Herbert Dyer was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Weisel & Dutton, of Anaheim, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

JAMES, J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of rape. There was judgment of imprisonment and an order denying a motion for a new trial. The appeal is taken from the judgment and from the order.

[1] But two principal propositions are presented for consideration in determining the merits of the appeal. It is first contended that the court erred in denying defendant's motion to dismiss the information and discharge the defendant from custody because he had not been brought to trial within 60 days after the date of a mistrial which had theretofore occurred. The point is urged in reliance upon section 1382 of the Penal Code. The facts were that on the 20th of May, after considering the evidence introduced at the trial of defendant, the jury disagreed, and the case was then reset for second trial for the 30th day of June, 1914. On the latter date the district attorney moved for a continuance of the trial to another date on the ground of the absence of material witnesses. The case was finally reset for the 20th day of July, which counsel contends was in violation of the right of defendant to be tried within 60 days after the filing of the information, or after a trial and disagreement of a jury has been had. All of the force which might attend upon this contention is taken away when the facts shown by the record touching the matter of the continuance of the trial are taken into view. The fact was that the judge offered to set the case for the 16th of July, which would have been clearly within 60 days after the first trial, but appellant's counsel were not satisfied with that date, and asked that some other date be fixed, because they would be engaged in the trial of another case at that time. So, by reason of the objection of appellant's counsel, the court was compelled to fix a later day, and the 20th day of July appeared to be the earliest upon which appellant's counsel would be disengaged and could proceed. It therefore appears that the postponing of the trial beyond the 16th day of July was caused wholly by appellant's counsel, in which case no claim of prejudice could be predicated thereon.

[2] It is urged that the trial judge committed prejudicial error in refusing to instruct the jury that it was legitimate and proper for a defendant to be sworn as a witness, and that he was a competent witness in his own behalf. The defendant did testify, and the court, without singling out the defendant for special comment, gave a general instruction to the jury furnishing to it the law for its guidance in determining the effect to be given to the testimony of witnesses. This instruction was very full to that point. The California decisions referred to by counsel as sustaining his contention for error were cases where the defendant had complained because he was singled out and note taken by the instructions of the fact that, as a defendant, he was an interested party. The claim of error in those cases was that the special comment, such as the instruction here fairly embraced, should not be given to the jury. Counsel are here taking the opposite of this proposition. In view of the fact that the court instructed very fully as to how the credibility of witnesses might be measured and determined (and this statement embraced all of the witnesses, including the defendant), it is difficult to perceive how prejudice could have arisen because of the failure to give the specified instruction offered by the defendant. The jury had the witnesses before it, heard all of the testimony, and from a survey of the complete record no error can be discerned which may be said to have worked a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

et al. (Civ. 1516.)

1. TRIAL $\hookrightarrow$ 393—SIGNING OF FINDINGS.

The amendment of 1913 (St. 1913, p. 58) to Code Civ. Proc. § 634, which provides that, where the court directs a party to prepare findings, a copy shall be served on all parties to the action at least five days before findings shall be signed, and that the court shall not sign any findings prior thereto, does not preclude a judge of one county, who sat in another, from making up and signing findings in a county other than the one in which trial was had.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 920-923; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 393.]

2. COSTS $\hookrightarrow$ 260—FRIVOLOUS APPEAL.

Defendants, who were unsuccessful, did not attack the judgment on the merits, but questioned the right of the judge to make up and sign findings in a county other than the one in which trial was had. The right of the judge to make up the findings as he did had been upheld by several decisions of the Supreme Court. Held, that damages for a frivolous appeal would be imposed, where defendants' only claim was that an obviously immaterial amendment to the Code of Civil Procedure changed that rule.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge Presiding.

Action by the Weinstock-Nichols Company, a corporation, against T. F. Courtney and C. L. Schroeder, copartners trading as the Schroeder-Courtney Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Avery & French, of Los Angeles, for appellants. Oscar Lawler and James E. Degnan, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. A technical question only is presented on this appeal taken from a judgment entered against the defendants. It is presented on the judgment roll.

[1] Appellants contend that the superior judge of Inyo county, who sat at the trial in Los Angeles county, was without power to settle and sign the findings in the county of his residence. The right of a judge of one county to make up and sign findings in a county other than that in which the trial has been had has long been settled by the decisions of our Supreme Court. Comstock Q. M. Co. v. Superior Court, 57 Cal. 625; Walter v. Merced Academy Ass'n, 126 Cal. 582, 59 Pac. 136; Estudillo v. Security Loan, etc., Co., 158 Cal. 66, 109 Pac. 884. Appellants admit the law is so established, but contend that, by reason of an amendment made to section 634 of the Code of Civil Procedure by the Legislature of 1913 (St. 1913, p. 58), the signing of the findings constituted a judicial act, which of necessity, to be valid, should be performed at the place where the cause was pending. The amendment referred to provides as follows:

"In all cases where the court directs a party to prepare findings, a copy of said proposed findings shall be served upon all the parties to the action at least five days before findings shall be signed by the court, and the court shall not sign any findings therein prior to the expiration of such five days."

How this amendment made the signing of the findings any more or any less of a judicial act than it had theretofore been we are unable to comprehend. The amendment related merely to steps to be taken where the court requires counsel to prepare findings, no doubt for the purpose of aiding the court by allowing time within which suggestions might be made by the opposite party. In the end, the court would not be bound to enter either the offered findings or adopt any of the suggestions made, and might discard the whole and proceed to make up its own findings, as theretofore permitted to be done. The Supreme Court has said in the cases cited that the findings become effective as a decision only when filed, and that it matters not where the judge deliberates upon the same, or where he attaches his signature thereto, so long as the findings are filed in the proper court by the proper officer; that the judgment entered by the clerk which follows will then be regular. If the Legislature had any intention of requiring a nonresident judge to make his findings in the county where the trial is had, it could very easily have so directly provided. But no such intention can be gathered from the terms of the amendment quoted.

The decision made by the Supreme Court in the case of People v. Ruef, which is printed in volume 14 of the California Appellate Reports, at page 621, 114 Pac. 48, 54, referred to the matter of the regularity of an order of that court granting a rehearing where one of the members of the court concurring in the order was out of the state at the time the order received the required number of signatures. Nothing that is said in that decision can, in our opinion, be taken to overrule in the slightest the cases establishing the law to the contrary of appellants' contention here. The main point of appellants' argument has now been considered. Accompanying that consideration the assumption has been made that the record fully presents the necessary facts upon which to predicate the contention advanced. As a matter of fact, there was no bill of exceptions, and nothing appears in the record from which it can be deduced that the findings were in fact signed outside of Los Angeles county. There is printed as a part of the judgment roll (it has no place there under section 670, Code of Civil Procedure) what purports to be a written notice given by counsel for the plaintiff to counsel for defendants that on a certain date the findings would be presented to the judge at the county seat of Inyo county. Discarding from consideration this notice, there is absolutely nothing shown which even suggests that the findings might have been signed in the county of Inyo. It is consistent even with the terms of the notice to assume that the findings were signed in Los Angeles county. All presumptions must favor the regularity of the judgment.

[2] Respondent insists that the appeal is so devoid of merit as to be properly characterized as frivolous, and asks that a penalty be imposed. This demand has led us to consider the alleged merits of the appeal as broadly as any reasonable view will permit. Had there seemed to be merit in the main contention of appellants, then, even though the record in its imperfect state failed to fully present the question, we would hesitate to enforce a penalty. But the question presented was one which had been directly decided by the Supreme Court and the decisions had stood for many years uniformly to a conclusion flatly adverse to appellants' contention. The amendment to section 634, Code of Civil Procedure, seems not to touch the question on any angle. The trial court determined that a large sum of money had been collected by the defendants for the use of plaintiff, which plaintiff was entitled to, and for which the judgment was entered. There appears to have been no appeal taken whereby the correctness of that determination was controverted.

This appeal appearing to be frivolous and apparently for purposes of delay, it is ordered: That the judgment appealed from be affirmed; that, in addition to the costs provided to be collected by the respondent, respondent recover from the appellants the sum of $100 as damages.

JAMES, J. Defendant was charged with and convicted of the crime of forgery. The appeal is from the judgment of imprisonment which followed, and an order denying a motion for a new trial.

[1] A Japanese, named Maeshima, in the year 1913, was employed at a railway eating house in the county of San Bernardino. Appellant here was a fellow employé and was acquainted with Maeshima. Maeshima had on deposit with the Yokohama Specie Bank at San Francisco a sum of money amounting to $504.49, evidence of which deposit he held in the form of a passbook. In November of that year the appellant wrote a letter in Japanese characters to the San Francisco bank, to which he signed the name of Maeshima, stating in the letter that the writer was ill and required the money which he had on deposit there, and requesting that it be forwarded to him at The Needles, giving a post office box number to which the letter requested the money to be sent. In due time the bank forwarded a check payable to Maeshima for the amount of the deposit, which check was received by appellant, and the registry receipt was signed by him with the name of Maeshima. The check was thereafter presented to a branch of the same bank in the city of Los Angeles and cashed. Appellant, when he testified at the trial, admitted that he had written the letter requesting the money to be forwarded in Maeshima's name; admitted that he had signed the name of Maeshima to the registry receipt and had also indorsed the same name upon the back of the check. He denied having presented the check for payment, and attempted to excuse himself for his acts by saying that he did all of the things enumerated at the suggestion of one Sato, who represented to him that he had the right to draw this money, as it belonged to him, Sato. The check when cashed bore the indorsement of the name "Maeshima" spelled in two ways. The first signature, the one which appellant admitted having written, was spelled "Mae-shima," which did not correspond to the payee's name appearing in the body of the check, which was "Maeshima." The evidence tended to show that the second indorsement of Maeshima on the back of the check was made at the suggestion of the bank when the money was paid on the instrument. An expert on handwriting gave it as his opinion that the same hand had written all of the indorsements on the back of the check. There was the further testimony, given by an operator of a detective agency employed by the Bankers' Association, that appellant had admitted that he had gone to the trunk of Maeshima and taken the passbook therefrom, and thereafter received the check from the San Francisco bank and cashed it in the city of Los Angeles. There was further testimony showing that not long after this time various sums of money, aggregating nearly the amount of Maeshima's deposit, had been placed to the credit of appellant in various banks at The Needles. That the evidence was amply sufficient to sustain the verdict admits of no dispute at all.

[2] Complaint is made that the check upon which the indorsements of Maeshima's name were made, not having been delivered to Maeshima, was not the subject of forgery. There are no authorities to be found in this state, or in any other state so far as we are able to discover, which sustain that proposition. Our Supreme Court, in the case of People v. Munroe, 100 Cal. 664, 35 Pac. 326, 24 L. R. A. 33, 38 Am. St. Rep. 323, has said:

"But we will take broader ground, and concede the essential ingredients of the crime of forgery to be: (1) A false making of some instrument; (2) a fraudulent intent; (3) if genuine, the writing might injure another. The third element stated is expressly recognized by this court to be the true test as to the nature of the writing."

Because the check upon which the indorsements were afterwards forged was not forwarded at the request of Maeshima is wholly immaterial. If the bank had, without suggestion from any person, decided to return to Maeshima his money in that way, and appellant had unlawfully obtained possession of the check and forged the indorsements thereon, the legal situation would be no different. There is no rule of which we are cognizant which requires that a valid instrument upon which a liability may be created is not the subject of forgery until it has actually reached the hands of the person for whose benefit it was issued. The check which was made the subject of the forged indorsements in this case was in no sense a nudum pactum; it was a check which, if it had been received by Maeshima, might have been used by him and the sum of money represented thereby have been collected from the bank.

[3] There is no merit in the point that the check described in the information was not read to the jury when offered in evidence as an exhibit. It was offered and received in evidence, and its contents were pointed out and referred to by the witnesses and counsel on both sides. Under such condition of fact, it could hardly be maintained that the contents of the check were not fully in evidence before the jury. Whether all of the indorsements appearing upon the back of the check, particularly the one in Japanese, were set up in the information seems immaterial. The charge against the appellant was that he forged the indorsement of Maeshima, and there was no such material variance between the check described in the information and that offered in evidence as to make the latter inadmissible. As to the confessions claimed to have been made by appellant, the evidence warranted the trial judge in determining that such statements were not made under the influence of coercion or improper inducements. No word of commendation can be given for the acts of the detective who arrested appellant, in keeping the latter within his personal custody for two days at a hotel at The Needles, instead of taking him promptly before a magistrate, as the law required him to do. This act of his was wholly unwarranted, unjustifiable, and deserving of severe censure.

We find no error in the record which warrants an order of reversal to be made in this case.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐482—STAY—VACATING—DISCRETION OF COURT.

The vacating of a stay of execution pending an appeal is within the discretion of the trial court, and that discretion was not abused

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by Minnie Lewis against John Lapique. From an order vacating a stay of execution granted after judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, the defendant appeals. Order affirmed.

John Lapique, of Orange, in pro. per. C. A. Stice, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Defendant in this action, who was substituted after judgment in lieu of the original parties defendant thereto, presents an appeal which purports to have been taken from an order of the superior court dismissing an appeal and from an order of the same court vacating an order staying execution.

[1] The appeal is attempted to be taken under the provisions of sections 953a, 953b, and 953c, Code of Civil Procedure. The transcript (which is typewritten only) is not certified by the judge of the court, and therefore cannot be considered. Credit Clearance Bureau v. Weary & Alford Co., 18 Cal. App. 467, 123 Pac. 548. The appeal is therefore left without a record to support it. It may be remarked, however, that from the improperly authenticated papers shown in the transcript it appears that a judgment was entered in favor of respondent quieting title to certain real property on the 31st day of January, 1912; that various notices were given of intention to move for a new trial on behalf of the defendants; and that on October 28th of the same year, on motion of respondent, an order was made in the superior court dismissing the proceedings on motion for a new trial and vacating the stay of execution theretofore allowed. It is not shown that at that time any appeal had been taken from the judgment quieting title, or from any other order made in the action. Hence, when appellant stated in the notice of this appeal, which he filed, that he was appealing from an order dismissing his appeal in the court below, he described an appeal taken from an order which had not been made, and one which the superior court had no jurisdiction to make.

[2] If his appeal could be here considered on its merits on the imperfect record presented, the only matter which could be reviewed at all would be the action of the court in vacating the stay of execution; and as to that we apprehend there could be no abuse of discretion, as the court might properly have declined to make such a stay pending appeal, or might properly, as it did, have vacated the same where there was an unusual delay on the part of the proposed appellant in the giving of the notice of appeal. It follows that the order attempted to be appealed from should be affirmed.

The order vacating the order staying execution is affirmed.

CONTRACTS ⚡274—RESCISSION—OPERATION.

Where defendant contracted with one L. for certain printing, and O.K.'d a notice of his assignment of the contract to a printing firm, and of the collection of the bill to plaintiff, and the original contract was not performed, and notice of rescission was duly served on the firm, the rescission was effective, and the defendant was not answerable to the plaintiff for the compensation paid under a subsequent agreement with L. for the same work.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. E. Densmore, Judge.

Action by Henry F. De Galler against the Maier Brewing Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Goldberg & Meily and George L. Greer, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. Mott & Dillon, of Los Angeles (G. C. O'Connell, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

JAMES, J. Appeal from a judgment entered in favor of the defendant. On the 6th day of February, 1912, respondent made a written contract with one C. H. Lovell, which provided for the printing of 50,000 baseball schedules upon cards, at the net price of $10 per 1,000; delivery to be made not later than March 30th of the same year. A few days later a printing firm, doing business under the name of Provident Printshop, notified respondent that its order had been assigned to them by Lovell, and that they would complete the same, and instructing respondent to make payment to appellant, to whom, so the Printshop informed respondent, had been "assigned the collection of this bill." Respondent accepted and "O. K.'d" this notification, but, the printing not having been done within the time specified, respondent gave written notice to the printers rescinding the contract. It later made a second agreement, based upon different terms, with Lovell, and, upon his having furnished the merchandise required under this second contract, they paid him the price agreed upon. Thereafter the appellant made demand upon respondent for the payment to him of the money, and, as a basis for his claim, urged that the contract, as first made, had been performed, which, under the express direction of the Provident printing establishment, was, so far as concerned the moneys to be collected thereunder, assigned to appellant. Respondent by its answer denied that the first contract had been performed, or that anything had been delivered to it under that contract. The trial judge determined the issues in favor of this contention. There was no dispute made by the evidence but that the original contract was not performed within the time specified, nor that notice of rescission had been duly served upon the printers who had engaged to make performance thereunder. This being the condition of fact, the trial judge properly held that the rescission became effective, and that under the agreement subsequently made with Lovell the respondent was not answerable to appellant for any compensation agreed to be made for that work.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Gavin W. Craig, Judge.

Joshua E. Youtz was convicted of crime, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Harriman, Ryckman & Tuttle, of Los Angeles, and Henry W. Nisbet, of San Bernardino, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Robert Mitchell, of Los Angeles, for the People.

JAMES, J. [1, 2] Defendant has appealed from a judgment of imprisonment entered upon his conviction of the crime described in section 564 of the Penal Code. Under the terms of the section noted, directors, officers, and agents of corporations who concur in the making, publishing, or posting of reports or statements of the pecuniary condition of the corporation which are untrue or falsely exaggerated, are guilty of a felony. It was charged that appellant, while holding the position of director and acting vice president of a certain corporation organized under the laws of California, published and concurred in publishing to the stockholders and other persons a financial statement as to the affairs of the corporation, which was false in a material part. The facts as exhibited by the record show that the California corporation was organized as a "holding" concern, and that simultaneously therewith a fire insurance company was organized under the laws of Arizona; that a large number of shares of stock of the California corporation were sold, the greater part of the price agreed to be paid for which was evidenced by promissory notes given by the purchasers of the stock to the corporation. These notes and a rather insignificant amount of cash were put into the treasury of the Arizona corporation in payment for all of its capital stock, except four shares, which were retained by Arizona directors for the purpose of maintaining the organization under the Arizona laws. Thereupon the insurance corporation proceeded to do business in the state of California, insuring property against loss by fire, which business was in fact handled by the holding corporation, which was legally resident in the state of California. On the 1st day of July, 1912, as the evidence abundantly shows, appellant caused to be issued a financial statement, among the items of which was one which purported to set forth assets of the California corporation as "Stocks, bonds, and secured notes, $558,360.48." Further down in the statement a deduction was made of the total capital stock from the purported assets, and a surplus was scheduled as being possessed by the California corporation in the sum of $220,028.78.

The information charged that at that time the corporation did not own stocks, bonds, and secured notes in any sum greater than $358,360.48, and did not own or possess any surplus whatsoever of assets over liabilities. Included within the item of stocks, bonds and secured notes was the stock of the fire insurance corporation, which had been given a value of twice its par. If the stock was worth that amount, then the statement, as a matter of exemplified bookkeeping, was approximately correct. If the stock of the insurance corporation had no greater value than the par fixed per share, then the statement was misleading to the extent that it overstated assets and surplus by the amount of $200,000. The entire case, therefore, turned upon the question as to what was the value of the stock of the insurance corporation at the date of the statement. It was shown in evidence that a large part of the stock of the California corporation was sold to persons who would insure their property with the Arizona concern, which insurance was written for about 50 per cent. of the prevailing insurance rate. The stock of the insurance company was not upon the market, and therefore it had no sale value as ordinarily established through trade, for all of it, except the four shares mentioned, was held by the California corporation. This condition was intended to be continued, for the entire business of the California corporation was that of conducting an insurance business through the medium of the Arizona organization.

A number of expert accountants testified as to the figures ascertainable from the books of the California concern, and stated that the Arizona stock was carried on those books at its par value. The appellant testified that in his opinion the Arizona stock was worth twice par. The jury had before it a very complete history of both corporations as to the conduct of their business and the quantity and kind of it. The circumstances being such as to make it impossible to establish by testimony in the ordinary way the market value of the stock, it was incumbent upon the jury to arrive at such value by considering all of the various elements which would go to make up the worth of that stock. Their conclusion would depend largely upon deductions to be drawn from the figures as to the assets of the corporation, the kind and quantity of its business, the hazards entertained and the profits which had or would probably accrue. They were entitled to make their conclusion from such facts, irrespective that any witness might have, as a matter of opinion, given to the Arizona stock a definite valuation of twice par. We cannot here weigh the evidence, as it was the province and duty of the jury to weigh it in the face of conflict therein. And it may be added that the evidence was ample to sustain the conclusion of the jury as to appellant having made an exaggerated and untrue report of the financial condition of his corporation.

[3] The action of the court in sustaining objections to questions asked of two witnesses who were offered by the defendant to prove the value of the stock, conceding error, as claimed by appellant, is not shown to have amounted to an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial judge. The testimony sought to be elicited necessarily belonged to that classed as "expert," and was subject to the rule announced in many cases, which holds that a judgment will not be reversed unless it clearly appears that the trial judge, in making the rulings complained of, has abused the discretion committed to him. We cite Howland v. Oakland C. St. Ry. Co., et al., 110 Cal. 513, 42 Pac. 983; Mabry v. Randolph, et al., 7 Cal. App. 421, 94 Pac. 403; Perry v. Noonan Furniture Co., 8 Cal. App. 35, 95 Pac. 1128; Evans Ditch Co., et al. v. Lakeside Ditch Co., et al., 13 Cal. App. 119, 108 Pac. 1027; Stewart v. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co., 170 Ala. 544, 54 South. 48, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 815.

[4] The point is urged also that, conceding the statement as issued by appellant to have been untrue in fact, the misleading portion thereof constituted only an expression of opinion as to value, and not a statement of a definite fact. To this proposition we cannot assent. The appellant definitely stated, not only that the stocks, bonds, and secured notes owned by his corporation had a value of $558,360.48, but that a surplus was owned by that corporation to the amount of $220,028.78. The value affixed was applied to that class of property the worth of which is not generally of such a speculative nature as to excuse a statement in appraisal thereof as being a matter of opinion only. It was held in the case of Craig v. Wade et al., 159 Cal. 172, 112 Pac. 891, that a statement by an officer of the corporation as to the value of oil wells amounted to but an expression of opinion; but the argument of the opinion clearly shows that that case belonged to a class which does not include such as that presented here by appellant.

[5] It is urged further that the information was faulty, in that it charged more than one offense, to wit, that it accused appellant of not only making, but concurring in the making, of statements which were untrue, and which acts would constitute separate offenses. This contention may be answered by reference to the case of People v. Leyshon, 108 Cal. 440, 41 Pac. 480, cited in People v. Kennedy, 22 Cal. App. 29, 133 Pac. 25.

[6] There was introduced on behalf of the prosecution certain circular letters and statements, some of which were shown to have been furnished to persons engaged in selling the stock of the California corporation, and others which were mailed to the stockholders of the same organization. The statements furnished to be used in selling the stock were testified to have been furnished by the appellant, and, referring to the other class of statements, appellant himself testified that they were prepared at the suggestion of the board of directors, of which appellant was one, and first submitted to him as the manager of the corporation. It was proper for the prosecution to prove, in order to establish knowledge and intent on the part of appellant as to the alleged misleading statements promulgated, a series of such similar acts as would furnish corroborating evidence to the point just mentioned. It may be noted, also, that appellant throughout the trial contended that the alleged misstatements in fact represented the truth, and therefore he could not have been prejudiced by evidence showing that he had reaffirmed the same matter. The record in this case has been subjected to a close and careful scrutiny. The case presented seems to be one of those which clearly fall within the intent of the statute alleged to have been violated. No hardship is imposed upon officers of corporations who wish to express to their stockholders or others their opinion as to the value of the assets, for in such case it would be very easy to designate the several amounts indicated upon such statements as being only estimates, in which case persons receiving the statements would be put upon notice that the figures represented merely the opinion of the person who prepared them, and not such a value of the property of the corporation as a market demand might establish for it. The whole case bears the impression very clearly defined that the intent of appellant was to present an exaggerated statement of facts for the purpose of enhancing the business of the corporation of which he was then manager.

No points other than those herein considered seem to be of sufficient merit as to demand that a discussion be made of them.

The judgment is affirmed.

CARRINGTON v. SMITHERS et al.
(Civ. 1277.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 2, 1915.)

1. BROKERS ⇐43 — COMPENSATION — AGREEMENTS — STATUTE.

Civ. Code, § 1624, declares that an agreement employing an agent to purchase or sell real estate for compensation shall be invalid, unless some memorandum thereof is in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged or his agent. Owners of land executed a document reciting that they agreed to pay a broker a certain amount for services rendered in case an exchange of land was had. Held, that the agreement was sufficient under the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 44; Dec. Dig. ⇐43.]

2. BROKERS ⇐43 — COMPENSATION — CONTRACTS — SUFFICIENCY.

After a broker had introduced one who exchanged lands with defendants, defendants executed a memorandum reciting that in case the exchange was perfected they should pay a stipulated sum. Held that, though the services were already rendered, the commission could be recovered, for while an agreement to sell land on a commission is unenforceable, under Civ. Code, § 1624, unless there is some memorandum in writing, such agreements are not immoral, and the services rendered constituted a good consideration within sections 1605, 1606.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 44; Dec. Dig. ⇐43.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐1039 — REVIEW — HARMLESS ERROR.

Technical inaccuracies in the complaint, and findings which do not affect the merits, are harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4075-4088; Dec. Dig. ⇐1039.]

4. BROKERS ⇐64 — COMPENSATION — CONTRACTS — CONSUMMATION.

Where no time limit was fixed for making title good, a party to a contract for the exchange of lands has a reasonable time to satisfy liens, and a broker who effected an exchange cannot be denied commission because one of the parties did not immediately free his property from all liens.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. §§ 67, 97; Dec. Dig. ⇐64.]

5. BROKERS ⇐54 — COMMISSIONS — RIGHT TO.

Where defendants agreed to pay a broker a commission for effecting an exchange of land, they cannot, having entered into a valid contract with the party the broker provided, defeat commission on the ground that such person did not at that time have title to the property he agreed to transfer; it appearing he thereafter acquired title and that the exchange was consummated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. §§ 75-81; Dec. Dig. ⇐54.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmet Seawell, Judge.

Action by B. Carrington against George E. Smithers and another. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

T. J. Butts, of Santa Rosa, for appellants.
R. L. Thompson, of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The suit was for a broker's commission for services in effecting an exchange of real property in Sonoma county belonging to defendants for four houses and lots in Berkeley and Oakland. That the exchange was made in accordance with the expressed desire and intention of defendants, that the efforts of plaintiff were the procuring cause of the exchange within the contemplation of the well-settled rules relating to such matters, that plaintiff was employed for the purpose mentioned, and that defendants promised to pay him the amount claimed, cannot be gainsaid, in view of the evidence disclosed by the record. As to the services performed we find the following:

Plaintiff testified:

"On the 29th of September, 1911, Mr. Smithers came in and listed the ranch, and after that date I wrote to C. A. Runels and Alfred Wehe & Co., Oakland, that I had the property for exchange, and Mr. Runels came up, and I took my machine, and we went out to the ranch, and after we came back Mr. Runels took the purchaser up to the ranch and made the deal—closed the deal that day. I made several trips to Oakland. I made one trip to the ranch. After I had been out to the ranch, on or about April 28th, Mr. and Mrs. Smithers came into my office and talked with me about the exchange there. With reference to selling the place to Doyle, I visited the ranch with Runels, and Runels brought Doyle up here. That is the way Runels found out about the ranch through me. He is my correspondent in Oakland. Doyle was his son-in-law. He brought Doyle and Mr. Wehe and Mr. Wehe's brother. I learned about the property that the Smithers were trading their ranch for the day they came up here—the day that Runels and Wehe and Doyle came up in a machine from Oakland, they told me about the property. I saw Mr. Smithers on or about the 29th of September, 1911. At that time we had a written agreement."

C. A. Runels testified:

"My occupation is a real estate broker with Alfred Wehe & Co. I know Mr. and Mrs. Smithers, the defendants in the case. I also know Henry C. Doyle. He is my son-in-law. I know Mr. B. Carrington, the plaintiff. I had some negotiations with Mr. and Mrs. Smithers respecting the exchange of Oakland or Alameda property for their ranch in this county. Mr. Carrington wrote me in regard to their ranch. Mr. Carrington sent a description of this ranch, said it was for exchange, suggested a piece of property which he had seen on Telegraph avenue as a possible exchange, and asked me to see the people and, if I could, bring them up. I went and saw them, and described the ranch to them according to Mr. Carrington's description, and got them to come up and look at that. We met Mr. Carrington here in Santa Rosa at his office, and he took his machine and took us out to the ranch—showed us the ranch. Those people did not make the exchange. Then it was suggested that we make the exchange on this other property with Mr. Doyle, and we went up and looked at the property. We took our machine from Oakland, came up, and met Mr. Carrington at his office. We talked over the proposition and how the deal could be made, and we went out and looked at the ranch and entered into the contract. I think that was somewhere along in April, about the 28th of April. Each party had a copy of that contract."

There is other evidence to the same effect, including admissions of the defendants; but the foregoing is amply sufficient to show that plaintiff acted as the agent of defendants in the transaction culminating in the exchange.

One question, however, that gives rise to serious contention, is whether the contract of plaintiff and defendants was valid within the statute of frauds. Although pitiable efforts were made by defendants to deny the same, the evidence shows that they executed the following agreement in writing:

"Santa Rosa, Sonoma Co., Cal., April 30th, 1912. This is to certify that we, the undersigned, do hereby agree to pay B. Carrington the sum of seven hundred dollars in cash, or, should we fail to pay the cash by the time we close the deal now pending between us and Henry C. Doyle of Oakland, we will give said B. Carrington a mortgage at 7 per cent. interest on that certain lot owned by us in Oakland, Alameda county, Cal., being on Tenth street, east side, 217 ft. north of Snyder Ave.; or at option of B. Carrington we will make said mortgage on one of the properties we are obtaining from Henry C. Doyle in Oakland or Berkeley, Alameda county, Cal. The above amount is for services rendered. This is provided the trade with Henry C. Doyle is consummated."

[1, 2] The original agreement of September 29, 1911, does not appear in the transcript, although Mr. Carrington, as we have seen, testified that it was in writing. Apparently plaintiff relies upon said writing of April 30th to satisfy the requirement of the statute of frauds. This was executed after plaintiff's services were performed, but before the exchange was fully consummated.

Section 1624 of the Civil Code provides:

"The following contracts are invalid, unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, is in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged, or by his agent: * * * 6. An agreement authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for compensation or a commission."

It is manifest that the said agreement in writing is sufficient in form to satisfy the requirement of the statute. A "note or memorandum" of the contract is all that is required. We have here a definite promise to pay the amount of the commission, and the other terms are either certain or can be made certain by reference to the situation of the parties. It is true that it required the exchange to be consummated before the commission should be payable. But we need not stop to inquire whether this requirement would be satisfied if the agent obtained a purchaser ready, willing, and able to make the exchange, for the reason that the evidence shows, as alleged in the complaint, that:

"Plaintiff at his own expense procured an exchange between defendants, to one Henry C. Doyle, of the properties heretofore mentioned, in accordance with the terms of said agreement and upon terms acceptable and accepted by defendants."

In other words, the exchange was entirely effected. But there is undoubtedly some merit in the objection that said written promise to pay the $700 was executed after virtually all the services of plaintiff had been performed. It is true that the deeds did not finally pass until the latter part of May, but the written agreement of exchange was executed April 27th, and the services of plaintiff reached then their culmination. We think, however, that the rule announced by the Supreme Court of Washington, in Muir v. Kane, 55 Wash. 131, 104 Pac. 153, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 519, 19 Ann. Cas. 1180, should be recognized as valid. Therein it is said:

"The moral obligation to pay for services rendered as a broker in selling real estate, under an oral contract where the statute requires such contract to be in writing, is just as binding as is the moral obligation to pay a debt that has become barred by the statute of limitations, and there is no reason for holding that the latter will support a new promise to pay while the former will not. There is no moral delinquency that attaches to an oral contract to sell real property as a broker. This service cannot be recovered for because the statute says the promise must be in writing, not because it is illegal in itself. It was not intended by the statute to impute moral turpitude to such contracts. The statute was intended to prevent frauds and perjuries, and to accomplish that purpose it is required that the evidence * * * be in writing; but it is not conducive to either fraud or perjury to say that the services rendered under the void contract, or voluntarily, will support a subsequent written promise to pay for such services."

The services performed by plaintiff would seem to be a sufficient consideration to support the subsequent promise within the contemplation of our own statute. Sections 1605 and 1606 of the Civil Code. Said services constituted a "benefit conferred" upon "the promisor," to which the latter was "not lawfully entitled," and they assuredly created "a moral obligation originating in some benefit conferred upon the promisor," as well as in "prejudice suffered by the promisee." In an extended note to the Muir Case, 55 Wash. 131, 104 Pac. 153, as reported in 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 519, may be found an interesting discussion of the question, wherein it is said:

"The courts, however, should be astute to find some means of enabling one to recover under such circumstances, where there was not merely the detriment to him, but a positive benefit of a material and pecuniary nature to the other party; and it seems like flying in the face of Providence to reject the opportunity to do substantial justice between the parties, afforded by the subsequent express promise."

And the author thinks that, to make the subsequent promise binding, where the services were performed under an invalid contract, it should appear: (1) That the service moving from the promisee conferred an actual material or pecuniary benefit on the promisor; (2) that the promisee expected to be compensated therefor, and did not intend it as a mere gift or gratuity; (3) that the circumstances were such as to create a moral obligation on the part of the promisor; (4) that the benefit received has not constituted the consideration for another promise already enforced or still legally enforceable.

The foregoing conditions are all present in the case at bar, and it is believed that the promise is not invalidated by the fact that the original agreement may have rested in parol. In support of this view we may also cite Mohr v. Rickgauer, 82 Neb. 398, 117 N. W. 950, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 533, and In re Balfour & Garrette, 14 Cal. App. 261, 111 Pac. 615. The last case seems decisive of this controversy. Therein the question of the statute of frauds is thoroughly considered, and it is said:

"The provisions of the statute, in other words, affected the remedy—that is, in effect deprived the party seeking to enforce a contract coming within their purview of his right of action if such contract were not in writing."

And it was held that although the creditor was originally employed under an invalid oral contract to sell lands upon commission, yet when, after certain sales were made, the debtor gave him a written memorandum setting forth the sales made and the commission allowed therefor, such written memorandum was sufficient to relieve the whole transaction of sales from the operation of the statute of frauds.

[3-5] It is true that the complaint proceeds upon the theory that the services were performed under said contract of April 30th, instead of before, and the findings in that respect follow said pleading; but this would seem to be a technical inaccuracy that resulted in no substantial injustice. In fact, appellants did not make the point in the court below, nor was any question of variance submitted to the trial judge. The motion for a nonsuit was made on the ground and for the reason appearing in the record as follows:

"The law is elementary in this case that, to enable a broker to recover his commission for the service rendered, he must furnish a buyer that is ready, able, and willing. They did not furnish any buyer that was ready, able, and willing. They furnished a man who, it is admitted, did not have any interest in it at all to make a contract, who did not have any title to the land—never did have. The lands were exchanged. He never had any title. He was not able to contract; and before he can collect his commission he must furnish a man that is a purchaser, who is ready, able, and willing to buy."

This motion of defendants was based upon the fact that at the time the trade was negotiated by Doyle he did not own the property in Alameda county, but it is not apparent what possible difference it could make to appellants, since the trade was actually consummated and the title to said property vested in them in accordance with their said agreement with Doyle. The fact is that Doyle represented the owners, and by them the property was conveyed afterward to him who in turn conveyed it to Smithers. The effect, of course, is the same as though the negotiations were had directly with the owners and they had executed the conveyance to Smithers without the intermediation of Doyle. The exchange of the property, it may be said, also, was no less the result of plaintiff's efforts than if he had in the beginning brought the owners of the Alameda county property face to face with appellants, and his claim for commission is no less meritorious.

There is some contention that the title conveyed to Smithers was subject to a certain lien contrary to the agreement of the parties; the contract between Doyle and Smithers providing that, save certain mortgage liens therein specified, "titles to above properties are to be good, and certificates of title to each property to be arranged by the respective owners thereof." There was a lien for some $600 for taxes against a part of the Alameda county property, and the evidence shows that it was paid and discharged, before this suit was brought, by the parties whom Doyle represented. So that, before the beginning of this action, title was vested in Smithers in accordance with his contract. He had entered into possession of the property and was enjoying the rents thereof, and he was not injured by the delay in the discharge of said lien. As a matter of fact, its existence was probably unknown to all the parties, as the abstracts showed the title clear. It was the fault of the abstract company that the tax liens did not appear. At any rate, as no time limit for making the title good was prescribed in the contract, a reasonable time would be allowed, and this requirement of the law was satisfied.

But, aside from the foregoing, as far as this point is concerned, plaintiff would be entitled to recover under the principle stated in Roche v. Smith, 176 Mass. 595, 58 N. E. 152, 51 L. R. A. 510, 79 Am. St. Rep. 345, as follows:

"A broker, through whose efforts a binding contract is made for land between his principal and the owner of the land, has earned his commission, notwithstanding the fact that the owner cannot make a good title to the land because of incumbrances not known to the broker, as the remedy of the principal is against the other party to the contract."

The contract was made in this case after an examination of the title by defendants' attorney, and there is no question that plaintiff acted in good faith in the transaction. The ground upon which the liability attaches in such instances is stated to be that:

"By entering into a valid contract with the customer produced by the broker, the principal accepts the customer as able, ready, and willing to buy the land and pay for it. In such a case, the decision would have to be the other way, were it not that by entering into the contract with him the principal accepts the customer produced by the broker."

A similar statement of the controlling principle is found in 19 Cyc. 270, as follows:

"If the principal and the customer found by the broker enter into a valid contract and the broker acts in good faith, the broker is not deprived of his right to a commission by the fact that the customer fails to carry out the contract."

To such a situation is also applicable the doctrine of estoppel set forth in 4 R. C. L. p. 309, as follows:

"Once the customer procured by the broker is accepted by the employer, the latter is thereafter estopped from denying the purchaser's ability or willingness to complete the contract, inasmuch as he is not bound to accept the offer of such person without a reasonable opportunity to inquire and satisfy himself in relation to it. Consequently his acceptance should estop him from alleging anything against the claim, except fraud on the part of the broker in inducing the acceptance."

In the case at bar there was not only no fraud on the part of the broker, but all parties seem to have acted in the utmost good faith. It is not claimed, indeed, that there was any advantage taken of defendants or any deceit practiced. In fact, they had investigated the property in Alameda county and were anxious to make the exchange.

Some criticism is made of the findings of the court, but we do not think extended notice of this is required. There are manifestly some clerical errors therein, and it is not strictly accurate that plaintiff's services were performed under said contract of April 30, 1912; but sufficient facts are found, within the theory already suggested, to support the judgment. It may be said, indeed, that the action was tried upon the assumption that that theory was embraced within the pleadings, as no objection was made upon the ground of variance, or that said written promise was for services already performed, and not for those to be performed in the future.

We think the judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

PEOPLE v. KAHLER. (Cr. 361.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 1, 1915.)

1. FALSE PRETENSES ⇨31—INFORMATION—RELIANCE ON MISREPRESENTATIONS.

An information, which charged that defendant falsely represented to the prosecuting witness that he owned a number of orchestras in theaters, that he sold to the witness a set of drums and traps and promised to give witness' son instruction in their use and then to employ him in an orchestra, and that witness, relying upon the statements made, paid to the defendant a sum of money, does not show that the money was paid upon the reliance of the only misrepresentation of fact alleged, the ownership of the orchestras, and charges no crime.

2. FALSE PRETENSES ⇨7—NATURE OF OFFENSE.

A "false pretense" is such a fraudulent representation of an existing or past fact by one who knows it not to be true as is adapted to induce the person to whom it is made to part with something of value.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Gavin W. Craig, Judge.

W. T. Kahler was convicted of obtaining money by false pretenses, and he appeals. Reversed.

J. G. Rossiter, of Pasadena, Bert L. Cooper, of Pomona, and A. C. Labrie and Tom L. Johnston, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Robert M. Clarke, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, J. Defendant was convicted upon an information charging him with the crime of obtaining money under false pretenses. He prosecutes this appeal from the judgment and an order of court denying his motion for a new trial.

The offense with which defendant is charged is alleged in the information to have been committed as follows:

"That the said W. T. Kahler, * * * with intent then and there to cheat, wrong, and defraud Richard J. Cogan out of his money and property, did * * * represent and pretend to the said Richard J. Cogan that he, the said W. T. Kahler, had contracts for furnishing orchestras for 42 moving picture shows and theaters in the city of Los Angeles, * * * and that particularly he, the said W. T. Kahler, had the exclusive contract for furnishing orchestras for Hamburger's Café, for Clune's Broadway Theater and for the Princess Theater, each of said theaters hereinbefore mentioned being located in the city of Los Angeles, Cal. (2) And he, the said W. T. Kahler, then and there sold to the said Richard J. Cogan a set of drums and traps for the use of one William J. Cogan, a minor son of Richard J. Cogan. And he, the said W. T. Kahler, then and there promised to give the said William J. Cogan instructions as to playing the said drums and traps, and then and there promised and agreed to and with the said Richard J. Cogan that when the said William J. Cogan had become sufficiently proficient in the playing of said drums and traps he, the said W. T. Kahler, would give the said William J. Cogan a position in one of his many orchestras. (3) And the said Richard J. Cogan, then and there believing and relying upon the statements so made to him as aforesaid by the said W. T. Kahler, then and there paid to the said W. T. Kahler $75 in lawful money of the United States, the same being then and there the personal property of said Richard J. Cogan. (4) And the said Richard J. Cogan then and there believed the said representations and pretenses, so made to him as aforesaid by the said W. T. Kahler, to be true, and then and there relied upon the same, and was then and there induced thereby to and did then and there deliver and turn over to the said W. T. Kahler the said sum of $75, lawful money of the United States, as aforesaid."

Continuing, it is alleged that "each and all and every of the said representations and pretenses so made by the said W. T. Kahler to the said Richard J. Cogan were then and there false and untrue," to the knowledge of Kahler.

[1] Defendant's demurrer to the information, upon the grounds that it not only failed to state facts which constituted a public offense, but failed to conform to the requirements of sections 950, 951, and 952 of the Penal Code, was overruled. It should have been sustained.

The only fact which it is alleged defendant represented to exist is that he had contracts for furnishing orchestras for certain cafés and theaters. That part of the information which we have designated "(2)" consists merely of promises made by defendant, together with the statement that he sold to Cogan a set of drums and traps for the use of his minor son. It is not alleged, however, that Cogan was induced to buy the drums and traps from defendant upon the strength of the representation that defendant had contracts for furnishing these orchestras; indeed that part of the information designated as "(2)" is wholly disconnected with the alleged false representations, and should be disregarded as surplusage. Disregarding this redundant matter, it is merely alleged that defendant, knowing the same to be untrue, falsely represented to Richard J. Cogan, that he had contracts for furnishing orchestras to certain cafés and theaters; that Cogan, believing the representations to be true and relying thereon, paid and delivered to defendant the sum of $75. For what purpose is not disclosed. Conceding the representation made by defendant to have been false, there is no causal connection between the payment of the money and the representation.

[2] Bishop (2 Crim. Law, § 415) defines a false pretense as "such a fraudulent representation of an existing or past fact, by one who knows it not to be true, as is adapted to induce the person to whom it is made to part with something of value." We are unable to perceive any connection between the alleged false representation and the paying or giving to defendant the $75; nor how, in the absence of further allegations, such representations should have induced, or were calculated to induce, Cogan to pay defendant $75 in money. While not alleged, it is no doubt true that Cogan was induced to buy the drums and traps in reliance upon defendant's promise to give his son musical instruction and to secure him employment as soon as he was sufficiently proficient. It was this promise which induced the prosecutor to deal with him, and not the representation of existing facts in reliance upon the truth of which Cogan believed that defendant would fulfill his promise. People v. Morphy, 100 Cal. 84, 34 Pac. 623; People v. Hart, 35 Misc. Rep. 182, 71 N. Y. Supp. 492.

This view renders it unnecessary to discuss errors predicated upon want of sufficient evidence to justify the verdict, and the reception of improper evidence, in both of which contentions we find much merit.

It is apparent, we think, from an examination of the instructions given, when taken in connection with the information, that the jurors were of the opinion that the unfulfilled promises made by defendant constituted a "deception deliberately practiced (by defendant) for the purpose of gaining an unfair advantage of another," which the court stated to them "was fraud," and that "one deprived of his property by such means is defrauded."

The judgment and order are reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by the Irvine & Muir Lumber Company against S. O. Holmes and W. P. White, copartners doing business as the San Hedrin Summer Resort. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Holmes appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. H. Schooler, of Chico, for appellant.
Thomas & Thomas, of Ukiah, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action to recover a balance of $494.27 alleged to be due from defendants to plaintiff for goods, wares, and merchandise which, it is alleged, were sold by plaintiff to defendants as copartners in business. Defendant White made no answer. Defendant Holmes answered, and denied that he was at any time a copartner of White, or that he was ever indebted to plaintiff in any sum whatever. The cause was tried without a jury, and the court found that White and Holmes were associated together in business under the firm name of San Hedrin Summer Resort, that, on August 3, 1909, defendant Holmes notified plaintiff that he would no longer be responsible for goods furnished to said resort, or for goods sold to White, that the balance due on the portion of said account that had accrued prior to said 3d day of August, 1909, was the sum of $373.20, and rendered judgment against defendant for that amount. Defendant Holmes appeals from the judgment, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant presents but two objections to the judgment calling for notice: First, that the evidence failed to establish a copartnership; second, that the court erred in its application of payments on the account.

[1] Some objections were made to the admissibility of certain testimony given by defendant White and plaintiff's bookkeeper, Barnett, but no notice is taken of these objections in appellant's brief, and we assume that they are waived.

[2-4] 1. Appellant's contention is that the only relation existing between himself and White was that of landlord and tenant, and he places his reliance upon a written instrument which was executed by White and Holmes in July, 1908.

It appeared that Holmes was the owner of the property known as the San Hedrin Summer Resort, situated in Mendocino county, and consisting of 240 acres of land partly devoted to farming purposes, and in connection therewith was a hotel conducted as a pleasure resort. The written instrument signed by the parties is quite a lengthy document, and pointed out in great detail the respective rights and duties of the parties, and provided:

"That all profits, gain, and increase that shall rise from the crops or products of the land or from the stock leased hereunder and all proceeds from the hotel and saloon and from the employment by the parties of the second part during the term of this lease in any business other or different from the business exercised under this lease shall be equally divided."

We are satisfied from the provisions found in this document that it imports a lease rather than a partnership, and, if the relation of the parties in their subsequent dealings with each other and with the public had been in accordance with the terms of the lease, the findings of the court could not be sustained.

Defendant White testified as follows:

"I came from Oakland up to Mr. Holmes' place in answer to a letter he wrote me saying he wanted me to come up and see him. When I got there he made a proposition to manage his place for him, and we were to share the profits of the place, what I could make out of it as a ranch and as a summer resort. I told Mr. Holmes that I had no money—no means—but that I had experience in that business, and I had good references as to my capability, honesty, and industry, and he said that was satisfactory, and I told him that the only way that I could go into it, that I would have to have the living for the family and myself; that I was willing myself, my sons and wife and daughter, to labor, and put that, together with my knowledge of the business against his capital, time, and property, and he said he would do that. I told him that we had nothing to live on, no money, and the place the first year I was satisfied would not pay expenses. I told him that he would have to guarantee a living for myself and family, and we would put in our whole time and work for him, and would try to make the place pay as a ranch and as a resort; that it would take all our time, and we would have no chance to make any money on the outside, and therefore he would have to assure me a means of living there for myself and family. He said he would do so, and if there was any month that the income from the place did not pay expenses he would make up the deficiency, and on that understanding I went into business with him. He said that the understanding was that I was to run that end of the business—the family and I—and the summer resort and the saloon and bar, and he said that he would look after the city end; he would attend to all the advertising and securing the guests in any way he could. Said he had a large business connection in the city, and a large acquaintance, he and his sons, and that he would use his utmost endeavor to send as many people up to me each season and the year around as he could; that he would do all the advertising, and make all contracts for the advertising, and would buy the liquor for the saloon and the tobacco, which he did, during the time I was there. * * * Whatever money I could make on the place as a ranch or a summer resort was to be divided between us after paying the running expenses of the resort and ranch. I rendered him a monthly statement each and every month and made a settlement. Would send him what was coming to him; any shortage I would state, and he would send it to me. Mr. Holmes worked there on the place and made himself generally useful; and, if I was in the city or in town here or away, he would wait on people at the bar and saloon, and sell them liquor—those that wanted it. * * * Mr. Holmes made contracts for hay and for seed grain and paid them. Our relations continued the same all of the time we were there; up to the time Mr. Holmes repudiated these bills the relations between Mr. Holmes and myself were exactly the same up to the day I left the place."

It appears from the testimony that the parties carried on the enterprise independently of the written agreement and upon the understanding testified to by White. Holmes spent a large part of his time at the resort, and participated in its management; he bought and paid for supplies used there, regulated the running of the stages which carried passengers to and from the resort, paid deficiencies in plaintiff's monthly bills against

White. Plaintiff's bills for supplies were charged to White, and there is no evidence that Holmes gave any direct authority to plaintiff to furnish White or the resort with supplies or told plaintiff personally that he would be responsible for White's purchases. But plaintiff's bookkeeper, Barnett, testified that, when White opened the account, he stated that his arrangement with Holmes was that if the business did not pay expenses he (Holmes) "would make up the shortage each month." Settlements of bills were made monthly for several months, and White testified that Holmes contributed to their payment by making up deficiencies. This condition continued until the account with plaintiff had reached quite an amount and, White not being able to pay it, Barnett, on August 3, 1909, went to Holmes for a settlement. He testified:

"I said, 'Mr. Holmes, you have been paying these bills heretofore,' and he said, 'Yes; I have been, but I will pay them no longer.'"

Holmes wrote many letters to White at times when he (Holmes) was in Oakland, where his family lived, which tend to show that the two men were engaged in a common enterprise to share the profits, to which White contributed his services and the services of his family, and applying all the earnings to the expenses attending the venture.

We think the evidence was sufficient to justify the court in finding the existence of a copartnership. Appellant invites attention to the fact that there was no agreement, either oral or written, that the parties should share the losses. So far as the evidence shows, this is true. But we think where the understanding was, as in this case, that the parties were to share equally the profits, and that the expenses should be paid out of the proceeds of the business, there was an equal liability for the losses which the law will imply. Civ. Code, § 2404; Quinn v. Quinn, 81 Cal. 14, 22 Pac. 264. Speaking of the rule as to what may constitute a partnership and how it may be created, it is stated, in 30 Cyc. 360:

"If the agreement is partly in writing, partly oral, and partly evidenced only by conduct, then all the steps taken by the parties in connection with the enterprise are to be considered, for whatever was done in furtherance of the common purpose, understanding, and agreement must be treated as part of one common transaction."

[5] 2. The remaining question pertains to the application of payments. The court found that the balance due on that part of the account accruing prior to August 3, 1909, was $373.20, and that all payments made prior to that date "should be applied to that portion of the account which accrued prior to that date, that is, upon the partnership account, and that all payments made subsequent to said 3d day of August, 1909, should be applied on the individual account of defendant W. P. White, and being that portion of said account which accrued after said 3d day of August, 1909."

We do not understand that there is any controversy in regard to the amounts paid on the account or the times when paid. It is not claimed that when payments were made any direction was given as to their application, and the court so found, and that it remained for the law to make the application.

Appellant's contention is that all payments should have been applied to the partnership account, whether made before or after the partnership had ceased. Appellant overlooks the distinction between the account created while the partnership was in existence and the account which ran against White after Holmes had given notice that he would not longer be liable. Here, then, were two classes of obligation, and if section 1479, Civil Code, has any application, it would seem that subdivision 3, par. 3, of that section authorized the application made by the court. But, if section 1479 does not apply, the rule is as stated in Murdock v. Clarke, 88 Cal. 384, 390, 26 Pac. 601, 603, that:

"Where there are different debts due from the debtor to the creditor, the law will make the application in such a manner, in view of all the circumstances of the case, as is most in accordance with justice and equity, and will best * * * maintain the rights of both parties."

The principle thus stated, it seems to us, fully justified the course pursued by the court in applying payments.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

1. ASSIGNMENTS ⇐50—RIGHTS OF PARTIES.

Drawing and delivering a nonnegotiable order for payment of a part of a debt operates as an equitable assignment pro tanto as between the assignee and payee, though the assignment does not, as between the drawee and payee, obligate the former to recognize it; for the drawee may insist on his right to discharge the debt in toto by a single payment.

6. ASSIGNMENTS $\hookrightarrow$ 132 — ACTIONS — ISSUES, PROOF, AND VARIANCE.

A variance between a complaint in an action against an acceptor of an order directing him to pay a specified sum to plaintiff which alleges that the maker of the order had been personally allowed the fees referred to in the order and the proof that the fees had been allowed as the law requires to the acceptor as executor is immaterial, where it was stipulated that subsequent to the execution and acceptance of the order defendant had actually paid the maker of the order a sum in excess of the amount of the order.

7. INTEREST $\hookrightarrow$ 38 — JUDGMENT.

A money judgment which provides for the allowance of interest on the principal sum at 12 per cent. per annum until paid may be construed to mean that the principal shall bear interest at 12 per cent. per annum until paid, and, so construed, violates Civ. Code, §§ 1918, 1920, and must be reformed to conform to the statute permitting allowance of agreed interest only to the time of entry of judgment, and limiting interest on judgments to 7 per cent. per annum.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; A. J. Buckles, Judge.

Action by C. U. Barlow against Edward Lande. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Marshall B. Woodworth, Howard Harron, and Gerald C. Halsey, all of San Francisco, for appellant. William F. Herron, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. The plaintiff's cause of action was based upon the alleged liability of the defendant as the acceptor of a written order drawn upon him for the payment of a certain sum of money, which order reads as follows:

"San Francisco, Cal., March 8, 1910.

"To Edward Lande, Esq., Executor Julius Friedman Estate, San Francisco, Cal.—Dear Sir: Kindly pay to C. U. Barlow or order the sum of $551.20, with interest thereon at the rate of 1 per cent. per month till paid, out of the next fees allowed by order of court and ordered paid by executors by order of court.

"Marshall B. Woodworth.

"I hereby accept the within order as requested in the foregoing sum, March 8, 1910.

"Edward Lande,

"As Executor of the Estate of Julius Friedman, Deceased.

"March 15, 1910."

The answer of the defendant, while admitting the making, delivery, and acceptance of the order, denied that it was made, delivered, and accepted for a valuable consideration, and pleaded as a special defense to the action that there was no consideration for the making of the order in the first instance, nor for its subsequent acceptance by the defendant, and that prior to the happening of the condition expressed in the order the maker thereof gave notice to the defendant not to pay the plaintiff the sum of money called for by the order. The judgment upon the verdict of a jury was entered in favor of the plaintiff, from which and from an order denying a new trial the defendant has appealed.

It was an admitted fact in the case that the order in question was executed and delivered to the plaintiff by Woodworth, the maker; that it was thereupon accepted in writing by the defendant; that subsequent to the date of the defendant's acceptance a sum of money greatly in excess of the amount called for by the order had been allowed to the defendant and actually paid to Woodworth for and on account of the latter's professional services rendered as an attorney at law to the defendant as the executor of the estate of Julius Friedman, deceased.

The trial court rightly refused to permit the defendant to show in evidence: (1) That he had never received any consideration for the acceptance of the order; (2) that there was no consideration for the order as between Woodworth, the drawer, and plaintiff, the payee of the order; and (3) that after its acceptance the order was canceled by written notice to that effect from Woodworth to the defendant.

[1-3] It is the rule of law in this state that the drawing and delivery of a nonnegotiable order for the payment of a part of a debt operates as an equitable assignment pro tanto as between the assignee and payee, although such an assignment in and of itself does not, as between the drawee and payee, obligate the former to recognize the assignment and pay the sum called for therein. Being only for a portion of a debt, the drawee may insist upon his right to discharge the debt in toto, and by a single payment. But by accepting the assignment, even though it be for only a part of the debt, the debtor admits the original debt, and to the extent of the sum called for in the assignment becomes the debtor of the assignee, and assumes the obligation to pay only him. In such a case the original indebtedness of the drawee will be deemed a sufficient consideration for the drawee's acceptance of the assignment and consequent liability to the assignee thereof.

[4] It is no defense to an action by the assignee of a debt that there was no consideration for the assignment. Owing the debt, it is immaterial to the debtor to whom he pays it, providing he be protected against the demand of the original creditor for the payment of the same debt. This the assignment and its acceptance would fully do. Consequently the purpose and consideration of the assignment in the present case were no concern of the defendant.

[5] And an assignment of a debt which has been accepted cannot be rescinded or annulled at the mere option of the assignor.

These conclusions are fully supported, we think, by numerous authorities, among which may be noted the following: Caulfield v. Sanders, 17 Cal. 569; Kelley v. Hampton, 22 Cal. App. 68, 133 Pac. 339; Greig v. Riordan, 99 Cal. 316, 33 Pac. 913; Goldman v. Murray, 164 Cal. 419, 129 Pac. 462; Robinson, etc., v. Johnson, 10 Colo. App. 135, 50 Pac. 215; Toplitz v. King, 20 Misc. Rep. 576, 46 N. Y. Supp. 418; Welch v. Mayer, 4 Colo. App. 440, 36 Pac. 613; Hackett v. Martin, 8 Greenl. (Me.) 77; Chapman v. Haley, 43 N. H. 300; Sevier v. McWhorter, 27 Miss. 442; Blin v. Pierce, 20 Vt. 25; Vanstrum v. Liljengren, 37 Minn. 191, 33 N. W. 555; Chamberlin v. Gilman, 10 Colo. 94, 14 Pac. 107.

[6] Appellant insists that there was a fatal variance between plaintiff's pleadings and proof, because the complaint alleged that Woodworth, the maker of the order, had been personally allowed the fees referred to in the order, whereas the proof showed that, in fact, such fees had been allowed, as the law requires, to the defendant as the executor of the estate of Friedman. The variance may be conceded; but that it did not mislead the defendant, and therefore was immaterial, is evidenced by the fact that it was stipulated at the trial by counsel for the respective parties that subsequent to the execution and acceptance of the order the defendant had actually paid Woodworth, pursuant to the order of the court, a sum for attorney's fees in excess of $1,000.

[7] Complaint is made of the judgment in so far as it provides for the allowance of interest upon the principal sum sued for "at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum from the 8th day of March, 1910 [the date of the order], till paid." While the judgment, in effect, embraces, and properly so, the principal sum found to be due the plaintiff, together with the agreed rate of interest thereon, nevertheless, as written and entered, it might be construed to mean that it was to bear interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum until paid; and, so construed, it would be in violation of those statutory provisions which permit the allowance of an agreed interest only up to the time of the entry of the judgment, and limit the allowance of interest upon judgments to a rate of 7 per cent. per annum. Civ. Code, §§ 1918, 1920.

Our conclusion concerning and confirming the correctness of the rulings of the trial court practically disposes of the defendant's objections to the charge of the trial court, which when read and considered in its entirety, consistently and correctly stated the law of the case.

The judgment is modified by striking therefrom the words "till paid," and, as modified, the judgment will stand affirmed, without costs to the appellant, and the order denying a new trial is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

LIMA v. LIMA. (Civ. 1308.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 19, 1914. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 18, 1915.)

1. PROCESS — 96 — SUMMONS — PUBLICATION — AFFIDAVIT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 412, providing that, where defendant is a nonresident, or has departed from the state, or cannot be found therein, and the fact appears by affidavit, and it also appears by such affidavit, or by the verified complaint on file, that a cause of action exists against the defendant, or that he is a necessary or proper party, the court may order service by publication of the summons, such publication must be made in strict observance of the terms of the statute, and, unless there has been such an observance, the order for publication is void, and the court is without jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Process, Cent. Dig. §§ 108-120; Dec. Dig. — 96.]

2. PROCESS — 96 — SERVICE — PUBLICATION — AFFIDAVIT — REQUISITES.

Such provision means that the ultimate facts alleged in a verified complaint, if stating a cause of action, give the court jurisdiction to order publication on summons, but that, if the complaint is not verified, the affidavit relied upon must state probative facts from which the court may infer the existence of a cause of action in favor of the plaintiff; and hence neither an unverified complaint in an action for divorce and for an award of community property nor an affidavit alleging the filing of the complaint, that defendant had previously departed from the state, that on due diligence her whereabouts could not be ascertained, that plaintiff had fully and fairly stated the facts to his counsel and was informed and believed that he had a good cause of action against defendant as would fully appear from his complaint, and that defendant was a necessary and proper party defendant, gave the court no jurisdiction to order service by publication, and its decree awarding plaintiff a divorce and the community property was void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Process, Cent. Dig. §§ 108-120; Dec. Dig. — 96.]

3. PROCESS — 96 — SERVICE — PUBLICATION — AFFIDAVIT — FACT OR CONCLUSION.

A statement in such affidavit that the plaintiff was advised by counsel and that he "verily believes" that he had a good cause of action was only a conclusion of the affiant or his counsel, and neither the statement of an ultimate fact required in a pleading, nor of a probative fact from which such ultimate fact may be deduced, nor a fact of any sort which in any way legally tended to prove such ultimate or probative fact, or from which it might be inferred.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Process, Cent. Dig. §§ 108-120; Dec. Dig. — 96.]

4. DIVORCE — 33 — ABATEMENT BY DEATH OF PARTY — EFFECT AS TO PROPERTY RIGHTS.

While the death of one of the parties to a divorce suit extinguishes the action and the cause of action, yet, in a divorce action in which the property rights of the parties are involved, the decree adjudicates the question of such property rights as effectually as if they were the principal object of the action, and the death of plaintiff in divorce after a decree dissolving the marriage and adjudicating property rights did not abate the action so that it could not be revived and reopened to determine whether the court erred in such adjudication.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. H. Waste, Judge.

Action for divorce by Antonio F. Lima against Isabel F. Lima, in which, after the death of plaintiff, his widow, Annie S. Lima, on petition, was permitted to be represented by counsel. Decree for plaintiff awarding him certain community property, and from a denial of her motion to vacate the decree, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Rehearing denied in Supreme Court, 147 Pac. 237.

Gonsalves & Keller, of Oakland, for appellant. R. B. Tappan, of Alameda, for respondent. Gehring & Wyman, of Oakland, amici curiæ.

HART, J. On the 21st day of June, 1909, Antonio F. Lima instituted this suit for a divorce against his wife, Isabel F. Lima, in the superior court of Alameda county. The complaint, which was not verified, alleged that the defendant had been guilty, on divers occasions, one of which is specifically stated, of acts of adultery with one Manuel Drack, and further alleged that she "is now living and cohabitating with the said Manuel Drack, the place where being unknown to this plaintiff." The complaint declared that the plaintiff and the defendant were the owners of certain real estate, which was community property, situate in the county of Alameda, the same consisting of several town lots in Brooklyn township of said county, and being specifically described in the complaint. The prayer of the complaint was for a decree dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between the parties and assigning, setting over and awarding to the plaintiff all the community property described in the complaint.

Service of summons was attempted by publication, and, the defendant having failed to make any appearance within the time prescribed by law in such cases, her default was thereupon entered. On the 27th day of October, 1909, and after due proceedings, an interlocutory decree was made and entered declaring the plaintiff to be entitled to a decree of divorce against the defendant on the ground of adultery, and assigning, distributing, and awarding to the plaintiff the community property described in the complaint. On the 31st day of October, 1910, a final decree granting plaintiff a divorce and awarding to him the community property referred to in the complaint was rendered, and was filed on the 1st day of November, 1910.

On the 19th day of December, 1912, the defendant filed and served upon R. B. Tappan, Esq., attorney for the plaintiff, a notice of motion "to set aside the judgment heretofore rendered herein, upon the ground that said court never acquired and never had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of this action or of the person of the defendant herein." Said motion having been duly heard by the court, the same was denied, on the 10th day of January, 1913.

Thereafter the defendant, after due notice thereof upon the attorney for the plaintiff, submitted a motion to set aside and vacate and annul the order made herein for the publication of summons and the interlocutory and final decrees of divorce, upon the ground that the court never acquired or had jurisdiction to order the publication of the summons, and therefore no legal authority to enter the interlocutory and final decrees herein. This motion, having been duly heard by the court, was denied.

Although the defendant has appealed from both the orders above mentioned, the points submitted for decision here may be effectually reviewed and decided on the appeal from the order denying the second motion above referred to, and we shall therefore confine ourselves in the consideration and decision of this cause to that order.

It is conceived proper to explain at this point that, on the 19th day of August, 1911, and prior to the time at which were instituted the proceedings culminating in the orders appealed from, the plaintiff, Antonio F. Lima, died. His widow, Annie S. Lima, to whom he was married on the day succeeding that upon which he was granted a final judgment for divorce from the defendant, and to whom, after said marriage, he conveyed by deed the property described in the complaint as having been the community property of himself and the defendant, petitioned the court below for permission to be represented in these proceedings by her attorneys, Messrs. Gehring & Wyman, setting out in her petition that, since she was not a party to this action, it was necessary that she should be so represented in order that her rights in the property described in the complaint be protected. The court allowed her petition and counsel appearing here as amici curiæ are, in fact, representing the interests of the said Annie.

The specific point made by the defendant is that:

"The order for publication of summons is void because there is no affidavit of merits and no showing by any verified paper on file wherefrom it can be found that plaintiff had a cause of action against defendant."

[1] As stated in the opening brief of counsel for the defendant, the rule is well settled that substituted service of summons, being purely of statutory origin and in derogation of the common law, can be made effectual only by a substantially strict observance of the terms of the statute authorizing it. If, therefore, there has not been such a compliance with the statute, the service is void, and the court fails to acquire jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, and is for that reason without jurisdiction to render and enter judgment against him in the action in which such summons has been issued.

Section 412 of the Code of Civil Procedure is the source of the authority in this state for substituted service of summons or service thereof by publication. So much of said section as is pertinent to the inquiry submitted by this appeal reads as follows:

"Where the person on whom service is to be made resides out of the state; or has departed from the state; or cannot, after due diligence, be found within the state; or conceals himself to avoid the service of summons; * * * and the fact appears by affidavit to the satisfaction of the court, or a judge thereof; and it also appears by such affidavit, or by the verified complaint on file, that a cause of action exists against the defendant in respect to whom the service is to be made, or that he is a necessary or proper party to the action; * * * such court or judge may make an order that the service be made by the publication of the summons. * * *

Thus it will be observed that one of the essential prerequisites to conferring upon the court the authority or jurisdiction to make an order for the publication of summons is a showing, either by a verified complaint that has been filed, or by an affidavit, that a cause of action exists against the defendant in respect to whom the service is to be made. It, of course, necessarily follows that, in the absence of such a showing by either of the modes prescribed by said section, an order for the publication of summons would be nugatory and therefore absolutely void. And, obviously, if the court was without jurisdiction to make the order for the publication of the summons, there was no legal publication, and hence no service of summons, and, obviously, a judgment rendered and entered against the defendant on such a publication of summons would be coram non iudice, and consequently void ab initio.

[2, 3] The question here, then is: Was it made to appear, by either of the two ways pointed out by section 412 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that a cause of action existed against the defendant?

The complaint confessedly states a cause of action for divorce upon the ground of adultery, but, as seen, it is unverified, and upon it, manifestly, the court would be without authority to make an order for the publication of the summons directed to the defendant. It remains to be seen, therefore, whether the affidavit filed by the plaintiff meets the requirement of the statute in the respect referred to, and was therefore sufficient to clothe the court with the authority to make the order.

After alleging that a suit for divorce had been instituted by the plaintiff against the defendant by the filing of a complaint for that purpose in the superior court of Alameda county, that the defendant had, previously to the filing of said complaint, departed from the state of California, and that her whereabouts were then unknown, and could not, after due diligence, be ascertained, the affidavit proceeds:

"I have fully and fairly stated the facts of this case to R. B. Tappan, whose office is at the northeast corner of Santa Clara avenue, in the city of Alameda, in said county and state, who is my counsel, and I am by him informed and I verily believe that I have a good cause of action in this suit against the said defendant, as will fully appear by my complaint now on file herein, to which reference is hereby made, and the said defendant, Isabel F. Lima, is a necessary and proper party defendant thereto, as I am advised by my said counsel, after such statement made as aforesaid, and as I verily believe."

It requires no argument to show that nowhere in said affidavit is it made to appear that a cause of action for divorce existed in favor of the plaintiff against the defendant. The complaint is not even made a part of the affidavit, assuming that such a course with respect to an unverified complaint would be sufficient to include the averments of said pleading as among the facts sworn to in the affidavit. Nor does plaintiff, in the affidavit, either expressly or upon information and belief declare that the facts alleged in the complaint are true. The statement that the plaintiff is advised by his counsel, and that he "verily believes," that he has a good cause of action, is only a conclusion of the affiant or his attorney, upon whose advice in that regard he relies. "Such an averment is neither the statement of an ultimate fact, such as is required to be stated in a pleading, nor of a probative fact from which such ultimate fact may be deduced, nor a fact of any sort which in any way legally tends to prove such ultimate or probative fact, or from which it may be inferred. It is not the statement of a fact at all." Forbes v. Hyde, 31 Cal. 342, 354; County of Yolo v. Knight, 70 Cal. 431, 435, 11 Pac. 662. Nor does the mere fact that in the affidavit the plaintiff refers to the complaint on file measure up to the requirement of the statute that it must be made to appear by the affidavit (in the absence of a verified complaint showing the fact) that "a cause of action exists against the defendant in respect to whom the service is to be made," for such reference is to an unverified complaint, and to hold this to be sufficient would simply be to say that the essentially jurisdictional fact of the existence of a cause of action in favor of the plaintiff may be found by the court from ultimate facts not sworn to by the plaintiff or his attorney. Such a practice is clearly not contemplated by the statute, and, if sanctioned by the courts, would render nugatory the requirement in question, a result following the exercise of a power wholly beyond that of judicial cognizance.

The Code section is in clear and simple language, and plainly means that the ultimate facts alleged in a verified complaint, if they state a cause of action, are sufficient to vest in the court the jurisdiction to make an order for the publication of a summons, but that, where the complaint is not verified, and an affidavit is relied upon, the latter instrument must, within the real contemplation of said section, state probative facts from which the court may infer the fact of the existence of a cause of action in favor of the plaintiff. County of Yolo v. Knight, 70 Cal. 431, 11 Pac. 662; Columbia Screw Co. v. Warner Lock Co., 138 Cal. 446, 71 Pac. 498; People v. Mulcahy, 159 Cal. 34, 112 Pac. 853. If, however, the averment of ultimate facts in an affidavit might rationally be held to be a compliance with the mandates of the statute, such facts so stated must, equally with the complaint, clearly disclose the statement of a cause of action in favor of the plaintiff.

But counsel for the plaintiff undertake to differentiate this case from the case of the Columbia Screw Co. v. Warner Lock Co., supra, upon the proposition that in the latter case the affidavit was by the attorney for the plaintiff, whereas in the present case the affidavit is by the plaintiff himself. There is no legal or logical ground for any such distinction, and the court in the case referred to makes none upon that ground. There the attorney made the affidavit in which he alleged facts sufficient to disclose that a cause of action existed in favor of his client, but he completely destroyed the force and effect of those allegations by asserting in the affidavit:

"That the matters and things hereinbefore alleged concerning the indebtedness of said defendant to plaintiff are stated upon information received by me from said plaintiff."

The court held the affidavit to be insufficient, not because it was made by the attorney, rather than by the plaintiff, but upon the ground that it was wholly insufficient as an affidavit such as is contemplated by section 412 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Of the affidavit in that case the court has this to say:

"The attorney does not pretend to know the facts himself; he does not state what information he received from plaintiff, but that the statements are made upon information received from plaintiff. It is substantially the same as if the attorney had said, 'Plaintiff has told me that the defendant was indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $646.90 for goods sold and delivered by said plaintiff to said defendant.' If the plaintiff had relied upon the affidavit as a verified complaint, it would then clearly have been insufficient. * * * The affidavit in this case does not state why it was not made by plaintiff or some officer thereof. Code Civ. Proc. § 446. It does not state that the facts were within the knowledge of affiant, but, on the contrary, shows that they were not within his knowledge, and even then there is no statement that he believed the 'matters and things' to be true. When the statute uses the words 'appears by affidavit,' it means more than an affidavit as to what some one told the party making the affidavit. There must be an oath to some fact at least."

Thus it clearly appears that, as stated, the court was dealing entirely with the question of the sufficiency of the affidavit, and not with the fact that the attorney in place of his client had made the affidavit. Parenthetically, we may suggest that we are not to be understood, from anything said in this opinion, as deciding the question whether an attorney may, for and in behalf of his client, as may be done under certain indicated circumstances in the verification of a pleading, make the affidavit mentioned in section 412 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That question is not before us here.

[4] Another point sought to be maintained by the respondent is that the action has abated by reason of the death of the plaintiff since the rendition and entry of the final decree, and that there is, therefore, no power in the court to revive it for any reason or purpose. It is obviously true that the effect of the death of one of the parties to a divorce suit whose sole and only object is to sever the matrimonial bonds existing between them is to extinguish the action and the cause of action. It is also true in this state that the settlement of property rights between the parties is regarded merely as "an incident of every decree for divorce, where there is any property involved." Mott v. Mott, 82 Cal. 413, 22 Pac. 1140, 1142; Kirschner v. Dietrich, 110 Cal. 502, 505, 42 Pac. 1064. But it is equally true that when, in a divorce action, the property rights of the parties are adjusted and settled by the court, the legal result is that the decree adjudicates the question of such property rights as effectually and definitively as though such question were the paramount object of the action, and, "where some property right hinges on the question, the past status of these parties may become the subject of judicial investigation." Lawrence v. Nelson, 113 Iowa, 277, 85 N. W. 84, 57 L. R. A. 583, and cases cited in the last-mentioned volume. Or, as the rule is stated in 1 Cyc. p. 64:

"Where the consequences of the divorce are such as affect the property rights of the parties in the suit, the heirs or personal representatives may have such an interest in the litigation as that the cause will survive, not for the purpose of continuing the controversy touching the right of divorce itself, but for the ascertainment of whether the property has been rightfully diverted from its appropriate channel of devolution."

Counsel for the respondent cite, as supporting their position in this case upon the question of the effect of the death of a party to a suit for divorce upon the action, the following California cases, viz.: Kirschner v. Dietrich, 110 Cal. 502, 42 Pac. 1064; Begbie v. Begbie, 128 Cal. 154, 60 Pac. 667, 49 L. R. A. 141; Hite v. Mercantile Trust Co., 156 Cal. 765, 767, 768, 106 Pac. 102. We will not take the time to review those cases. It is enough to say that in none of them, except, perhaps, in the case of Hite, etc., were the property rights of the parties made a subject of or an issue in the action, and they were, therefore, not included in the adjudication, nor did it appear that the decree in any way affected such rights. As to the Hite Case, there is nothing said therein in conflict with the rule laid down in Cyc., supra. In that case, it may be proper to explain, the action was to vacate a decree of divorce, and was instituted after the death of the defendant, the victorious party. The trial court found and adjudged in the divorce action that the plaintiff, prior to the filing of the suit, had, in consideration of a lump sum of money paid to her by her husband, the defendant in said action, subscribed to a written agreement with the latter by the terms of which she released all claims against her said husband and her present and future interest in the community property. The court in that case said:

"If plaintiff could establish her status as his lawful wife at the time of his death, she would be entitled to a widow's share in the community property. But the effect of the agreement aforesaid was to release and extinguish all the rights she then had in his property as his wife, and all she might thereafter have as his widow. * * * As she has shown no right to have this agreement set aside or disregarded, it follows that she fails to show that the setting aside of the judgment would give her any right or interest in the property, the only remaining subject of the litigation."

Clearly there is nothing in the quoted language and much less is there in the other cases cited by counsel and above mentioned, which lends support to the view that the death of a party to a divorce action, after a decree therein has been entered whereby, besides dissolving the bonds of matrimony, the property rights of the parties have been adjudicated, will operate to abate the action so that it cannot be revived and reopened, if proceedings to that end be properly instituted, for the purpose of determining whether the court erred in its adjudication of such property rights.

Our conclusion is that the court was wholly without jurisdiction to make the order for the publication of the summons, and that consequently all the proceedings thereafter had in the cause and depending upon said order of publication were likewise beyond the jurisdiction of the court and void, and that therefore this is not a case where there is mere error of judgment, but no defect of jurisdiction, as was true in the case of Dusy v. Helm, 59 Cal. 188, cited by the respondent in support of that view. As stated, there is here an entire absence of a showing of a jurisdictional fact, or a fact without the existence and showing of which the court could not make a valid order for the publication of the summons, and that the proceedings in the case following the making of said order are affected with the same infirmity that destroys its vital force.

The orders appealed from are reversed.

LIMA v. LIMA. (S. F. 6562.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 19, 1915.)

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. H. Waste, Judge.

Action for divorce by Antonio F. Lima against Isabel F. Lima. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed to the District Court of Appeal, which reversed the decree (147 Pac. 233). Motion for hearing in Supreme Court denied.

Gonsalves & Keller, of Oakland, for appellant. R. B. Tappan, of Alameda, for respondent. Gehring & Wyman, of Oakland, amici curiæ.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. I dissent from the refusal to grant a hearing in this court, after decision by the District Court of Appeal for the Third District. If the decree of divorce was void for want of the jurisdictional prerequisites to an order for publication of summons, the defect is one that is apparent on the face of the judgment roll, and the defendant's interests can be fully protected without any order setting the judgment aside. In any proceeding involving her status as a wife, or her property rights, she may assail such judgment collaterally, and successfully object to its use against her. Since the plaintiff in the action died before the making of these motions, there was no one upon whom the defendant could serve notice of motion to set aside the judgment. The trial court may no doubt upon its own motion set aside a judgment void on its face. If it had so acted here, and we were satisfied from an inspection of the judgment roll that the judgment was void, the order made would not have been reversed on appeal. But this is a matter within the discretion of the court below. Its refusal to set aside the void judgment should not be reviewed, for the sufficient reason that the defendant is not aggrieved by such refusal; her rights being, as above pointed out, already fully protected. All of this, of course, is on the assumption that the judgment is void, a question that in my view it is not necessary here to decide, and that should be left for decision in a case in which the parties interested may appear and be heard.

Of course, the alleged second wife of the original plaintiff, not being a party to this proceeding, is in no way bound by any disposition which may be made thereof. In a proper action to which she is a party, she may assert or defend her claim to the property involved absolutely regardless of such disposition. It may well be that in such an action as one to quiet title to this property, to which she and defendant are parties, it may develop that for some reason defendant is estopped to assert any claim to the property, or is barred by laches, notwithstanding that the judgment may be void on its face. No useful purpose is subserved by a reversal of the action of the trial court on these motions.

VALLEJO & N. R. CO. v. REED ORCHARD CO. et al. (Sac. 2077.)(Supreme Court of California. March 5, 1915.
Rehearing Denied April 1, 1915.)1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1002, 1031, 1032, 1170—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

The Supreme Court on appeal must, under Const. art. 6, § 4½, prohibiting new trials for misdirection to the jury, improper admission or rejection of evidence, or any other error, unless after examination, including the evidence, the court is of the opinion that error complained of has resulted in miscarriage of justice, review conflicting evidence to ascertain whether error resulted in a miscarriage of justice, and must disregard a manifest error when, on such examination, it is of the opinion that the error has not prevented justice, and injury is not presumed from error, but must appear affirmatively to the court after the required examination, or from the nature of the error itself.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⇨106 — VESTED RIGHTS—REMEDIES.

Const. art. 6, § 4½, prohibiting a new trial for misdirection of the jury, erroneous rulings on evidence or for any error as to any matter of procedure, unless after examination of the case, including the evidence, the court is of the opinion that error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice, affects the remedy only, and applies to pending appeals, though submitted prior to its adoption, for a party has no contractual or vested right to have the judgment reversed because of an error which the court cannot say has produced a miscarriage of justice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 186, 212, 238-245, 252-257, 259; Dec. Dig. ⇨106.]

3. JURY ⇨12—RIGHT OF JURY TRIAL—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 592, providing that in actions for the recovery of property or for money claimed as due on a contract, or as damages for breach of contract, or for injuries, an issue of fact must be tried by a jury unless a jury trial is waived, gives the right to trial by jury as guaranteed by Const. art. 1, § 7, declaring that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate, which applies only to common-law actions, and does not secure the right in special proceedings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 27-34, 82, 99, 101, 103; Dec. Dig. ⇨12.]

4. TRIAL ⇨374—CONCLUSIVENESS OF VERDICT—TRIAL BY THE COURT.

A verdict in a case where a jury trial is not a matter of right is advisory to the court, and findings are necessary to complete the record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 884; Dec. Dig. ⇨374.]

5. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇨198—JURY ⇨19—NATURE OF PROCEEDING—"SPECIAL PROCEEDING"—TRIAL BY JURY.

A condemnation proceeding is a "special proceeding" not included in the classes enumerated in Code Civ. Proc. § 592, in which a jury trial is required, but the section is made applicable to condemnation suits by section 1256, and all issues are for the court, except the issue of compensation, which is for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 525, 526, 528, 535-539; Dec. Dig. ⇨198; Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 104-133; Dec. Dig. ⇨19.]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Special Proceeding.]

6. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇨262—HARMLESS ERROR—RULINGS ON INSTRUCTIONS.

Errors, in instructions in a condemnation proceeding on other issues than that of compensation and on which the court has weighed the evidence and made findings, are not reversible unless on the whole case, including the evidence, there has been substantial injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 681-686; Dec. Dig. ⇨262.]

7. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇨211 — ISSUES—COMPENSATION—FINDINGS.

In proceedings by a railroad company to condemn land for a right of way, the cost of fences along the right of way and of cattle guards must, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1248, be determined to adjust compensation; and, where the issues submitted to the jury do not include that question, the court, making a finding that no fences or cattle guards are necessary, completes the findings required for a preliminary judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 550; Dec. Dig. ⇨211.]

8. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇨211 — JUDGMENT—PREMATURE JUDGMENT.

A judgment in eminent domain proceedings, entered by the clerk on the general and special verdicts of the jury, which recites the verdicts and adjudges that plaintiff shall have a judgment and that the owner shall recover the compensation awarded, is premature, and the court may disregard it and make full findings on the evidence and render its own judgment thereon and determine for itself all questions of fact, excepting that of compensation, found by the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 550; Dec. Dig. ⇨211.]

9. JURY ⇨97—QUALIFICATIONS OF JURORS—EXAMINATION.

A juror who admitted on voir dire in condemnation proceedings by a railroad company that the fact of his employment by another railroad company might influence his verdict was properly excused on challenge, and the mere fact that he contradicted his statement in other parts of his examination did not affect the question on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 431-433, 435-437; Dec. Dig. ⇨97.]

10. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨968—JURY ⇨137—CHALLENGE—RIGHT TO EXERCISE—DISCRETION OF COURT.

It is within the discretion of the court to permit a party to exercise his remaining peremptory challenge after the panel is filled and all the jurors have been examined and passed for cause by both parties, and its ruling will not be disturbed except for abuse of discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3843; Dec. Dig. ⇨968; Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 619-623; Dec. Dig. ⇨137.]

11. JURY ⇨131—VOIR DIRE EXAMINATION—QUESTIONS.

A question, asked a juror on his voir dire examination in condemnation proceedings, as to how in the absence of evidence on the subject he would determine how much plaintiff could afford to pay for the land sought to be taken, was properly excluded; for the jury must consider and determine the value of the land without reference to the ability of plaintiff to pay.

12. TRIAL ¶109—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL—OPENING STATEMENT—ISSUES.

Where, in proceedings by a railroad company to condemn land for a right of way, the owner alleged that the company did not intend to construct any railroad, but began the action to acquire the land not for any public use nor in good faith, the opening statement of the company's attorney, wherein he referred to diverse previous occurrences tending to show that the company had encountered opposition and difficulty in building its line to the land, but it had persisted in its purpose, was not misconduct, though the difficulties and opposition referred to might tend to excite sympathy for the company and animosity toward the owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 91, 270, 367, 388, 395; Dec. Dig. ¶109.]

13. CORPORATIONS ¶28—"DE FACTO CORPORATION"—WHAT IS.

A railroad company obtaining from the Secretary of State a certificate of incorporation and thereafter claiming in good faith to be a legally organized corporation and doing business as such under its corporate name is at least a "de facto corporation," claiming to be a de jure corporation within Civ. Code, § 358, providing that the due incorporation of any company claiming in good faith to be a corporation and doing business as such, or its right to exercise corporate powers, shall not be inquired into collaterally in any private suit to which it may be a party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 26, 70; Dec. Dig. ¶28.]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, De Facto Corporation.]

14. CORPORATIONS ¶29—RIGHT TO ATTACK INCORPORATION.

Under Civ. Code, § 358, providing that due incorporation of any company claiming in good faith to be a corporation and doing business as such, or its right to exercise corporate powers, shall not be inquired into collaterally, an owner whose land is sought to be condemned by a de facto corporation claiming to be a de jure corporation may not object to the introduction in evidence of the company's articles of incorporation on the ground that its name so closely resembles the name of a pre-existing corporation that it tends to deceive, so that, under section 296, the Secretary of State should have refused to file articles of incorporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 77-79, 2504; Dec. Dig. ¶29.]

15. CORPORATIONS ¶32—CORPORATE EXISTENCE—EVIDENCE—DE FACTO CORPORATION—CONDEMNING LAND FOR RAILROAD.

Where, in proceedings by a railroad company to condemn land for a right of way, the owner denied the corporate existence of the company, deeds conveying to the company land to be a part of its line and franchises to it over parts of its line, and plans and specifications for the work along the line and at terminals, and judgments condemning other property along the line, was admissible to show that the company was a de facto corporation, though its articles of incorporation introduced in evidence prima facie showed its legal corporate existence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 106-118, 2086, 2087; Dec. Dig. ¶32.]

16. EMINENT DOMAIN ¶196—PROCEEDINGS TO CONDEMN LAND FOR RAILROAD RIGHT OF WAY—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where, in proceedings by a railroad company to condemn land for a right of way, the owner denied that the company intended to construct any railroad, evidence that the company had planned a railroad system, including a line over the land sought to be taken, and that in pursuance of the plan it had constructed other parts of the line and obtained franchises and rights of way and was endeavoring to complete the system, was relevant on the question of the company's good faith in proposing to build its line on the land sought to be taken, and thereby show that it sought to take the land for a public use.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 529-534; Dec. Dig. ¶196.]

17. EMINENT DOMAIN ¶196—ACQUISITION OF LAND FOR A RAILROAD RIGHT OF WAY—NECESSITY—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

A railroad company, seeking to condemn land for a right of way, may show on the contested issue of necessity for the taking, that it has planned a railroad system, including a line over the land sought to be taken, and that in pursuance of the plan it has constructed other parts of the line and obtained franchises and rights of way therefor, and that it is endeavoring to complete the same.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 529-534; Dec. Dig. ¶196.]

18. EVIDENCE ¶146—ADMISSIBILITY—COLLATERAL EFFECTS.

Evidence, properly admissible under issues presented, cannot be excluded because it may have collateral effects detrimental to the party objecting.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 429; Dec. Dig. ¶146.]

19. EMINENT DOMAIN ¶196—ACQUISITION OF LAND FOR RAILROAD RIGHT OF WAY—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In proceedings by a railroad company to condemn land for a right of way, the court properly permitted the president of the company to testify as to his efforts to overcome obstacles to the building of the proposed road by other corporations and persons, and in detailing the opposition to the enterprise to show that it sought to acquire the land for railroad purposes, though it might create prejudice against the owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 529-534; Dec. Dig. ¶196.]

20. EMINENT DOMAIN ¶20—RIGHT TO CONDEMN LAND FOR FREIGHT SHEDS—STATUTES.

Under Civ. Code, § 465, empowering railroad companies to erect and maintain necessary buildings and to acquire lands therefor, a railroad company may condemn land for freight sheds for the convenient operation of its road in the transportation of freight.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 59-67; Dec. Dig. ¶20.]

21. EMINENT DOMAIN ¶20—CONDEMNATION OF LAND FOR WHARVES—"NECESSARY TO SUCCESSFULLY WORK AND CONDUCT THE BUSINESS OF THE ROAD"—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

Under Civ. Code, § 465, empowering every railroad company to acquire such real estate as may be "necessary to successfully work and conduct the business of the road" and to condemn land therefor, a railroad company, intending to establish a railroad extending to a navigable river on which there is steamboat traffic, may condemn land for wharves as reasonably necessary to successfully conduct its business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 59-67; Dec. Dig. ☞20.]

22. EMINENT DOMAIN ☞167—RIGHT TO EXERCISE—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—CONSTRUCTION.

Civ. Code, §§ 528-531, relating to the construction of bridges, ferries, wharves, etc., on authority being obtained therefor, embodied in title 6, part. 4, div. 1, must be construed in connection with title 3, relating exclusively to railroad corporations and declaring in section 465 thereof that a railroad may condemn land for purposes necessary to successfully work and conduct the business of its road, and when so construed, title 6 applies only to corporations organized to conduct a public bridge, ferry, wharf, etc., and does not apply to railroad corporations, and the restrictions therein do not apply to railroad corporations seeking to condemn land for railroad purposes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 451-456; Dec. Dig. ☞167.]

23. EMINENT DOMAIN ☞169—ACQUISITION BY RAILROAD COMPANIES OF LAND FOR WHARVES—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Pol. Code, § 2921, authorizing boards of supervisors to grant to any railroad corporation the right to construct any wharf in front of any lands owned by it bordering on navigable waters with license to take tolls for the use of the same, gives a board of supervisors discretion to grant a franchise to a railroad company to enable it to carry on a public wharf and charge tolls thereon, but does not prohibit a railroad company from constructing and operating wharves for its own business without authority from the board at places where its railroad extends to navigable water and where it finds such wharves necessary for the successful operation of its road, and it may, without any authority from the board, condemn land for such a wharf.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 461; Dec. Dig. ☞169.]

24. EMINENT DOMAIN ☞45—ACQUISITION BY RAILROAD COMPANIES OF LAND FOR WHARVES—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

The use of land along a navigable river front by a railroad company extending its line to the river for wharves as an adjunct to its road, is not prohibited by Const. art. 15, § 2, and prohibiting any corporation possessing the frontage of navigable water to exclude the right of way to the water when it is required for any public purpose, where the land acquired for wharves belonged to private individuals, and the wharves were to be used for a public purpose in operating the railroad, and if a more necessary public purpose may arise, the land can be taken from the company as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1241.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 94-100, 102, 106; Dec. Dig. ☞45.]

25. EMINENT DOMAIN ☞222—RIGHT TO EXERCISE—CORPORATIONS—ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—OBJECTIONS.

In proceedings by a railroad company empowered by its articles of incorporation to own and operate steamers, if necessary for the operation of its railroad, to condemn land for wharves on a navigable river to which its road extended, an instruction that the company could own and operate steamers in connection with its railroad and condemn land necessary for the accommodation of steamers owned by itself or other persons for the delivery of freight and passengers to and from the railroad was not prejudicial to the owner of the land sought to be taken, for it was proper to consider the probable needs of the company to have wharves for the passage of freight and passengers to and from its cars and steamers on the river in determining the area necessary for wharves.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 562-567; Dec. Dig. ☞222.]

26. EMINENT DOMAIN ☞20—ACQUISITION OF LAND—PLEADINGS.

A railroad company, seeking to condemn land for a right of way extending to a river on which steamers were plying and for wharves necessary for its business may, under the complaint alleging generally that the land sought to be taken was necessary for its proposed railroad, and specifically alleging that parts of the land so to be taken were necessary for specified uses, such as the construction and operation of the road and freight wharves and sheds, could acquire land for such wharves as were reasonably necessary to accommodate its future business in delivering and receiving freight to and from its cars to the steamers as would probably be plying on the river.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 59-67; Dec. Dig. ☞20.]

27. EMINENT DOMAIN ☞196—ACQUISITION OF LAND BY RAILROADS—NECESSITY—EVIDENCE.

On the question of the necessity of the taking of land for railroad purposes, evidence of the nature of the country through which the proposed road will pass, of the territory which will probably contribute trade and passengers to the road, and the amount and character of the products which the territory will probably yield is admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 529-534; Dec. Dig. ☞196.]

28. EMINENT DOMAIN ☞196—ACQUISITION OF LAND FOR RAILROAD PURPOSES—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where, in proceedings to condemn land for railroad purposes, the president of the railroad company testified on cross-examination that another railroad company had projected a line of railroad connecting with the company's road near its bridge on land sought to be taken, and that the company proposed to receive the cars of the other company at the place of connection and carry them over its own line, it was proper to permit him, on redirect examination, to explain that the other company was then constructing its line, and to show that the company would obtain business when its road was completed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 529-534; Dec. Dig. ☞196.]

29. EVIDENCE ☞515—OPINION EVIDENCE—"TRADE."

A civil engineer who has had 10 years' experience in the construction and operation of interurban railroads in the state, and who is familiar with the effect of such roads in developing a new region and increasing the traffic therein and in drawing freight and passenger business from established steam railroad lines, and who had traveled over a great part of the counties through which a railroad company's road ran, and had made investigations of the products and capabilities of production of the territory and the probability of shipments therefrom, may give his opinion as to the proportion of the products that would probably be shipped over a steam railroad when completed, for the effect of electric railroads in the settlement and development of the country and in obtaining traffic previously given to steam railroads is not a matter of common knowledge, but may well be termed a "trade" within Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 9, allowing opinion evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2324; Dec. Dig. ¶515.]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Trade.]

30. EVIDENCE ¶508 — OPINION EVIDENCE — EXPERTS.

Witnesses skilled in any science, art, trade, or occupation may give their opinions as experts on a subject-matter not within the common experience of men.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2311; Dec. Dig. ¶508.]

31. EVIDENCE ¶333 — "OFFICIAL DOCUMENT" — WHAT IS.

A report of the State Agricultural Society, required by Pol. Code, §§ 332, 705, 2326, to collect information and statistics, is, when printed as a public document as required by section 334, an "official document" within Code Civ. Proc. § 1918, subd. 6, and admissible in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1247-1257, 1259-1265; Dec. Dig. ¶333.]

32. EMINENT DOMAIN ¶196 — ACQUISITION OF LAND FOR RAILROAD PURPOSES — EVIDENCE — ADMISSIBILITY.

In proceedings by a railroad company to condemn land for railroad purposes, a civil engineer, familiar with the country by reason of personal observation and use of official governmental reports, may testify approximately as to the respective areas of reclaimed and unreclaimed land, and a map prepared by him, disclosing the areas, may be received to aid the court and jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 529-534; Dec. Dig. ¶196.]

33. EMINENT DOMAIN ¶196 — ACQUISITION OF LAND FOR RAILROAD PURPOSES — EVIDENCE — ADMISSIBILITY.

A witness may testify, in proceedings to condemn land for railroad purposes, as to approximate quantity of freight handled at a city, based on investigations made by inquiries of shippers and others engaged in the freighting business, and on testimony of other witnesses, and on reports of United States engineers investigating the subject to ascertain the advisability of reclamation works by the United States, as bearing on the question of necessity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 529-534; Dec. Dig. ¶196.]

34. EMINENT DOMAIN ¶196 — ACQUISITION OF LAND FOR RAILROAD PURPOSES — EVIDENCE — ADMISSIBILITY.

Where, in proceedings to condemn land for railroad purposes, the engineer, who had laid out the plan of tracks and other structures to be placed on the land sought to be condemned, stated on cross-examination that a report of a third person made to the railroad company had been furnished him for use in fixing the quantity of land necessary for railroad purposes, and that he used the report in estimating the structures and quantity of land that would probably be required, and had made his plan accordingly, the report was properly received on redirect examination in explanation of the testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 529-534; Dec. Dig. ¶196.]

35. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶971 — EVIDENCE ¶498½ — OPINION EVIDENCE — QUALIFICATION — DECISION OF TRIAL COURT.

Whether a witness is qualified to give an opinion on a matter in issue is, in the first instance, for the trial judge, and his ruling will not be disturbed except for abuse of discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3852-3857; Dec. Dig. ¶971; Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2290, 2291; Dec. Dig. ¶498½.]

36. EVIDENCE ¶498½ — OPINION EVIDENCE — COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES.

A witness who had no actual knowledge of any sales of land in a neighborhood, and who until two years before had lived on a ranch and had never been on the land in controversy except during a flood a few months before the trial, and who at most had only such general knowledge of the subject of value as any ordinary citizen in the vicinity might have, was properly prevented, within the discretion of the trial court, from giving his opinion as to the value of the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2290, 2291; Dec. Dig. ¶498½.]

37. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶1058 — HARMLESS ERROR — ERRONEOUS EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where a party had called seven witnesses who testified on the subject of value of land, error, if any, in excluding the opinion of another witness was not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4195, 4200-4204, 4206; Dec. Dig. ¶1058.]

38. TRIAL ¶240 — ACQUISITION OF LAND FOR RAILROAD PURPOSES — INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction, in proceedings to condemn land for railroad purposes, that the power of eminent domain is necessary for the public good, and that it would be unjust to the public that plaintiff should be required to pay the owner more than a fair indemnity for the loss sustained by the taking of his property for the general good, and that on the other hand, the owner, being compelled to part with his property, should be allowed just compensation, was not objectionable as argumentative, but properly cautioned the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 561; Dec. Dig. ¶240.]

39. EMINENT DOMAIN ¶222 — VALUE OF LAND TAKEN — INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in proceedings to condemn land, the jury were many times charged that they must determine the facts in accordance with the evidence, an instruction, directing the jury to weigh the testimony of witness, giving opinion as to value by reference to the whole situation of the property and its surroundings and circumstances and by applying to it their own experience and knowledge, and that while they could not act on particular facts resting in their private knowledge, but should be governed by evidence adduced, they should judge of the weight and force of the evidence on their own general knowledge of the subject, was not objectionable as leading the jury to fix the value by their own knowledge of the subject, irrespective of the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 562-567; Dec. Dig. ¶222.]

40. EMINENT DOMAIN ¶222 — TRIAL — INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction, in proceedings to condemn land for railroad purposes, that in determining the questions of necessity the jury should consider the character of the business proposed to be done by the company and the manner of doing it and the future needs of the communities which the company would serve, and should consider the number of persons to be served by the company, was proper as bearing on the probable area required by the company.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 562-567; Dec. Dig. ☞ 222.]

41. EMINENT DOMAIN ☞262—HARMLESS ERROR—ERRONEOUS INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the court, in proceedings to condemn land for railroad purposes, found that a strip 165 feet wide was required for the main line and necessary side tracks, error in an instruction, directing the jury that in determining the question of necessity they should consider that the railroad company was entitled to take a strip 165 feet wide across the land solely for railroad purposes, though the entire width was not required, was not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 681-686; Dec. Dig. ☞ 262.]

42. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ☞208 — CLASS LEGISLATION—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1249, providing that for the purpose of ascertaining compensation for land sought to be taken the right to take should be deemed to accrue at the commencement of the proceeding, provided that if the issue was not tried within one year, unless the delay was caused by defendant, the compensation should be deemed to have accrued at the trial, but that nothing in the section should be construed to affect pending litigation, is not objectionable as class legislation for the fact that cases were pending at the time of the enactment of the section, concerning which rights may have accrued or negotiations have been in progress, sufficiently distinguishes such cases as a separate class, entitled to different provisions from those prevailing in actions to be taken thereafter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 649-677; Dec. Dig. ☞ 208.]

43. EMINENT DOMAIN ☞262 — QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—PRESUMPTIONS.

In the absence of anything to show whether a delay in the trial of a proceeding to condemn land was caused by the owner, the presumption that the delay was caused by him prevails, so that the court, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1249, properly charged that in determining the compensation the jury must consider the value of the land as of the date of the commencement of the proceeding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 681-686; Dec. Dig. ☞ 262.]

44. EMINENT DOMAIN ☞317 — ACQUISITION OF LAND—EASEMENTS—TITLE—"PERMANENT BUILDINGS."

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1239, providing that a fee may be taken when land is condemned for a public use, requiring the erection of "permanent buildings" thereon, a railroad company may acquire the fee to land to be used for a storehouse, blacksmith shop, machine shop, wharves, offices, and other purposes requiring the construction of substantial buildings, for the structures are "permanent buildings."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 834-840; Dec. Dig. ☞ 317.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; N. A. Hawkins, Judge.

Action by the Vallejo & Northern Railroad Company against the Reed Orchard Company, to condemn property of defendant, in which S. Komano, lessee, and the People's Savings Bank, a mortgagee, were made defendants. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendants separately appeal. Affirmed.

Arthur C. Huston, of Woodland, and White, Miller & McLaughlin and White, Miller, Needham & Harber, all of Sacramento, for appellants. T. T. C. Gregory, of San Francisco, Elmer W. Armfield, of Woodland, and John S. Partridge and C. J. Goodell, both of San Francisco (Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro and Heller, Powers & Ehrman, all of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an action to condemn for public use certain real property belonging to the Reed Orchard Company. S. Komano, a lessee of parts of the land, and People's Savings Bank, a mortgagee, were made defendants and suffered default. Reed Orchard Company answered the complaint, there was a trial by the court and jury, resulting in a general verdict and also a special verdict upon a part of the issues and findings by the court, and thereupon divers judgment and orders were entered. The verdict was rendered on March 22, 1912. The record shows that on the following day, March 23d, a judgment was entered by the clerk, reciting the verdicts in full and adjudging that the plaintiff do have judgment, condemning, for the uses of said plaintiff as specified in the complaint, a certain parcel of land described, and that the defendants recover of the plaintiff the sum of $104,100, being the value of the parcel of land as fixed by the verdict, together with costs. From this judgment the defendants separately appeal, each of said appeals being taken by a notice filed less than 60 days after the entry of said judgment. After the trial, the court proceeded to make elaborate findings, embracing the verdicts of the jury and many other facts in issue. These findings were filed on April 18, 1912, and thereupon, on the same day, there was entered an order entitled "Preliminary Order and Judgment of Condemnation," signed by the judge. This order declared that there were condemned for plaintiff a number of parcels of the property, embracing all the land sought to be condemned, describing them, each to be used for a specified purpose, and, further, that, upon the payment or deposit in court by plaintiff of $104,100 for the defendants, the plaintiff would be entitled to a final order and judgment of condemnation. From this order the said defendants also appeal. On April 29, 1912, a final order of condemnation was filed and entered. This order recited that the plaintiff had, on April 18, 1912, paid into court for the defendants the said sum of $104,100, together with the costs as taxed, and further alleged that the parcels of property, describing them, be condemned for plaintiff for certain specified purposes. From this order the said defendants each appeal.

[1, 2] 1. Before considering the points presented, it is important to note that since this case was submitted to this court the people have adopted an amendment of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, whereby that section is made applicable in civil as well as criminal cases. It now reads as follows:

"No judgment shall be set aside, or new trial granted in any case on the ground of misdirection of the jury or of the improper admission or rejection of evidence, or for any error as to any matter of procedure, unless, after an examination of the entire cause including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice."

It has always been the desire and policy of this court to disregard unimportant and unsubstantial errors appearing in the record, and to reverse causes only for reasons affecting the merits of the case and the substantial rights of the parties. Our power to do this has hitherto been somewhat limited by the limitations upon our jurisdiction to consider the evidence. San Jose Ranch Co. v. San Jose, etc., Co., 126 Cal. 324, 58 Pac. 824. An important result of the aforesaid amendment is that it enlarges our jurisdiction in that particular. Prior to its adoption, if the evidence was in substantial conflict as to a fact in issue, we were concluded by the decision of the trial court thereon for all purposes of the case, unless the error entered into and affected the consideration of that evidence. Under the above section, we have the power to review conflicting evidence for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not an error "has resulted in a miscarriage of justice." It is indeed made our duty to do so, and the further duty is imposed to disregard a manifest error when, upon such examination, we shall not "be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice." It is no longer the case that injury is presumed from error; the injury must appear affirmatively to the mind of the court after the examination required, or from the nature of the error itself. People v. O'Bryan, 165 Cal. 66, 130 Pac. 1042. This amended section is now in force and binding upon the Courts of Appeal. And as it affects the remedy only, it applies to pending appeals, although they may have been submitted prior to its adoption. A party has no contractual or vested right to have a judgment reversed because of an error which the court cannot say has produced what that section describes as a "miscarriage of justice." People v. Campbell, 59 Cal. 245, 43 Am. Rep. 257; Kerckhoff, etc., Co. v. Olmstead, 85 Cal. 85, 24 Pac. 648. Doubtless the people could, by constitutional amendment, abolish the right of appeal and require the dismissal of appeals remaining undetermined. Just what may be included in the phrase, "miscarriage of justice," must remain to be decided in each case as it is presented. No precise definition can be given to it.

[3, 4] It is also necessary, in the same connection, to determine a question relating to the right to a jury trial in condemnation suits and the procedure followed in this case.

Section 14, article 1, of the Constitution provides that in condemnation cases compensation to the owner shall be ascertained by a jury unless a jury trial is waived. So far as that issue is concerned, therefore, the defendants had an absolute right to a jury trial. But the section says nothing concerning the mode of determining the other facts necessary to establish the right of the plaintiff to take the property in question. In effect, it leaves the Legislature free to provide the method of trial of all questions except that of compensation. The legislative provision on the subject is found in section 592 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In Wilmington v. Dominguez, 50 Cal. 505, the court decided that the owner, under this section, as it then stood, was entitled to a jury trial of all the issues in a condemnation suit. At the time of the trial in that case, section 592, on this subject read thus:

"An issue of fact must be tried by a jury, unless a jury trial is waived, or a reference be ordered, as provided in this Code."

The court held that this provision governed the case, and that the trial court could not disregard the verdict of a jury and make findings of fact contrary thereto upon the question of the necessity of the taking. This case was followed in Cummings v. Peters, 56 Cal. 597, without discussion. The record in the latter case does not show when the trial took place. In 1874, section 592 was amended to its present form, which is as follows:

"In actions for the recovery of specific, real, or personal property, with or without damages, or for money claimed as due upon contract, or as damages for breach of contract, or for injuries, an issue of fact must be tried by a jury, unless a jury trial is waived or a reference is ordered, as provided in this Code. Where in these cases there are issues both of law and fact, the issue of law must be first disposed of. In other cases, issues of fact must be tried by the court, subject to its power to order any such issue to be tried by a jury, or to be referred to a referee, as provided in this Code."

It is evident that this amendment made a radical change regarding the right to a jury trial. Under its provisions, in all actions except those enumerated in the opening clause, the issues of fact are to be tried by the court. The language is too clear on this point to require interpretation or to permit construction. The amendment was evidently framed with a view of adopting the principle decided in Koppikus v. State, 16 Cal. 248, that is, that the constitutional guaranty of the right to jury trial, in section 7 of article 1, applies only to common-law actions, and that it does not confer such right with respect to any action as to which it did not previously exist. Accordingly it has always been held that this guaranty does not secure the right in special proceedings. Dorsey v. Barry, 24 Cal. 453; Heyneman v. Blake, 19 Cal. 596. The Koppikus Case and many others hold that the verdict of a jury, in a case where a jury trial is not a matter of right, is advisory to the court, and that findings by the court are necessary to complete the record. Warring v. Freear, 64 Cal. 55, 28 Pac. 115; McLaughlin v. Del Re, 64 Cal. 473, 2 Pac. 244; Curnow v. Blue Gravel, etc., Co., 68 Cal. 264, 9 Pac. 149; Santa Cruz, etc., Co. v. Bowie, 104 Cal. 288, 37 Pac. 934; McCarthy v. Gaston, 144 Cal. 546, 78 Pac. 7.

[5] A condemnation suit is a special proceeding. It is not included in the classes mentioned in section 592, in which a jury trial is required. That section is expressly made applicable to condemnation suits. Code Civ. Proc. § 1256. It follows that, except those relating to compensation, the issues of fact in a condemnation suit are to be tried by the court, and that if the court submits them to a jury, it is nevertheless required to make findings either by adopting the verdict thereon or by making findings in its own language.

Subsequent decisions recognize the fact that the aforesaid amendment changed the effect of the section as applied to condemnation suits, so that a jury trial is imperative, if not waived, only with respect to the issue of compensation. Thus, in Cal. S. R. R. Co. v. S. P. R. R. Co., 67 Cal. 62, 7 Pac. 123, 125, which appears to have been a closely contested case, the court says:

"So far as the assessment of the value of the property to be taken is concerned (while perhaps a new trial of the question of value may be allowed by the court) the verdict of the jury is conclusive. Const. art. 1, § 14. As to other issues of fact made by the pleadings, the court is authorized by the Code of Civil Procedure to submit them to a jury."

In Weber v. Santa Clara, 59 Cal. 266, the court says:

"The owner of the property is entitled to a jury trial for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of damages which he will sustain by the appropriation of his property to public use" (citing section 14, article 1, aforesaid).

The context shows that the court was referring only to the issue of compensation. In other jurisdictions having substantially identical constitutional and statutory provisions on the subject, it has been held that all the issues, except that of compensation, must be determined by the court. Bigelow v. Draper, 6 N. D. 166, 69 N. W. 570; In re Bradley, 108 Iowa, 478, 79 N. W. 280.

The decision in Santa Ana v. Gildmacher, 133 Cal. 395, 65 Pac. 883, might seem contrary to these views, but an examination of the opinion shows that the point upon which our conclusion rests was neither discussed nor decided in the case. The opinion merely applies the familiar rule that a direction to the jury to render a verdict on a question of fact submitted to it, where there was substantial evidence to justify a contrary decision thereon, is an invasion of the province of the jury and contrary to the constitutional provision that judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact. The judgment was reversed for that reason alone. The action was a suit in condemnation, but the point that the court was not required to follow the decision of the jury on the issue of necessity, nor to submit that issue to the jury at all, was not mentioned, nor was section 592 referred to. We are unwilling to believe that the court would have gone so far as to disregard its plain language if that section had been called to its attention. The case cannot be regarded as a decision that the owner is entitled as of right to a jury trial upon all the issues that may be presented in an action of condemnation. It does not purport to decide that question. If it so held we should feel obliged to overrule the decision as contrary to the statutory law on the subject.

[6] As a result of these propositions the conclusion follows that error in instructions, in a condemnation suit, upon other issues than that of compensation, and upon which the court has itself weighed the evidence and made findings, would not justify a reversal, unless upon the whole case, including the evidence, we find that it has caused substantial injury, or a miscarriage of justice.

In the present case, while the court submitted most of the questions in issue to the jury, it did not consider itself bound thereby, with respect to other propositions than that of value, but proceeded thereafter to make its own findings and conclusions of law, covering many facts not expressly included in the special verdict. These were filed on April 18th, as above stated, and judgment was accordingly entered thereon.

[7] The Code requires, in a case of land taken for a railroad, that the jury, or the court, shall find the cost of fences along the line of the road and of cattle guards where fences cross the line. This is necessary, in order to adjust the amount of compensation the owner may receive. Code Civ. Proc. § 1248. The interrogatories submitted to the jury did not include these questions, and there is no finding by the jury on those points. The court made a finding that no fences or cattle guards were necessary. This completed the findings required in order to lay the foundation for the preliminary judgment.

[8] We regard the judgment entered by the clerk on March 23, 1912, as premature and without authority or effect, for, upon the facts stated, the trial was not then concluded. Probably it would have become effective if the court below had adopted and ratified it and the regularity of the proceedings was not attacked by an appeal. But it is evident that the court below did not regard it as effective, for it held the case under advisement for several weeks and then, as above stated, made full findings upon the evidence and gave its own judgment thereon. We must therefore presume that the court itself weighed the evidence and determined all questions of fact, except that of compensation.

A large number of the rulings of the court are assigned as error. We will take them up, as nearly as possible, in the order in which they occur in appellants' briefs.

2. We first take up the rulings made during the selection of the jury.

[9] Upon the examination of the jurors on their voir dire, the juror Cook admitted that the fact of his employment by another railroad company might influence his verdict. This being the case, he was properly excused on the challenge of the plaintiff. The fact that he contradicted this in other parts of his examination does not affect the question, so far as the action of this court on appeal is concerned.

[10] It was within the discretion of the court to permit the plaintiff to exercise its remaining peremptory challenge after the panel was filled and all the jurors had been examined and passed for cause by both parties. Silcox v. Lang, 78 Cal. 123, 20 Pac. 297. Vance v. Richardson, 110 Cal. 416, 42 Pac. 909, decides nothing contrary to this. Of course, the discretion might, in some cases, be abused, but there is no showing of any abuse here.

[11] The juror Roth was asked how, in the absence of evidence on the subject, he would determine how much the plaintiff could afford to pay for the land to be taken. This question was properly excluded. The jury were to consider and determine the value of the land. The ability of the plaintiff to pay such value was wholly irrelevant to that issue.

[12] 3. The answer alleged that the plaintiff did not intend to construct the proposed railroad, or any railroad whatever, and that it had begun the action for the purpose of acquiring the defendant's land, and not for any public use whatever, nor in good faith. In the opening statement plaintiff's attorney referred to divers previous occurrences tending to show that the plaintiff had encountered opposition and difficulty in building its line to this land, but that it had persisted in its purpose nevertheless. The difficulties and opposition referred to might also, in some degree, have tended to excite sympathy for the plaintiff and animosity toward the opposition. The defendants' objection to the statements was overruled. They assign the ruling as error and the statements as misconduct of the prevailing party. The facts referred to were proper for the purpose of showing that the plaintiff in good faith intended to build the proposed railroad over the lands sought to be taken. The circumstance that it might also produce other collateral consequences harmful to the defendants did not make the statements misconduct or the ruling erroneous, at all events, not unless the statements were made in bad faith for the purpose of improperly influencing the court or jury against the defendants. Bad faith was not shown.

[13, 14] 4. The defendants objected to the introduction of the articles of incorporation of the plaintiff, on the ground that the name of the plaintiff so closely resembled that of a pre-existing corporation, that it would tend to deceive, and that, therefore, under section 296 of the Civil Code, the Secretary of State should have refused to file said articles. The court was correct in overruling the objection. Whether or not the state of California could, in a proper action, dissolve the corporation or compel it to change its name, on the ground of the misleading character of its name, we need not determine. The evidence showed that the Secretary of State had issued the certificate of incorporation. It also appears that thereupon and thereafter the plaintiff company claimed, in good faith, to be a legally organized corporation under the law, and was doing business as such under said corporate name. These facts were not disputed. Under these circumstances the plaintiff must be deemed to be, at least, a de facto corporation claiming to be a de jure corporation. Section 358 of the Civil Code provides that:

"The due incorporation of any company claiming in good faith to be a corporation under this part, and doing business as such, or its right to exercise corporate powers, shall not be inquired into collaterally in any private suit to which such de facto corporation may be a party; but such inquiry may be had at the suit of the state on information of the Attorney General."

It follows that the defendant had no authority to interpose this objection to plaintiff's corporate existence. The state alone could do so. Lakeside Ditch Co. v. Crane, 80 Cal. 186, 22 Pac. 76; Martin v. Deetz, 102 Cal. 66, 36 Pac. 368, 41 Am. St. Rep. 151; Oroville, etc., Co. v. Plumas Co., 37 Cal. 361; Mokelumne, etc., Co. v. Woodbury, 14 Cal. 426, 73 Am. Dec. 658; Los Angeles v. Spires, 126 Cal. 544, 58 Pac. 1049; San Diego Gas Co. v. Frame, 137 Cal. 443, 70 Pac. 295. There are many other similar cases. The case of Wall v. Mines, 130 Cal. 27, 62 Pac. 386, is not in conflict with these decisions. There the company had no de facto existence, that is, it was not "doing business as such," or "claiming in good faith to be a corporation under this part," and therefore it did not come within the conditions prescribed in section 358, aforesaid. Here these conditions do exist, and the section controls.

[15] 5. Over the objection of the defendants a number of instruments and deeds were admitted purporting to convey to the plaintiff the railroad, of which the line over the condemned land was to be a part and other property connected therewith, and to grant franchises to the plaintiff over other parts of its line. There was also admitted the plans and specifications adopted by the plaintiff for work to be done along the line of the railroad and at the terminals thereof and judgments condemning other property along the line for the use of plaintiff in building and operating said railroad. The defendants had denied the corporate existence of the plaintiff. This evidence tended at least to show that the plaintiff was a corporation de facto. The mere fact that the plaintiff had introduced its articles of incorporation, as aforesaid, and that they were sufficient prima facie to show its legal corporate existence, would not justify us in holding that the court erred in admitting other evidence tending to show the de facto existence of the corporation. Such proof, for reasons above stated, was necessary.

[16] The evidence also tended to show that the plaintiff had planned a railroad system, including a line from Vallejo to Sacramento, that the proposed route over defendant's land was a part of the Sacramento line, and that in pursuance of the plan it had constructed other parts of the line and obtained franchises and rights of way therefor, and that it was endeavoring to complete the same. These facts were relevant to the question of the good faith of the plaintiff in proposing to build its road on the land sought to be acquired. This issue was presented by the answer of the defendants, as above stated, and the record shows that the case was tried upon the theory that the question was in issue. We think that it was competent for the defendants, if they were able to do so, to show as a defense that the plaintiff did not really intend to build the proposed road, but were merely proposing to do so as a means whereby to acquire the land through a condemnation suit. Land can only be taken for a public use and if, in fact, the plaintiff claiming a right to condemn land for a public use really intends to devote it to a private use, this, if proven, would be sufficient to defeat the action. Beveridge v. Lewis, 137 Cal. 621, 67 Pac. 1040, 70 Pac. 1083, 59 L. R. A. 581, 92 Am. St. Rep. 188. Having presented the issue, the defendants cannot be allowed to predicate error upon the admission of evidence to disprove it.

[17] The evidence was also proper to be considered upon the sharply contested question as to the necessity for the taking of the land in controversy. The question whether all of it was necessary depended very much upon the length and character of plaintiff's road and its probable future business. The evidence objected to had some bearing upon these questions. The fact that it may have tended to prove the issue only in a remote degree does not make it inadmissible.

[18, 19] The same reasons apply to the ruling of the court allowing the president of the plaintiff to testify describing his efforts to overcome the obstacles thrown in the way of the building of the road by other corporations and persons, and in defeating the opposition to the enterprise. It all tended to show that the plaintiff had been and was diligently endeavoring to build the portions of the plaintiff's road leading up to the boundaries of the land in question, and it had a direct bearing on the contention that the plaintiff was seeking to acquire the land for other purposes than a railroad.

It may be as claimed, that some of this evidence would tend to create or arouse prejudice against the defendants in favor of the plaintiff by creating a suspicion that other railroad corporations were instigating the defense or obstructing the building of the proposed railroad. But it is a well-established rule that if evidence is properly admissible upon the issues presented, it cannot be excluded because it may have ulterior or collateral effects detrimental to one of the parties. It is also very apparent that much time was consumed by counsel, both in examination in chief and on cross-examination of the respective witnesses, in inquiries concerning minute details of these various transactions and matters, and that because so much time was devoted to this subject, the opposition of other corporations was greatly emphasized. We cannot say, however, that plaintiff's counsel were greater sinners in this respect than those of the defendants. In any event, it does not constitute misconduct sufficient to call for a reversal of the judgment. In view of the persistent and very numerous objections made by defendants' counsel at every stage of plaintiff's case, we cannot say that the plaintiff's counsel transgressed the bounds of propriety in making the proof so full and elaborate.

[20, 21] 6. It is earnestly contended that the plaintiff failed to show any right to condemn any part of the land to be used as freight wharves and sheds. The plaintiff's articles of incorporation enumerated, among its powers, the power to build and operate the railroad in question, and for that purpose to acquire, own, construct, and use all necessary wharves, docks, and chutes and the land required therefor. The proposed line of railroad was 62 miles long, extending from Vallejo in Solano county to and into the city of Sacramento. It was to have four branches, one from the town of Fairfield to Suisun, 2 miles long, one from the town of Cement to Woodland, 35 miles long, one from Davisville to Woodland, 17 miles long, and one to the town of Dixon, 3 miles long. The line crossed the Sacramento river at a point opposite the city of Sacramento and the bridge for that purpose had its west abutment on the land sought to be condemned. The complaint alleged that the land sought to be taken was necessary for the proposed road and, among other things, for freight wharves and sheds to be used for the said railroad purposes. The plat of the land, annexed to the complaint showed that the strip of land abutting on the Sacramento river immediately below the said bridge was to be used for these wharves and sheds. This strip was divided into three parcels by passageways or spaces 100 feet wide extending from the river to the railroad tracks to be laid along and next to the wharves, and the jury, in answer to a special interrogatory, found that it was necessary for the plaintiff to take all of these parcels of land for the said purposes, for the said railroad. The findings of the court are to the same effect. The claim is: First, that the law confers upon a railroad company no right to maintain wharves as a part of the railroad, or for any purpose whatever, or to condemn land for such purposes; and, secondly, that in order to obtain such right, the company must first obtain a wharf franchise, in pursuance of sections 528 to 531, inclusive, of the Civil Code, and section 2921 of the Political Code.

Section 1238 of the Code of Civil Procedure authorizes the condemnation of land for wharves, docks, piers, and chutes (subdivision 4). Section 465 of the Civil Code empowers every railroad company to acquire, "hold and use all such real estate and other property as may be absolutely necessary for the construction and maintenance of such railroads, and for all stations, depots and other purposes necessary to successfully work and conduct the business of the road" (subdivision 3); to construct and maintain such road, "with such appendages and adjuncts as may be necessary for the convenient use of the same" (subdivision 4); "to erect and maintain all necessary and convenient buildings, stations, depots, fixtures and machinery for the accommodation and use of their passengers, freight and business" (subdivision 9); and to acquire by condemnation the lands and other property "to be used in the construction and maintenance of its road, and all necessary appendages and adjuncts" thereto (subdivision 7).

There can be no doubt of the right of the plaintiff to condemn land for freight sheds to be used for the convenient operation of its road in the transportation of freight. Such sheds would be a necessary adjunct to the road in carrying on the business of the transportation of freight thereon. There is no serious contention that this would not be so. We think it is equally obvious that where a railroad, intended for the carriage of freight, extends to a navigable river running through a large area of highly productive land, and upon which river there is a heavy steamboat traffic in carrying such products, as is the case here, wharves for the convenient transfer of freight between the cars upon the railroad tracks and the boats plying upon the river may reasonably be said to be necessary for the convenient operation of such railroad, and a necessary appendage or adjunct thereto. See Central P. R. Co. v. Feldman, 152 Cal. 306, 92 Pac. 849. Land for such purpose is reasonably "necessary to successfully work and conduct the business of the road" within the meaning of section 465, aforesaid, and therefore by that section the railroad company is authorized to maintain such wharves and to acquire by condemnation the land necessary for that purpose.

[22] The next contention is that it must first obtain a wharf franchise and that it has failed to do so. Sections 528 to 531 constitute title 6, part 4, division 1, of the Civil Code. The Code distinguishes this title by the subtitle "Bridge, Ferry, Wharf, Chute, and Pier Corporations." Section 528 declares that:

"No corporation must construct, or take tolls on, a bridge, ferry, wharf, * * * chute, or pier until authority is granted therefor by the supervisors, or other governing body having authority in that behalf."

Section 529 declares that "every such corporation ceases to be a body corporate" if, within six months from filing its articles of incorporation, it does not obtain such authority from the proper governing body, or if, within one year thereafter, it has not commenced the construction of the bridge, wharf, chute, or pier, and expended thereon 10 per cent. of the amount of its capital stock, or if, within three years from filing its articles, the said proposed structure is not completed. Section 530 provides that the "president and secretary of every bridge, ferry, wharf, chute, or pier corporation" must annually make a report to the supervisors or other governing body which granted its franchise, showing the cost of construction, the moneys expended since construction, the capital stock paid in, the yearly receipts, the dividends declared, the indebtedness incurred, and such other facts as may be required by such body. Section 531 provides that if such bridge, ferry, wharf, chute, or pier is built, operated, or owned by a natural person the provisions of the title are applicable to such person. These provisions are to be construed in connection with title 3, which relates exclusively to railroad corporations, and in which section 465 is found, and also in connection with the Code titles relating to other classes of corporations, and all are to be construed in such a manner as to make them harmonious if such construction is reasonably apparent. The terms of the provisions of title 6 show that this title, so far as it applies to corporations, was intended to apply only to corporations formed for the purpose of carrying on the business of conducting a public bridge, ferry, wharf, chute, or pier, and that they were not intended to have any application to corporations formed under title 3 for the purpose of constructing and operating a railroad. The language throughout is entirely consistent with the subtitle, indicating its exclusive application to corporations for the particular purposes named, and is inconsistent with any other interpretation. It cannot reasonably be supposed that the Legislature intended, with respect to railroad companies, that they should, within six months after filing their articles of incorporation, obtain wharf franchises from the proper governing authority in control of every navigable river over which the railroad should pass and of every terminal at tide water, and cease to be corporations if they failed to do so. To require this as a condition of its corporate existence would be, in practical operation, to prevent the carrying on of any railroad enterprise. This is a strong indication that no such intent was contemplated by the title referred to. This construction is further indicated, and indeed rendered almost imperative, by a consideration of the other titles included in part 4. Title 1 contains general provisions only. Then follow titles numbered from 2 to 22 consecutively, besides two titles interpolated subsequent to the original enactment. Each of these titles relates to particular classes of corporations exclusively. Thus title 2 relates to insurance corporations, title 3 to railroad corporations, title 4 to street railroad corporations, title 5 to wagon road corporations, title 6 to bridge, ferry, wharf, chute, and pier corporations, title 7 to telegraph and telephone corporations, title 8 to water and canal corporations, and so on through the list. From this it is quite clear that title 6 applies only to corporations organized for one or more of the purposes indicated in its subtitle, that they are entirely distinct from the railroad corporations organized under title 3, and therefore that the restrictions and provisions of title 6 have no application to railroad corporations organized and operating under title 3.

[23] Section 2921 of the Political Code provides that boards of supervisors "may grant to any railroad corporation authority to construct a wharf, or pier on or in front of any lands owned by it" bordering on navigable water, with a license to take tolls for the use of the same. It is clear from this language that the purpose of the section was to give authority to the board of supervisors to grant franchises for public wharves to be used by the public generally in consideration of tolls to be exacted therefor. This is not only indicated by the language, but it is further emphasized by the subsequent provision that the board may do so when it finds the use of such wharf or pier necessary to the exercise of the franchise of the railroad corporation for terminal purposes. There is nothing in the language of the section which purports to prohibit a railroad company from constructing and operating wharves for its own business, without authority from the board, at places where the railroad extends to navigable water and where it finds such wharves necessary for the successful operation of its road. It is clear, we think, that the section was intended to give the board of supervisors discretion to grant an additional franchise to such railroad, enabling it to carry on a public wharf and charge tolls thereon, where the board finds that such public wharf is necessary to the railroad franchise, and that it was not intended to forbid the railroad from maintaining a wharf for its own purposes without the additional authority to be granted under this section by the board of supervisors.

[24] The additional claim is made that the use of the land along the river front by the plaintiff for wharves as an adjunct to its railroad is forbidden by the clause of section 2, article 15, of the Constitution, declaring that no corporation claiming or possessing the frontage of navigable water "shall be permitted to exclude the right of way to such water whenever it is required for any public purpose." The land taken for wharves did not belong to the state, but to the defendants. The wharves were to be used for a public purpose, else the suit to condemn it would not lie. Such wharves would not exclude the right of way for a public purpose, because their use as such would constitute one of the public purposes which the constitutional provision was designed to protect. If a more necessary public purpose should arise for the land, it could be taken from the plaintiff therefor. Code Civ. Proc. § 1241. This sufficiently answers the argument.

[25] 7. In immediate connection with this question of wharves it is proper to consider an exception to one of the instructions. The articles of incorporation of the plaintiff confer upon it, among other things, power to own and operate steamers if necessary, proper, or convenient for the convenient use, accommodation, maintenance, and operation of its railroad. Its right to exercise this power could not be questioned here. Civ. Code, § 358. The court instructed the jury that a railroad company had a right to own and hold steamers and run them in connection with its railroad and condemn land necessary for the accommodation of steamers owned by itself or other persons for the delivery of freight and passengers to and from the railroad.

As an abstract proposition there may be some doubt of the power of a corporation organized solely for railroad purposes to own and run steamers. The instruction, for this reason, may have been too broad (Vandall v. South S. F. Co., 40 Cal. 88), but in view of the express power given by the articles, as above mentioned, it could not have been prejudicial in the present case; for the articles gave plaintiff that power. It was proper to take into consideration the probable needs of the plaintiff to have wharves for the passage of freight and passengers to and from its cars and steamers upon the river, in determining the area necessary for such wharves.

[26] 8. Other instructions directed the jury that they could allow such quantity of land for wharves as they should believe reasonably necessary to accommodate the future business of the road in delivering and receiving freight to and from its cars to such steamers as they believed would probably be plying upon the river. These instructions were also objected to, and a like objection was made to all evidence as to the probability of business from that source. We think the instructions were properly given and the evidence properly admitted. The objection is based upon the proposition that there is no allegation in the complaint that the land, or any part of it, was needed for the use of steamers or steamer lines. Such specific allegation was not necessary. There was a general allegation that the land to be taken was all necessary for the proposed railroad, and there were specific allegations that certain parts of the tract were necessary for certain specified uses pertaining, respectively, to the construction or operation of the road, including freight wharves and sheds. This, of course, referred to the needs of the plaintiff's railroad, and not to the needs of any connecting railroad or of any steamers delivering or receiving freight to or from its cars. It was appropriate for the plaintiff to procure and maintain all facilities necessary for the accommodation of its customers, whether those customers were freight producers or public carriers. In support of its averments the plaintiff might show that steamers were, or probably would be, plying upon the river, that they would wish to receive freight from plaintiff's cars, or deliver freight to them, and that it would be reasonably necessary for the conduct of said railroad business that the plaintiff should have sufficient wharves whereon to place such goods temporarily in the course of such delivery, and by means of which to pass them to and from the cars and steamers, respectively. We find no error in these rulings.

[27] 9. On the question of the necessity of the taking, evidence was also admissible of the nature of the country through which the road would pass and of the territory which would probably contribute freight and passengers to the road for carriage, of the amount and character of the products which such territory would probably yield at the present time and in its probable future growth and development, and of the volume of passenger traffic probable from such territory, and, generally, of all other facts that would tend to show the amount of traffic to be handled by the plaintiff's railroad within a reasonable time in the future. The plaintiff has undertaken to serve the general public as a carrier of freight and passengers over its lines. It is entitled to take the necessary land to enable it to perform its full duty in that regard, both at the present time and in the future, so far as the present and future demands upon its facilities can be determined with reasonable probability. It was largely a matter within the discretion of the trial court how far the plaintiff should be allowed to go into minute details on this subject. We perceive no abuse of discretion in its action.

These propositions cover many objections to the admission of evidence. They include the evidence of the probable production of factories and quarries, arrangements with connecting roads for freight and passenger traffic, the feasibility of reclaiming swamp and overflowed lands and thereby increasing their production, the probability of such reclamation, with the means whereby it could be accomplished and the measures taken by others for that purpose, the needs from probable traffic to and from the city of Sacramento over plaintiff's wharves and its cars, the area required for yardage, and comparisons with the yards of other similar railroad systems in actual operation, accompanied with proper explanations of the differences between the two systems, and also of the uses to be made of the spaces or passageways aforesaid between the wharves. There may be other details to which objection was made which come within the same rule which have escaped our notice because of the large number of such objections. We need not enumerate them.

[28] 10. On defendants' cross-examination of Mr. Gregory, president of the plaintiff, he had testified, in effect, that the Sacramento & Woodland Railroad Company had projected a line of railroad from Woodland to Sacramento, connecting with plaintiff's road near the bridge of the plaintiff on the land in controversy, and that plaintiff proposed to receive the cars of said company at this said connection and run them from thence to the city of Sacramento and other places over plaintiff's line. Defendants endeavored to have him testify that a part of the land to be taken was to be used by said company as its own property and for the construction and operation of its own road instead of the plaintiff's road, but he insisted that this was not true. In view of this cross-examination, it was proper to permit him, on re-direct examination, to explain that the Woodland Company was then constructing its line, and to show that the plaintiff's road would obtain business from the Sacramento and Woodland Railroad when it was completed.

[29, 30] 11. Mr. Dozier, a witness for plaintiff, testified at great length, the record thereof covering 254 typewritten pages. His testimony showed that he was a civil engineer by education and occupation; that he had had some 10 years' experience in the laying out, construction, and operation of interurban railroads in California, that he was familiar with the effect of such roads in building up and developing a new region and increasing the traffic therein and in drawing freight and passenger business from established lines of steam railroads; also that he had traveled over a great part of the counties through which plaintiff's road ran, and had made investigations as to the products and capabilities of production of said territory and the probability of shipments therefrom. A report of the State Agricultural Society purporting to show the amount, in tons, pounds, or measures, of the products of those counties was introduced in connection with his testimony. He was then asked to state his opinion as to the proportion of these products that would probably be shipped over the plaintiff's road when constructed. The court, over the objection of defendants, allowed him to answer. We think his opinion was admissible. The effect of electric roads in the settlement and development of the country they penetrate and in obtaining traffic previously going to other railroads is not a matter of common knowledge. The subject is comparatively new, and the mass of the people have had no occasion to inquire concerning it or become familiar with it. The operation of railroads is a business of itself, and its effects are not well known, except by those who have actual experience and have studied the subject in connection therewith. Especially is this true with respect to inter-urban railroads which are the result of recent inventions. It may well be termed a "trade" within the meaning of subdivision 9 of section 1870 of the Code of Civil Procedure, allowing opinion evidence.

"Witnesses who are skilled in any science, art, trade or occupation, may not only testify to facts, but are sometimes permitted to give their opinions as experts. This is permitted because such witnesses are supposed, from their experience and study, to have peculiar knowledge upon the subject of inquiry which jurors generally have not. * * * To warrant its introduction, the subject of the inquiry must be one relating to some trade, profession, science, or art in which persons instructed therein, by study or experience, may be supposed to have more skill and knowledge than jurors of average intelligence may be presumed generally to have." Ferguson v. Hubbell, 97 N. Y. 513, 49 Am. Rep. 544; Young v. Johnson, 123 N. Y. 233, 25 N. E. 363; Excelsior, etc., Co. v. Sweet, 57 N. J. Law, 231, 30 Atl. 553. "When this experience is of such a nature that it may be presumed to be within the common experience of all men of common education, moving in the ordinary walks of life, there is no room for the evidence of opinion; it is for the jury to draw the inference. * * * It is not because a man has a reputation for superior sagacity and judgment, and power of reasoning, that his opinion is admissible. * * * It is because a man's professional pursuit, his peculiar skill and knowledge in some department of science, not common to men in general, enable him to draw an inference, where men of common experience, after all the facts proved, would be left in doubt." New England Glass Co. v. Lovell, 61 Mass. (7 Cush.) 321. See, also, Ellis v. Tone, 58 Cal. 302; Judson v. Giant Powder Co., 107 Cal. 561, 40 Pac. 1020, 29 L. R. A. 718, 48 Am. St. Rep. 146; Greenleaf v. Stockton, etc., Works, 78 Cal. 610, 21 Pac. 369; Howland v. Oakland, etc., Co., 110 Cal. 521, 42 Pac. 983; Barnum v. Bridges, 81 Cal. 607, 22 Pac. 924; Chico Bridge Co. v. Sacramento, etc., Co., 123 Cal. 184, 55 Pac. 780.

The jurors in the present case could have little or no knowledge on this subject. The amount of such business had a direct bearing on the question of the necessity of taking the whole of the land, a proposition which the defendants stubbornly contested, and without aid from those conversant with such matters the court and jury would have been left almost entirely to conjecture. The testimony was properly admitted.

[31] The State Agricultural Society is a state institution and among its duties prescribed by law is that of collecting information and statistics relating to the agricultural resources and material interests of the state and making a report of the same to the Governor. Stats. 1880, 49; Pol. Code, §§ 332, 705, 2326; Stats. 1863, 49; Stats. 1871-72, 442. When so ordered by the state board of examiners, this report must be printed as a public document. Pol. Code, § 334. Such report is an official document and is admissible in evidence as such. Code Civ. Proc. § 1918, subd. 6; People v. Hagar, 52 Cal. 186. It constituted legal evidence of the facts therein stated regarding the products of the state and its subdivisions, although, of course, not conclusive thereon. 3 Wigmore on Ev. § 1671, subd. 7; People v. Williams, 64 Cal. 498, 2 Pac. 393; People v. Wang, 92 Cal. 280, 28 Pac. 270. It is not necessary to say whether or not judicial notice would be taken of it, for the portions of the report relied on were formally introduced in evidence.

12. Many expressions have come under our observation in reading over the evidence showing circumstances indicating that the railroad of plaintiff, when completed, was to be operated by electricity. The fact could be shown by circumstantial evidence as well as direct. The objections based on the assertion that there was no evidence of such fact are therefore without foundation, and need not be further considered.

[32] 13. A map prepared by the witness Tibbetts, purporting to show the land below the flood line in the Sacramento valley, was admitted in evidence over the defendants' objection that it was not proven to be correct, or to have been compiled from legal or official sources. Parts of this map had been colored yellow, parts green, and parts red, by the witness. He testified that he was a civil engineer, that he had been many times up and down the Sacramento river, had seen most of the lands contiguous thereto, was familiar with all the reclaimed lands delineated upon the map and with most of those in process of reclamation and susceptible of reclamation as marked thereon, that in a general way he was familiar with the country lying along the Sacramento river, and had been over it many times, that the map on which the colors were displayed was a printed map issued by a firm in San Francisco, and that, aside from the coloring, it was an accurate map of the lands lying along the river so far as he knew; that he had been the engineer for a number of railroad and other corporations, having headquarters in Sacramento for some years; that studies had been in process for a year or more in his office to determine the amount of land reclaimed, being reclaimed, and capable of reclamation, respectively; that the data he had put on the map was based partly on personal observation, partly on data gathered by surveying parties under his immediate direction, and partly on a compilation from various reliable sources; and that he had been over most of the land personally. He then testified that the part in yellow correctly showed the reclaimed land, that not all of it was compiled from his personal observation, but that the part not so prepared was made from the most accurate sources of information he could get, and that he could point out the parts that had come under his personal observation; that all of many reclamation districts and some portions of every district had been seen by him; that he had been over every one of the tracts in green representing the land then being reclaimed, and that they correctly showed such land; that the red parts showed the unreclaimed land subject to overflow; that he had delineated the outline of lands subject to overflow in large part from original surveys, in large part from observation, and the balance from data from the principal reports bearing upon the reclamation in the Sacramento valley. He then stated that from his own observation and surveys he could state that all land marked as susceptible of reclamation, but not reclaimed, except 125,000 acres, was susceptible of reclamation. He was not asked to point out the parts of the reclaimed land that had come under his personal observation. But on cross-examination, it appeared that he had used official governmental reports in compiling the map, and that he was very familiar with the condition of the country shown on the map. Taking his evidence as a whole, we are of the opinion that a sufficient foundation was laid to qualify the witness to state approximately the respective areas of reclaimed and unreclaimed land and for the introduction of the map for the information of the court and jury. The evidence had some bearing upon the question or the future business of the road and the necessity for the proposed taking. It was not a subject upon which accurate and precise information or evidence could easily be produced, and for the purpose of the case an approximate estimate of the respective areas of the different kinds of land was all that the law would require to be shown. It was within the discretion of the court to allow the evidence, although its bearing on the question at issue was somewhat remote.

[33] 14. The witnesses Jubb and Hecke were properly permitted to testify to the approximate quantity of freight handled at Sacramento. They based their estimates on investigations they had made by inquiries of shippers and others engaged in the freighting business, on the testimony of other witnesses in the case, and on the reports of United States engineers appointed to investigate the subject and ascertain the advisability of reclamation works by the federal government. As we will presently show, the question of the qualifications of a witness to testify to his opinion on such subjects is a matter largely within the discretion of the court. The facts shown should not be proven in detail by calling on the producers and shippers engaged in the trade at Sacramento, without prolonging the trial to an unreasonable length. In any event, an approximate estimate was all that could or need have been procured. We think, therefore, that the opinion of these witnesses, after the investigation they had made, was proper evidence of the facts which the court and jury would be called upon to review in determining the question of necessity. Its bearing on the question was remote, but as it had some tendency to show the necessity, it was admissible for that purpose, though of small consequence.

[34] 15. The court did not err in admitting in evidence the report of J. G. White & Co., made to the plaintiff company. The objection appears to be based on the fact that it contained statements of the probable tonnage of freight coming from the counties through which the plaintiff road will run. It appears, however, that it was not offered to show those facts but for a limited purpose. Wallace, the engineer who laid out the plan of tracks and other structures to be placed by plaintiff on the land in controversy for the operation of its road and upon which the plaintiff based its claim to condemn the land, testified to the various uses to which the several tracts comprised in the land were to be put. On cross-examination by defendants, he stated that this report was furnished him by plaintiff to use in fixing the quantity of land necessary for a terminal for the railroad at that place and in laying it out, and that he used the same in estimating the structures and quantity of land that would probably be required, and made his plan accordingly. The general purpose of the cross-examination appeared to be to show that he had made the plans larger than necessary, so as to occupy more ground than the road would use. On redirect examination the report was admitted in evidence in explanation of the witness' previous testimony. It was competent for that purpose, though unimportant in its bearing on the case. It would be incompetent as evidence of the tonnage of freight, but we do not understand that it was offered as evidence of those facts. On the contrary, it was explicitly stated that it was offered only to explain why it was that Wallace had fixed upon the land sought to be condemned as the area of land necessary for the plaintiff's use.

[35-37] 16. A number of persons called as witnesses for plaintiff were allowed to give opinions as to the value of the property, after an examination to disclose their qualifications to give such opinion. To this ruling defendants excepted. One Johnson was called as a witness for the defendants on the same subject. He was examined concerning his qualifications, and the court thereupon refused to allow him to give his opinion. To this ruling also defendants excepted. It is claimed that his testimony as to his qualifications was not materially different from those of the aforesaid witnesses for the plaintiff, and that one or the other of the rulings must necessarily be erroneous.

The question whether or not a witness is qualified to give his opinion, as evidence upon a matter in issue, is submitted to the trial judge in the first instance, and is to be determined by him before such opinion may be given. Fairbank v. Hughson, 58 Cal. 314. It is, in itself, in the nature of a trial of a question of fact, by evidence addressed to the judge alone, and, as in other decisions on questions of fact by a trial court, his ruling thereon is a matter of discretion, and will not be overturned on appeal unless there was an actual want of evidence to support it or a clear abuse of discretion in ruling upon the evidence given on the subject. Howland v. Oakland, etc., Co., supra, 110 Cal. 521, 42 Pac. 983; Mabry v. Randolph, 7 Cal. App. 427, 94 Pac. 403. If there is any substantial evidence to sustain the ruling, the exception thereto will be disallowed. Conness v. Commonwealth, 184 Mass. 544, 69 N. E. 341; Klous v. Commonwealth, 188 Mass. 152, 74 N. E. 330; Omaha, etc., Co. v. Douglas County, 62 Neb. 7, 86 N. E. 936; 1 Wigmore on Ev. § 560; 1 Gr. on Ev. (16th Ed.) § 430f; 2 Elliott on Ev. §§ 1036, 1037; 17 Cyc. 31. The witness Johnson had less knowledge of values than the witnesses testifying for the plaintiff. He had no actual knowledge of any sales of land on the Yolo side of the Sacramento river. Until two years before the trial he had lived on a ranch five miles north of Sacramento. He had never been on the land except during a flood a few months before the trial. At most he had only such general knowledge of the subject as any ordinary citizen of Sacramento might have. It may be admitted that if the court had decided the other way the decision would, in like manner, be sustained, but we must sustain the decision unless an abuse of discretion appears, and we cannot say that it is here shown. It does not appear that qualified witnesses on the subject were at all difficult to obtain. Before this witness was called the defendants had already called seven witnesses who had testified on the subject of value. Hence, even if the ruling had been clearly erroneous, we cannot say that it was sufficiently prejudicial to warrant a reversal.

The foregoing comprise a small proportion of the exceptions taken to the rulings during the trial, and mentioned in appellants' briefs. Those not here noticed are either covered by what has been said, or they are so trivial as to require no mention.

[38] 17. Objection is made to an instruction stating that, as the power of eminent domain is necessary for the public good:

"It would be unjust to the public that the plaintiff should be required to pay the owner more than a fair indemnity for the loss he sustains by the appropriation of his property for the general good. On the other hand, the owner being compelled to part with his property, whether he desires to sell or not, the law allows him just compensation therefor."

The criticism of this instruction is that it is argumentative. The proposition stated in the instruction is correct, and we see no objection to the jury being so informed. It was not improper to instruct the jury that they should allow the owner of the land just compensation and that the public interest demanded that he should receive no more. This was the substance of the instruction.

[39] The next objection is to an instruction regarding opinion evidence. It directed the jury to weigh the testimony of witnesses giving opinions as to value—

"by reference to the whole situation of the property and its surroundings, and all the surrounding circumstances, and by applying to it your own experience and knowledge. While you cannot act in any case upon particular facts material to its disposition resting in your private knowledge, but should be governed by the evidence adduced, you may and should judge of the weight and force of the evidence upon your own general knowledge of the subject of the inquiry."

It is argued that this would lead the jury to fix the value of the land by their own knowledge of the subject irrespective of the evidence in the case. The jury were many times instructed that they must determine the facts in the case in accordance with and upon the evidence. The instruction quoted forbids them from acting on particular facts resting in their own knowledge. It is evident from the other instructions referred to that this instruction as a whole could reasonably be understood to mean nothing more than that it was that knowledge and experience which the jurors had in common with men in general that they were to apply in weighing the evidence. This proposition is conceded to be correct.

[40] There was no error in instructing the jury that in determining the questions of necessity they should take into consideration the character of the business proposed to be done by plaintiff's railroad and the manner of doing it and the future needs of the communities which the plaintiff would serve, and that in so doing they could consider the number of persons to be served by the plaintiff and its road. All these things had a direct bearing upon the probable area required by the plaintiff for its terminal at Sacramento.

[41] The appellants complain of certain instructions which, it is contended, directed the jury that, in determining the question of necessity, they should consider that plaintiff was entitled to take a strip 165 feet wide across the land solely for the purpose of placing its main tracks and necessary side tracks thereon, although they should find that the entire width was not required for such tracks, and that for other purposes, the adjuncts and appendages, they could allow the additional land necessary, without requiring plaintiff to use any of the said strip for such other purposes, although they might believe that it could do so without injury to its business. The most that can be said in favor of this objection is that the instructions, considered together, are not entirely clear. One of them expressly declares that the plaintiff is entitled to a 165-foot strip, "if necessary for its right of way." We do not think the instructions need be construed, as the appellant claims and as the court itself, after several weeks of consideration, found that the strip was required for the main line and necessary side tracks, the error, even if the instruction had been clear to the effect asserted, would not justify a reversal of the judgment. The latter proposition applies to other instructions, which we do not expressly mention, on the subject of necessity for the taking. But we are not to be understood to say that they are in fact erroneous. Some of them may be ambiguous, but we do not think they were misleading to the jury.

[42, 43] 18. The action was commenced and the summons issued on May 5, 1910. In this connection the court instructed the jury that in determining the compensation to be given the defendant, they must consider the value of the land as it was at the date of the commencement of the action. This was in exact accordance with the provisions of section 1249 of the Code of Civil Procedure as the section stood at the time the action was begun. It then provided that, for the purpose of asserting the compensation, the right should be deemed to accrue at the date of the summons, and that the actual value of the property at that date should be taken as the measure of compensation. Afterwards, by an amendment taking effect June 9, 1911 (St. 1911, p. 842) the following clause was added to the section:

"Provided, that in any action in which the issue is not tried within one year after the date of commencement of the action, unless the delay is caused by the defendant, the compensation and damages shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the trial. Nothing in this section contained shall be construed or held to affect pending litigation."

If the last sentence of this proviso is to be given effect, the amendment does not apply to the case at bar, inasmuch as it was pending at the time the amendment was enacted. The argument on this point is that the provision is unconstitutional because, if allowed to be effective, it would constitute class legislation; that persons whose property was taken by actions begun before the amendment would have the compensation fixed by the value at the time the action was begun, whereas those whose property was taken by actions begun after the amendment would come under the proviso, if the case was not tried within one year after its commencement. We think this argument is without merit. The fact that cases were pending at the time the amendment was enacted, concerning which rights may have accrued or negotiations may have been in progress, sufficiently distinguishes such cases as a separate class, entitled to different provisions from those prevailing in actions to be begun thereafter. Gridley v. Fellows, 166 Cal. 769, 138 Pac. 355. Furthermore, there is nothing in the record to show whether or not the delay in the trial was caused by the defendant. Since it was incumbent upon the appellant to show error by the record, the presumption must be that the delay was caused by the defendant, and that the action of the court below was proper under the circumstances then appearing, if we concede that the provision is to be taken as valid. If it is invalid, then the entire proviso on that subject must be eliminated and the section would stand as it was before the amendment. In either case, the instruction would be correct.

[44] 19. For the right of way for main tracks and the necessary side tracks and other tracks for chutes, yards and storage purposes, the judgment gives the plaintiff only an easement in the land. For that part of the land to be used for a storehouse, a blacksmith shop, a machine shop, wharves, offices, and other purposes requiring the construction of substantial buildings thereon, a fee-simple estate was condemned. We perceive no error in this. Section 1239 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a fee may be taken when land is condemned for a public use requiring the erection of "permanent buildings" thereon. The structures necessary for the purposes thus designated would be of as permanent a character as buildings for any ordinary use, and we think they are "permanent buildings" within the meaning of that section.

The purported judgment of March 23, 1912, is declared a nullity, but appellants do not recover costs on appeal on account thereof. The judgments of April 18, 1912, and of April 29, 1912, are affirmed.

3. EMINENT DOMAIN $\hookrightarrow$ 195—ACQUISITION OF WATER RIGHTS—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In proceedings to condemn a right to divert water of a stream as against riparian lands of defendant, evidence of defendant's scheme of prospective reclamation and irrigation of its lands and evidence of damage to other lands than those described in the complaint, was inadmissible, where the issue tendered by the complaint involved merely the riparian right of the lands described therein, though defendant could show any damage to other lands by the diversion.

4. EMINENT DOMAIN $\hookrightarrow$ 222—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS—MISLEADING INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in proceedings to condemn right to divert 500 second feet of water of a river as against described riparian lands of defendant, there was evidence that plaintiff had, for many years, been taking and diverting the quantity of water sought to be taken, and had thereby acquired the right to the quantity of water against every one except defendant, an instruction that by diverting a greater quantity of water than 760 cubic feet per second plaintiff could acquire no right against the lands of defendant, but plaintiff could acquire, as against other riparian owners, the rights by prescription to take such excess of water, and if plaintiff acquired the rights of the other riparian owners by prescription, defendant had a right to use the entire flow of the river in excess of the 760 cubic feet per second, without regard to the rights of those riparian owners whose rights had been acquired by prescription, was misleading because capable of being applied to all the water of the stream except the 760 feet, which would imply that if plaintiff acquired a prescriptive right to 500 feet of water as against riparian owners except defendant, the latter had a right to all the balance of the river, without regard to the claim of any other riparian owner, and thereby tending to increase the compensation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Proceeding by the San Joaquin & Kings River Canal & Irrigation Company, to acquire the right to divert water of a river as against riparian lands of James J. Stevinson, a corporation. From a judgment entered on the verdict of the jury, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

See, also, 165 Cal. 540, 132 Pac. 1021.

Frank H. Short, of Fresno, F. G. Ostrand-er, of Merced, and Edward F. Treadwell, of San Francisco, for appellant. J. C. Campbell, of San Francisco, and James F. Peck, of Oakland, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The proceeding was in eminent domain to acquire the right to divert 500 second feet of water of the San Joaquin river as against certain described riparian lands of defendant. On the first trial it was held that the use shown was not a public use, and a nonsuit was granted, but the judgment was reversed by the Supreme Court. 164 Cal. 221, 128 Pac. 924. The court below also allowed litigation of certain rights to the waters of the San Joaquin other than the riparian right sought to be condemned, and this was likewise held by the Supreme Court to be improper. On the second trial the court submitted to the jury the question whether the use was a public use, and also whether the property was necessary to such use. As to the former the jury disagreed, but found for the defendant on the question of necessity. While the trial court struck out the answers held improper by the Supreme Court, it is claimed by appellant that it allowed one of the defendants to file an amended answer, setting up substantially the same matter—that is, alleged riparian rights of lands other than those described in the complaint, and allowed proof thereof on the trial. The appeal is from the judgment entered on the verdict of the jury.

Many of the points urged by appellant in its opening brief are unnoticed by respondent upon the theory that they are immaterial by virtue of the fact that the finding as to necessity is supported by the evidence. At least some of these questions, however, quite probably affected the jury in its determination that no necessity existed for the condemnation, and for that reason, if for no other, they deserve consideration. For instance, the relation of the question of "public use" to that of "necessity" is aptly suggested by appellant as follows:

"If the jury or any member thereof was of the opinion that the use in question was not a public use, it would certainly vote that the taking of the property was not necessary for a public use, and counsel on the argument admitted that since the jury disagreed on the question as to whether or not the use was a public use, some of the jurors at least who constituted the nine who concurred in the verdict that it was not necessary for a public use must have been of the opinion that it was not in fact a public use."

But, on the former appeal, it was said by the Supreme Court:

"The proof shows that the plaintiff proposes to distribute the water generally to the inhabitants of a very large area of the three counties mentioned chiefly for the irrigation of their lands, and also for domestic uses and for the watering of stock, and incidentally to some towns and villages which have grown up along the routes of its canals. It is one of the largest irrigation enterprises in the state, and serves water to over 150,000 acres of land. We think the use it proposes to make of this water is one for which it is authorized to exercise the right of eminent domain under section 1238" of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] The foregoing declaration of the Supreme Court applies with equal force to the facts revealed on the second trial. As to the public character of the use, therefore, the law was settled by said decision, and the lower court should have so held and declared. Of course, if a different state of facts had been shown or if there had been a substantial or material conflict as to the purpose and extent of said use, the said decision might not be conclusive, but we do not so read the record.

[2] Indeed the statute seems to contemplate that the question as to whether the use is a "public use" is one for the court and not for the jury. The headnote of section 1241 of the Code of Civil Procedure is: "Facts necessary to be found by court before condemnation." Among the facts therein stated is: "1. That the use to which it is to be applied is a use authorized by law." Section 1248, however, provides that "the court, jury or referee" must assess the damages. These headnotes are a part of the law, and should be consulted in interpreting the will of the Legislature. Barnes v. Jones, 51 Cal. 303; Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 16, 16 Pac. 345.

The weight of authority also seems to be in favor of the position that this question is to be determined by the court and not by the jury. In St. Joseph Terminal Co. v. Ry. Co., 94 Mo. 535, 6 S. W. 691, it is said:

"It is open to the trial court, in these proceedings, to condemn property for public use, to determine whether the use sought to be made of the property is really a public use."

Other cases to the same effect from various states are cited by appellant.

Our statute defines, or at least catalogues, the various public uses for which the privilege of eminent domain may be exercised, and whether the facts disclosed by the evidence bring the case within any of these enumerated uses would seem to be a question of law to be resolved by the court. However, as already intimated, in case of a material conflict in the evidence, a mixed question of fact and of law might be presented, to the solution of which the aid of a jury could properly be called.

It is also urged by appellant that the question of necessity was one for the court and not for the jury. It is conceded, however, that the decisions in this state hold to the contrary. Wilmington Canal & Reservoir Co. v. Dominguez, 50 Cal. 505; California Central Railway Co. v. Hooper, 76 Cal.

411, 18 Pac. 599; Spring Valley Waterworks v. Drinkhouse, 92 Cal. 532, 28 Pac. 681; City of Santa Ana v. Goldmacher, 133 Cal. 395, 65 Pac. 883; Central Pacific Ry. Co. v. Feldman, 152 Cal. 303, 92 Pac. 849. Attention is called, however, to the fact that at the time of the earliest decisions section 592 of the Code of Civil Procedure provided as follows:

"An issue of fact must be tried by a jury unless a jury trial is waived, or a reference is ordered, as provided in this Code."

But that section was amended at the session of the Legislature in 1873-74 so as to read:

"In actions for the recovery of specific real or personal property, with or without damages, or for money claimed as due upon contract, * * * or for injuries, an issue of fact must be tried by a jury unless a jury trial is waived, or a reference is ordered as provided in this Code. * * * In other cases, issues of fact must be tried by the court, subject to its power to order any such issue to be tried by a jury, or to be referred to a referee, as provided in this Code."

It is declared by appellant that:

"A proceeding in eminent domain is not one of the specific actions mentioned in the first part of section 592 of the Code of Civil Procedure but is one of the 'other cases' mentioned in the latter part of the section, and which are to be tried by the court and not by the jury. This change in the statute has been apparently overlooked in later decisions, and the decision in the Wilmington Case has been followed without observing that the entire basis of it has been long since removed by this change in the statute."

There is persuasive force in appellant's contention, but we do not feel at liberty to depart from the interpretation of the law as so often made and declared by the Supreme Court.

[3] There is merit, we think, in the claim that the court erred in permitting the defendant to introduce an elaborate scheme of prospective reclamation and irrigation of its lands and in allowing evidence of damage to other lands than those described in the complaint. As pointed out by appellant, by the rulings of the court the defendant was permitted to lay before the jury 7,400 acres of land not described in the complaint, for which it claimed damages in the sum of $250 an acre, amounting to $1,850,000. The issue tendered by the complaint involved simply the riparian right of the land described therein. The necessity for the condemnation of the right and the damage to this particular land, if said right should be taken, were all that concerned the jury. And the damages to this particular land were to be ascertained by deducting from the market value of the land as it existed at the time of the issuance of the summons the market value it would have if deprived of this riparian right. It is manifest that these values would rest largely for their support upon the opinion of qualified witnesses, and the method of proof is simple and familiar. The vast range of inquiry permitted upon this question of damages must have been confusing and disconcerting to the jurors, and, since the comparative cost of acquiring the property, and of cementing the canals so as to prevent seepage, was made an important element in the determination of necessity for the taking, it is believed that said errors were prejudicial.

We do not mean, of course, to say that respondent is without redress for any damage that may be done to other lands by the diversion of the 500 second feet of water, but that question, as we conceive it, is not in this case. It is as important, probably, in a condemnation suit as in any other to confine the trial to the issues involved. The peculiar circumstances of this case, not necessary to detail, seem, indeed, to emphasize the propriety of confining the evidence within the well-defined limits of juridical procedure.

Much time at the trial was devoted to the effort to show that it was practicable and feasible for plaintiff to cement its canal or canals and thereby prevent waste of the water to such extent that the additional 500 second feet would not be required. By the instructions of the court the jury was left free to adopt this theory, and it is quite probable that the verdict reflects this view. It is the contention of respondent that there is no law which determines whether a canal shall be lined to prevent seepage. The question is one of law and of fact. The "public use" does not consist of the canal or conduit, but it does mean the use of the water by the public and the canal is a mere incident to the use. "The law contemplates that water may be conducted by means of canals, ditches, dams, impounding, flumes, aqueducts, and pipes. But whether in one or the other of these the means must be 'reasonably fit' for the purpose to be served." And it is urged that this principle that the means must be reasonably fit for the purpose furnishes the elasticity as to the expense to be incurred in various parts of the state. The law applies alike to all sections, but the facts surrounding the condemnation in each locality will determine the character of the conduit to be required and the amount of expense in its construction that may be exacted. "The conservation of water at great expense under some circumstances would be unreasonable. The waste of water under some circumstances would not be reasonable, and a canal constructed under such circumstances that would permit of waste would not be reasonably fit for its purpose." Respondent contends that condemnation would not be permitted of a large quantity of water when the proposed canal is "reasonably unfit" simply because loss will be unavoidable in the particular canal, that an unfit canal has no right to condemn more water than a reasonably fit canal, and that the question for the jury was what quantity of water would be necessary to supply the public through a "reasonably fit" canal. On the other hand, it is the contention of appellant that:

"The right to condemn water for canals gave plaintiff the right to condemn on behalf of earthen canals and loss by seepage and evaporation is necessarily incident to such canals."

It is claimed that subdivision 3, § 1238, of the Code of Civil Procedure, under which the proceeding was brought, provides that the right of condemnation may be exercised on behalf of "canals, aqueducts, flumes, ditches or pipes," and that this was enacted in 1872 when earthen ditches and canals were practically the only means of carrying water for irrigation, and said section must therefore have contemplated that character of conduit. Barrows v. Fox, 98 Cal. 63, 32 Pac. 811, is quoted, wherein it is said:

"Plaintiffs have the right to divert from the stream a quantity of water sufficient to yield at the place of use the quantity required after the loss by absorption and evaporation of so much thereof as is necessarily so lost in a ditch or flume well constructed and kept in good condition. Ditches and flumes are the usual and ordinary means of diverting water in this state, and parties who have made their appropriations by such means cannot be compelled to substitute iron pipes, though they may be compelled to keep their flumes and ditches in good repair so as to prevent any unnecessary waste."

Middelkamp v. Bessemer I. Co., 46 Colo. 102, 103 Pac. 280, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 801, is also cited, wherein it is held:

"That seepage from an irrigation ditch may be prevented by fluming or cementing the portions where the seepage occurs does not render the ditch without such protection a nuisance to neighboring property."

Neither of said cases involved the exercise of eminent domain, but the principle therein announced would no doubt apply generally to the condemnation of water to be conducted in a canal already constructed. But, after all, the circumstances of a particular case might be such that a court could say that the canal was not "reasonably fit" or "in good repair," unless it were lined with cement or other impervious material. The condition of the soil, the development and progress of the community, the comparative cost of the condemnation, and the proposed improvement of the conduit, and probably other elements, should be considered in determining whether it is reasonable to exact such utilization of the available resources in order to prevent waste. It is difficult to believe that the law would permit extravagant waste of water where it is scarce and valuable if such waste could be prevented by any reasonable and practicable improvement to the canal through which it is distributed and, under some circumstances, it would be fair and just to require such canal to be cemented in order that the water might be utilized to the fullest extent. The rule can be stated only in general terms, of course, and probably respondent's designation of the required canal as "reasonably fit" can be accepted. The general principle is well expressed in Spring Valley Waterworks v. San Mateo Waterworks, 64 Cal. 133, 28 Pac. 447. Therein it was said:

"Unquestionably, where the object of public use is a supply of fresh water, the public have the right to an unstinted supply, and the corporation to whom has been granted the franchise to furnish the supply has the capacity to appropriate private property for that purpose. But its capacity is limited to the real necessity which exists for the appropriation."

The court proceeds to state that by the evidence it appeared that plaintiff had unutilized sources that were available, and that it was entirely practicable for it so to utilize them as to increase the supply to a comparatively unlimited extent, and that it was the duty of plaintiff to do so before taking additional private property. It was also declared that a corporation in charge of such use could not condemn whatever it might find convenient and profitable to acquire, on the ground merely that it might save expense. The principle stated in that case seems no different from the rule contended for by respondent that there should be utilization and conservation of sources of supply and of the supply itself by every means available, practicable, and reasonable. The rule is, of course, elastic, as suggested by respondent. Indeed, it is so elastic that in view of the variant circumstances of different cases the decision in one case may be of little assistance in the determination of another.

But respondent concedes that the question whether the corporation in charge of the public use can be required to cement its canal is one of comparative cost and the question is affected also by the abundance or scarcity of water. It would seem to be a reasonable view that if the damage done to the property owner were trivial or small in comparison with the cost of the improvement to the canal, or if the property owner were not appreciably injured by the delivery of the water through earthen canals, he would be in no position to demand the more expensive and economical method or system. Herein is an additional reason for confining the evidence of damage within proper bounds. If this had been done, it might have appeared, as claimed by appellant, that the remuneration to which respondent was entitled was so small as to render it absurd to contend that appellant should be subjected to the great expense of cementing its waterway.

Again, it is urged by appellant that:

"The evidence in this case shows that during the spring and summer months there is a flow of from 5,000 to 10,000 second feet of water in the San Joaquin river past the swamp and overflowed lands of the defendant, and that that amount of water has constantly flowed during the 40 years during which the defendant has owned the lands. Not a drop of it has ever been diverted or artificially used to irrigate the land, but, so far as the evidence in this case is concerned, flows over and past the land and then to the sea. * * * If the question is to be determined upon any rule of plentifulness of water, we would ask the court if it knows of any place in the state where any greater showing of plentifulness could be shown?"

This consideration is certainly entitled to careful attention if the question of whether the canals should be cemented or otherwise lined is to be submitted at all to the jury. If a sufficient supply of water is available to defendant at a trifling cost that will compensate or more than compensate for the loss of the riparian right in controversy here, the public should not be burdened with the great expense involved in the reconstruction of plaintiff's canals. On the contrary, this improvement should be deferred until the advancing necessities and the increased and increasing appropriation and utilization of the water make such demand reasonable and just.

[4] Appellant indulges in a great deal of criticism as to instructions given and refused. With reference to this feature of the case the general observation may not be inappropriate that the instructions given cover more than 100 pages of the transcript, and if, after being hurriedly led by the court through this maze of intricate and technical law, the jurors emerged with a clear and accurate conception of the essential principles of the case, they are certainly entitled to commendation as men of more than ordinary acumen. It does seem unfortunate that, in a cause involving two or three simple issues, it should be deemed necessary or advisable to request such voluminous and multitudinous instructions. It may be remarked, also, that, in view of the difficult and embarrassing situation presented to the trial court, it would not be strange if some error could be found in the selection by the court of those deemed proper to submit to the jury. We cannot undertake to notice specifically the various assignments of error in that respect. We content ourselves with referring to this instruction given on request of the defendant:

"By diverting a greater quantity of water than 760 cubic feet per second, the plaintiff could acquire no right against the lands of defendant, that are described in the complaint, but plaintiff could acquire, as against other riparian owners, the rights by prescription to take such excess of water. And if the plaintiff did acquire the rights of the other riparian owners by prescription, or otherwise, then the defendant would have a right as between it and plaintiff to use the entire flow of San Joaquin river in excess of said 760 cubic feet per second, and, that too, without regard to the rights of those riparian owners whose rights had been acquired by prescription by the plaintiff."

The occasion for this instruction is stated by appellant to have grown out of the circumstance that the evidence showed that the plaintiff had, for a great many years, been taking and diverting the quantity of water here sought to be taken, and it was argued by the plaintiff that it had already acquired the right to do this against every one except the defendant as to the riparian right described in the complaint. If the instruction had been confined to the said 500 feet, plaintiff could not complain, because it is certainly true that defendant's riparian right to said water could not be adversely affected by plaintiff's prescriptive title as against other riparian owners. Of course, though, it may be said that it should not be necessary to give such an instruction. But the instruction seems quite capable of application to all the water of the stream except the said 760 feet. That would imply that if the plaintiff acquired a prescriptive right to said 500 feet of water as against all other riparian owners except defendant, the latter would have the right to all the balance of the river without regard to the claim of any other riparian owner. That proposition was doubtless not intended, but it may have been so understood by the jury, and it may have been a factor in magnifying the damages to defendant and thereby affecting the theory of comparative cost already adverted to.

Many questions that we have not considered have been discussed by counsel, but it is deemed inadvisable to notice them at this time.

We consider it just that a new trial should be had, and we express the hope that if the cause is tried again a much simpler and shorter record may be made.

The judgment is reversed.

SAN JOAQUIN & KINGS RIVER CANAL & IRRIGATION CO., Inc., v. JAMES J. STEVINSON. (Sac. 2313.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 10, 1915.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇐198—PROCEEDINGS—QUESTIONS FOR COURT AND JURY.

In eminent domain cases, the only question for the jury is the question of compensation, and all other issues are for the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 525, 526, 528, 535-539; Dec. Dig. ⇐198.]

2. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇐198—ACQUISITION OF WATER RIGHTS—WASTE OF WATER—QUESTIONS FOR COURT.

In proceedings to condemn a right to divert water of a stream as against riparian rights, questions whether the water which plaintiff has acquired the right to take is sufficient for its public use, if carried and distributed without unreasonable waste, and whether plaintiff's canal will unreasonably waste the water sought to be condemned, and the quantity necessary for its use, are for the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 525, 526, 528, 535-539; Dec. Dig. ⇐198.]

3. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇐198—COMPENSATION—OBLIGATIONS IMPOSED ON PLAINTIFF.

No unreasonable expense should be imposed on a public service water company seeking to condemn a right to divert water of a stream as against riparian rights, and whether the company should be required to cement its canals to prevent waste by seepage must be determined by the trial court, in view of all the facts.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

On petition to transfer cause to the Supreme Court for rehearing. Denied, and opinion and decision of the District Court of Appeals modified.

For opinion of the District Court of Appeals, see 147 Pac. 254.

Frank H. Short, of Fresno, F. G. Ostrand-er, of Merced, and Edward F. Treadwell, of San Francisco, for appellant. J. C. Campbell, of San Francisco, and James F. Peck, of Oakland, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The petition to transfer this cause to the Supreme Court for a rehearing is denied. The opinion and decision of the District Court of Appeal is, however, modified, in effect, in the following particulars:

[1] In so far as that opinion holds that the issue as to the necessity for the taking of the property sought to be condemned must be submitted to a jury, unless a jury trial thereof is waived, it is erroneous. The rule is that in cases of eminent domain all questions, except those necessary to determine the compensation to be made to the owner for his property taken or damaged, are to be determined by the court. See Vallejo, etc., Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 147 Pac. 238 (Sac. No. 2077), decided March 5, 1915.

[2] This necessarily includes, among the questions triable by the court without a jury, the question whether the plaintiff's canal will unreasonably waste the water to be condemned and the quantity necessary for the use, after allowing for unavoidable waste; also the question whether the water which the plaintiff already has acquired the right to take would be sufficient for its public use, if carried and distributed without unreasonable waste.

[3] There is considerable discussion in the opinion of the district court with respect to the claim of respondent that the plaintiff should be required to cement its canals to prevent waste by seepage. Its purport on this point is not as clear as could be wished. Inasmuch as the case is remanded for a new trial and these questions are thereupon to be determined by the court below, without a jury, we think all of the discussion on that subject would better have been omitted, and we deem it advisable to declare that nothing said about them in the opinion is to be regarded, on the new trial, as the law of the case, and that the court below be left free to decide the case unhampered in this respect. They are questions of fact to be decided in each case upon all the circumstances. No unreasonable expense should be imposed on the public service company.

HADACHECK v. ALEXANDER, Mayor, et al. (L. A. 3456.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 13, 1915.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\hookrightarrow$ 111 — ORDINANCES—VALIDITY—MOTIVES OF MEMBERS OF CITY COUNCIL.

Motives of members of a city council adopting an ordinance regulating an occupation and prohibiting the pursuit thereof in a residential district will not be inquired into in determining the validity of the ordinance, the propriety of which is solely for the council.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 245-256; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 111.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Action by J. C. Hadacheck against George Alexander, Mayor of the City of Los Angeles, and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

G. C. De Garmo and J. W. McKinley, both of Los Angeles (W. R. Millar, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant. Albert Lee Stephens, City Atty., John W. Shenk, and Charles H. Hass, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is an action in which plaintiff sought a judgment in injunction restraining the defendants from putting into operation a certain ordinance of the city of Los Angeles which, for convenience, may be called the "Brickyard Ordinance." He failed to secure the judgment he sought, and prosecutes this appeal from the adverse judgment entered against him.

Under writ of habeas corpus sued out by this appellant the general question of the validity of the ordinance was considered and decided against him. Ex parte Hadacheck, on Habeas Corpus, 165 Cal. 416, 132 Pac. 584. It is contended, however, that the decision on habeas corpus is not conclusive, for the reason that upon this appeal from a civil judgment evidentiary matters may be considered—matters not open for consideration under the writ—and that, giving due consideration to those matters, it will be determined that this ordinance is unreasonable and oppressive, and therefore void. The evidence here referred to is quoted at length in the brief, and consists, for the most part, of the declarations of one of the members of the city council of the city of Los Angeles who voted for the enactment of the ordinance in question. It is contended that the evidence of this councilman shows an ignorance of the actual conditions existing; an ignorance of the very boundaries of the district in which the maintenance of brick making was prohibited; an ignorance of operation of the ordinance upon all those to be affected by its terms and similarly situated to this appellant, sufficient to invalidate the ordinance—the contention herein being that the testimony of this councilman leads to the conviction that, at the instigation of some individuals, an ill-digested ordinance was hastily prepared and passed, to meet their complaints. It is, however, the general, if not the universal, rule that the motive of the legislator may not be inquired into. His conduct is to be judged by the expression which it takes in the enactment adopted, and, as was said in Ex parte Hadacheck, supra, 165 Cal. 420, 132 Pac. 586:

"Whether or not this trade, however strictly the manner of its conduct may be regulated, can be pursued at all in a residential district without causing undue annoyance to persons living in the district, is certainly a question upon which reasonable minds may differ. If this be so, the propriety of entirely prohibiting the occupation within such districts is one for the legislative determination. The courts will not substitute their judgment upon this issue for that of the legislative body."

Wherefore the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

MORRISON v. LAND et al. (Sac. 2259.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 6, 1915.)

1. WILLS $\hookrightarrow$ 58—AGREEMENTS TO MAKE.

One may make a valid contract with another to devise or bequeath property by his last will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 164, 165; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 58.]

2. WILLS $\hookrightarrow$ 67 — AGREEMENTS TO MAKE — BREACH.

In event of breach of a contract to devise or bequeath, the party damaged has an action at law for the damage, and in special cases may maintain a suit in equity for specific performance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 175-177; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 67.]

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS $\hookrightarrow$ 224—PRESENTATION OF CLAIMS—NECESSITY.

Where an agreement to give by will is breached, and the party damaged is restricted to an action at law, he is a creditor, having a claim against the estate arising upon contract, within Code Civ. Proc. § 1490 et seq., requiring presentation of such claims to the executor, administrator, and judge, and, in the absence of such presentation, cannot recover.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 768-788; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 224.]

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS $\hookrightarrow$ 443—ACTIONS AGAINST—COMPLAINT.

A complaint in an action for damages for breach of contract to give by will must allege presentation of the claim to the executor or administrator.

5. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE $\hookrightarrow$ 86—RIGHT TO SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

As specific performance of a contract will be granted only where the legal remedy is inadequate, specific performance of a contract to make a money bequest by a will in consideration of plaintiff's continuing to act as assistant manager of deceased's hotel cannot be had; for the legal action for damages affords complete relief.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 223, 224; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 86.]

6. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE 4—RIGHT TO—STATUTE.

Civ. Code, § 3384, which, as originally enacted, declared that, except as otherwise provided in the article, specific performance of a contract might be compelled, and further provided that, when the act to be done was such that pecuniary compensation for nonperformance would not afford adequate relief, specific performance could be had. The section was later amended by striking out the latter provision. Held, that the amendment did not change the law so as to allow specific performance of an obligation where an action for damages afforded complete relief.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. § 4; Dec. Dig. 4.]

7. PLEADING 34 — CONSTRUCTION — PRESUMPTIONS.

It will be presumed that the complaint stated plaintiff's cause of action as favorably as possible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 5½, 66-74; Dec. Dig. 34.]

8. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE 128 — RELIEF AWARDED—DAMAGES.

While monetary relief will be afforded where, through no fault of plaintiff, specific performance of a contract is impossible, such relief will not be granted where plaintiff sued to specifically enforce a contract for breach of which an action for damages afforded an adequate remedy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 412-419; Dec. Dig. 128.]

9. APPEAL AND ERROR 195 — PRESENTATION OF GROUNDS IN COURT BELOW—NECESSITY.

Where a demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and the suit dismissed, plaintiff, not having raised the question below, cannot contend on appeal that the trial court abused its discretion in not allowing leave to amend.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1149; Dec. Dig. 195.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Suit by Alexander W. Morrison against Frank Land, executor of William Land, deceased, and others. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. A. Gett, of Sacramento, for appellant. Wm. V. Cowan, Clyde H. Brand, R. T. McKisick, and White, Miller, Needham & Harber, all of Sacramento, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is an action against the executors and executrix of the will of William Land, deceased, and the devisees and legatees under such will, to specifically enforce an alleged contract between plaintiff and the deceased, by which deceased obligated himself to bequeath to plaintiff by his will the sum of $50,000. Demurrers to the complaint on the ground, among others, that the same does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, were sustained, without leave to amend. We have here an appeal by plaintiff from such judgment.

The case stated by the complaint, so far as material, is substantially as follows: From the year 1870 to a time not definitely alleged, but, according to a recital, extending over a period of 40 years, deceased was engaged in conducting a large hotel and hotel business in the city of Sacramento, known as the Western Hotel, and during all of said time plaintiff was in the employ of deceased "as the chief clerk, accountant, bookkeeper, and business confidant" of deceased "in the management and operation of said hotel, hotel business, and all and other sundry business connected with the above-mentioned business," and, during the absence of deceased, as his representative and in the capacity of assistant manager of said business. During all of said time the services of plaintiff were in all respects satisfactory to deceased. During all said time plaintiff and deceased resided at said Western Hotel, associated together, and "sustained each toward the other relations of mutual respect, confidence, and trust." The business was prosperous, yielding to deceased a profit approximately of $30,000 each year. While plaintiff was so in the employ of deceased he received offers of similar employment in and about hotels in Sacramento and San Francisco at a higher compensation "from time to time" from "divers and sundry persons." Nothing more definite is stated as to these offers. Plaintiff communicated the fact of these offers, as made, to deceased. For the purpose of inducing plaintiff to continue in his employ, deceased agreed with plaintiff that:

"If he (said plaintiff) would remain with him, * * * and thereafter attend to, render, and perform at his said Western Hotel, such services as he (plaintiff) was then performing for" said deceased, "so long as he * * * owned or conducted said Western Hotel, that he * * * would by his last will and testament devise and bequeath to plaintiff the sum of $50,000."

It is impossible to ascertain from the complaint anything about when this agreement was made. Plaintiff relied upon this promise, consented to so remain in the employ of deceased, and did so remain until deceased "retired from the management, conducting, and ownership of said Western Hotel." There is no information in the complaint as to how long after the agreement this retirement occurred. Deceased died testate on or about December 30, 1911, leaving estate of the value of about $2,000,000, all of which was acquired while plaintiff was in said employ. The debts and expenses of administration will not exceed $100,000. A paper purporting to be his last will has been admitted to probate as such. All the defendants are named in this paper as devisees or legatees. It nowhere appears in the complaint that plaintiff was not also named as a legatee. It is alleged that by reason of refusing said offers of employment from others at higher compensation, and remaining in the employ of deceased, plaintiff "has suffered great and irreparable injury and damage which cannot be compensated except" by a decree for the specific performance of the agreement. It is also alleged that each of the defendants denies and repudiates all rights of plaintiff in and to the money mentioned, and threatens to cause to have distributed to themselves as legatees and devisees the entire estate, and that the executors and executrix, unless restrained, will pay over and deliver to the defendants all the residue of the estate. There is no allegation that any claim for this money was ever presented to the executors and executrix of the will for allowance, nor any allegation other than as above stated, tending to show that the consideration of the alleged contract was just, reasonable or adequate.

As is urged by respondents, it is nowhere alleged in the complaint that deceased did not provide for the promised legacy in his will. No breach of the contract is alleged, without which, of course, plaintiff could not be entitled to relief of any kind. However, passing this and other objections made to the complaint, we will consider the main question presented by this appeal.

[1-4] There is no dissent in the authorities from the proposition that one may make a valid contract with another to devise or bequeath property by his last will in a certain specified way. It is clear that in the event of a breach of such a contract the party damaged has an action at law for the damage caused by such breach of the promisor, and in some cases this, by reason of the circumstances, may be his only remedy, for a resort to any equitable remedy can be had only where the circumstances are such as to make the case one within the well-settled principles relative to the proper exercise of equitable jurisdiction.

Where the party damaged is restricted to his remedy at law for the breach, he must necessarily proceed upon the theory that he is a "creditor" of the deceased, having a "claim against the estate" "arising upon contract," within the meaning of those words as used in our probate law, and he is subject to the provisions of our statutes requiring presentation of claims to the executor or administrator and judge. Code Civ. Proc. § 1490 et seq. In the absence of such presentation, such a claim, by express provision of the statute, is forever barred. While, owing to the nature of the contract before us, a final breach cannot be regarded as occurring until the death of the deceased, the breach was committed by the deceased, and the liability on account thereof is his. There is no decision in this state that is contrary to this view. Expressions in some opinions which, when detached from their context and considered alone, might appear to give some support to a contention that such a claim need not be so presented, furnish no such support when considered in connection with the question under discussion. On the other hand, it was substantially stated in Etchas

v. Orena, 127 Cal. 588, 60 Pac. 45, that it is essential to an action for breach of contract to compensate one for services by making provision in such person's favor in a will that a claim against the estate be presented, that no claim could exist against the estate in such case except one founded upon the fact that such services were performed and no provision made in the will for compensation, and that the particulars of the claim should be stated. It is well settled that, where presentation of a claim against the estate is essential, a complaint which does not aver that the claim has been presented fails to state a cause of action. Burke v. Maguire, 154 Cal. 462, 98 Pac. 21; Morse v. Steele, 149 Cal. 305, 86 Pac. 693. The complaint here contains no allegation as to the presentation of a claim by plaintiff to the executors and executrix, and it is not suggested that it could truthfully have been amended to show such a presentation. The claim of counsel is that it was not necessary to present a claim. It has been held that, where services have been performed in pursuance of a contract to leave property by will to the one rendering the service, and the promisor fails to comply with the agreement, a recovery may be had at law against his estate for the reasonable value of the services. See Cyc. 1069. Of course, in such a case presentation of the claim would be essential. Manifestly, for this defect, if for no other, the complaint must be held to be fatally defective, unless the facts stated therein entitle plaintiff to equitable relief.

[5] It is settled that courts of equity, to use the language of Pomeroy, "will under special circumstances, enforce a contract to make a will, or to make a certain testamentary disposition, * * * not by ordering a will to be made, but by regarding the property in the hands of the heirs, devisees, assignees, or representatives of the deceased promisor, as impressed with a trust in favor of the plaintiff, and by compelling defendant, who must, of course, belong to some one of these classes of persons, to make such a disposition of the property as will carry out the intent of the agreement." McCabe v. Healy, 138 Cal. 81, 84, 70 Pac. 1008. (The italics are ours.) What are the "special circumstances" that warrant a resort to equity? We think it may safely be asserted that in the hundreds of cases to be found in the reports in which this doctrine has been considered none can be found to support appellant's claim that the circumstances of this case are such as to entitle him to relief in equity.

Passing without discussion other requisites, it is elementary that where, as here, the primary right of a party is legal in its nature, as distinguished from equitable, and one for which the law affords some remedy, as here damages by way of compensation for breach of contract, a proper exercise of the equitable jurisdiction will not give equitable relief in any case where the legal remedy is full and adequate and does complete justice. No principle of equitable jurisprudence is more firmly established than this. 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 221. For instance, the exclusive jurisdiction of equity to grant relief by way of specific performance of a contract will be exercised only in those cases where the legal remedy of compensatory damages is insufficient under the circumstances of the case, in the opinion of the court, to do complete justice between the parties. The fact that in applying this doctrine courts of equity have established the further rule that, in general, the legal remedy of damages is inadequate in all agreements for the sale or letting of land does not interfere with this rule. In so far as cases of the character of the one before us are concerned, the very basis of the granting of equitable relief is the conclusion in view of the circumstances of the particular case that full and adequate compensation cannot be had at law. Certainly no case has been cited to us, and we know of none, in which such relief has been given where it was apparent that full and adequate compensation can be given at law. Everything that has been said by this court is in accord with this view. In Owens v. McNally, 113 Cal. 444, 45 Pac. 710, 33 L. R. A. 369, it was said:

"But in such cases the reason for the interposition of equity is quite obvious. Plaintiff has rendered service of extraordinary and exceptional character, such service as, in contemplation of the parties, was not to be compensated for in money, and, as in contemplation of law, cannot be compensated for in money; therefore by no action at law could a plaintiff be restored to his original position. It would be in the nature of a fraud upon him to deny him any relief, and, the law failing by reason of its universality, equity, to promote justice, makes good its imperfections." (The italics are ours.)

And in Flood v. Templeton, 148 Cal. 374, 83 Pac. 148, where such relief was denied because plaintiff's remedy at law was adequate, it was said:

"Equity, it is true, does entertain contracts for specific performance to convey the whole or any portion of the promisor's property by will, but it decrees such performance: First, only upon clear proof of fairness, justness, and adequacy, * * *; and, second, it does so only where the plaintiff cannot be compensated in money. These cases usually arise where the service is of some extraordinary nature which cannot be, and in the contemplation of the parties was never expected to be, paid for in money, as where home ties are broken," etc.

And, quoting from Owens v. McNally, supra, the court further said:

"Specific performance * * * will be decreed only when no other adequate relief is available to plaintiff."

And also:

"The jurisdiction of a court of equity to decree specific performance does not * * * depend at all upon the question whether the contract relates to real or personal property, but altogether upon the question whether the breach complained of cannot be adequately compensated in damages. If it can, the action has no place in a court of equity, and the plaintiff's remedy is strictly in law. * * * So it will be found that in all of the cases in which specific performance of these agreements to leave property by will has been decreed by the courts, there has been present the element of peculiar personal services, fully performed and incapable of compensation in money."

[6] There is no force in plaintiff's contention that the rule in this respect has been changed in this state by an amendment of section 3384 of the Civil Code. That section as originally enacted in 1872, in addition to providing, as it does now, that, "except as otherwise provided in this article, specific performance of an obligation may be compelled," contained four subdivisions stating instances in which such relief would be granted, and the second of these subdivisions read: "When the act to be done is such that pecuniary compensation for its nonperformance would not afford adequate relief." This section was amended in 1874 by striking out all of these four subdivisions. There is no provision in the article in terms precluding the relief of specific performance in the case of such a contract as the one before us, even though pecuniary compensation would afford adequate relief. Neither is there any provision in terms precluding such relief as to any obligation to pay money. If counsel's claim in this behalf be correct, the effect of the amendment is to authorize a decree of specific performance of the obligation of the maker of a promissory note or any other obligation to pay money. Of course, no such intent as that claimed can be attributed to the amendment. The reason for the amendment apparently was that it was deemed unwise to attempt to specify by statute all the particular circumstances under which such relief might be granted, and it was thought best to provide simply that it could always be granted, except as otherwise provided in the article. But this obviously was not intended to dispense with the fundamental requirement that the law does not afford an adequate remedy. That section simply means that specific performance of an obligation may be compelled in any case where the circumstances are such as to authorize such relief under the well-settled doctrines of equity jurisprudence, except as otherwise provided in the article. Over and over again since such amendment was made, this court has said that inadequacy of any remedy at law is absolutely essential to the granting of a decree of specific performance. The only intimation to the contrary that we have been referred to, or have found, is in the opinion in Shannon v. Cavanaugh, 12 Cal. App. 434, 107 Pac. 574, decided by the District Court of Appeal of the Second District. No application for a hearing in this court was made in that case. We cannot follow or approve any intimation in the opinion in that case to the effect that, under our Code as it now stands, specific performance may be decreed notwithstanding the plaintiff can be fully compensated at law. It was held in that case, passing the suggestion we have referred to, that the circumstances were such as to require the conclusion that there was no complete remedy at law.

There is absolutely nothing in Glock v. Howard, etc., Co., 123 Cal. 1, 55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17, or Johnston v. Blanchard, 16 Cal. App. 321, 116 Pac. 973, in conflict with the views we have expressed. These cases simply recognize the rule prescribed in this state by section 3389 of the Civil Code that a contract otherwise proper to be specifically enforced will be so enforced, notwithstanding it contains a provision declaring the amount which shall be presumed to be the amount of damage sustained by reason of a breach, or one for a penalty in the event of nonperformance. Where this is the situation, if the circumstances are such as to make the case a proper one for specific performance, the party may waive his stipulated damages and maintain his action in equity. But the rule does not render a contract one as to which specific performance will be decreed simply because it contains a provision for liquidated damages, which appears to be the logical effect of plaintiff's contention.

[7] Surely there can be no doubt upon the question whether plaintiff had a full and adequate remedy at law. It is to be presumed that plaintiff has stated his case in his complaint as favorably to himself as he can. As the same is described therein, there was nothing extraordinary or peculiar in the nature of the service to be rendered by plaintiff for deceased. At best, he was the assistant manager of the hotel business of deceased conducted at the Western Hotel in Sacramento, and was a faithful and efficient employé of deceased, having his absolute confidence. The services that he was rendering were services that could be, and in the contemplation of the parties were to be, compensated in money. He was rendering those services at a stipulated rate of compensation in money. Being offered similar employment at various times by others, at a greater compensation, deceased asked him to continue in his employ, performing the same service that he had hitherto performed, at the same compensation, agreeing with him that, if he would so remain as long as he (deceased) continued in such hotel business, he (deceased) would make a bequest to him in his will of $50,000. He was to receive $50,000 in money from the estate of deceased if the latter performed his contract. An ordinary action at law for breach of the contract would bring him the very thing to which he is entitled under the allegations of his complaint—afford him full and adequate relief. In such an action the measure of damages would have been the value of the property agreed to be bequeathed, for that was the amount in which he was damaged by the breach. See 40 Cyc. 1073. Attorneys for respondents pertinently ask:

"Is a decree in equity ordering payment of a sum of money from the estate to plaintiff any more perfect and complete justice to him than a common-law judgment in his favor and against the estate for a like sum?"

A clearer case of adequacy of remedy at law could not be made than that presented here. The situation is such as to absolutely preclude resort to equity.

It thus appears that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to entitle plaintiff to any relief, legal or equitable. It fails to show him entitled to any equitable relief for the reason we have just discussed. It fails to show him entitled to recover at law, in view of the want of an allegation showing presentation of his claim to the executors and judge for allowance.

[8] It is true, as said by counsel for plaintiff, that monetary relief will be given as an alternative for the specific performance to which a plaintiff is really entitled, where, through no fault of his, specific performance cannot be decreed. But manifestly that rule has no application here, where plaintiff has no right to specific performance. It is only where the beneficiary of a promise to make a will has a right to specific performance that the property of the deceased in the hands of the heirs, devisees, and legatees is regarded as impressed with a trust in his favor, and no monetary relief can be awarded here, as suggested, upon the theory of breach of trust.

For the reasons we have stated, the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and it is unnecessary to discuss other reasons urged by defendants.

[9] In his closing brief, filed in lieu of oral argument, counsel for plaintiff for the first time contends that the lower court was guilty of an abuse of discretion in "refusing leave to amend" the complaint, after demurrer sustained. The transcript shows simply that an order was made July 19, 1913, sustaining the demurrer without leave to plaintiff to amend, and that on December 20, 1913, judgment was given dismissing the action. There is nothing to show or even intimate that plaintiff ever asked leave to amend or that he desired to amend. It appears to be the settled rule in this state that it is too late to make such a point for the first time in this court, when nothing appears in the record to show an abuse of discretion on the part of the lower court. Buckley v. Howe, 86 Cal. 596, 600, 25 Pac. 132; Robertson v. Burrell, 110 Cal. 568, 579, 42 Pac. 1086; Durrell v. Dooner, 119 Cal. 411, 413, 51 Pac. 628; Prince v. Lamb, 128 Cal. 130, 60 Pac. 689. Certainly no abuse of discretion is shown or suggested by the record before us. The allegations of the complaint are such as to make it reasonably certain that the pleading could not have been amended truthfully so as to make it state a cause of action. If plaintiff thought otherwise, he should have applied to the court below for leave to amend. The judgment is affirmed.

Ex parte STANTON. (Cr. 1870.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 13, 1915.)

1. PRISONS $\hookrightarrow$ 15—GOOD CONDUCT—REDUCTION OF TERM—BOARD OF PRISON DIRECTORS—PROCEDURE.

In determining whether a paroled prisoner, by violation of the conditions of his parole, has forfeited his good conduct credits, the board of prison directors is not required to proceed with the formality required of courts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prisons, Cent. Dig. § 26; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 15.]

2. HABEAS CORPUS $\hookrightarrow$ 92—SCOPE OF REVIEW—EVIDENCE.

In reviewing on habeas corpus the action of the board of prison directors in determining whether a prisoner on parole has forfeited his right to good conduct credits on his sentence, the court will not consider the sufficiency of the evidence on which the board acted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. §§ 81, 83, 87–96; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 92.]

3. PRISONS $\hookrightarrow$ 15—REDUCTION OF TERM—FORFEITURE OF CREDITS—MISCONDUCT ON PAROLE—PRISON RULES.

Under Pen. Code, § 1588, providing that every convict who shall commit no infraction of the rules, etc., shall be allowed deduction from his term of certain periods according to the length of his sentence, and providing that a convict violating the prison rules shall forfeit such credits as to the board of directors may seem just, and under St. 1901, p. 82, providing that the state board of prison directors may establish rules and regulations under which prisoners may be allowed to go upon parole outside of the prison while remaining in the legal custody, and under the control of the state board of prison directors, a convict on parole was within the custody of the board of prison directors, so that his violation of the rules regarding his conduct was a violation of the prison rules, and justified the board in declaring a forfeiture of his time credits.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prisons, Cent. Dig. § 26; Dec. Dig. $\hookrightarrow$ 15.]

In Bank. Application for habeas corpus by W. J. Stanton against James A. Johnson, Warden of the State Prison. Discharged.

Arthur L. Shannon, of Sacramento, for petitioner. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Robert W. Harrison, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHAW, J. The petitioner was committed to the state prison at San Quentin on February 5, 1896, under a sentence of 25 years for murder of the second degree. Under the statute providing for credits to prisoners upon the time of their sentence allowed for good behavior, the petitioner, if allowed the statutory credits, would have been entitled to his release on May 5, 1911. The prison authorities are holding him in custody upon the claim that by reason of his misconduct he has forfeited his credits, and that such forfeiture has been declared by the order of the board duly and regularly made.

The statute relating to prisoners' credits was first enacted in 1889 (Stats. 1889, p. 410), and has since been incorporated in the Penal Code as section 1588. Its provisions material here are as follows:

"Every convict who shall have no infraction of the rules and regulations of the prison, or laws of the state, recorded against him, and who performs in a faithful, orderly, and peaceable manner the duties assigned to him, shall be allowed from his term, instead and in lieu of the credits heretofore allowed by law, a deduction of" certain periods arranged according to the number of years of sentence.

"Each convict shall be held entitled to these deductions, unless the board of directors shall find that for misconduct or other cause he should not receive them. But if any convict shall commit any assault upon his keeper, or any foreman, officer, convict, or person, or otherwise endanger life, or shall be guilty of any flagrant disregard of the rules of the prison, or commit any misdemeanor, or in any manner violate any of the rules and regulations of the prison, he shall forfeit all deductions of time earned by him for good conduct before the commission of such offense, or that, under this section, he may earn in the future, or shall forfeit such part of such deductions as to the board of directors may seem just; such forfeiture, however, shall be made only by the board of directors after due proof of the offense and notice to the offender; nor shall any forfeiture be imposed when a party has violated any rule or rules without violence or evil intent, of which the directors shall be the sole judges."

The law authorizing the parole of convicts was enacted in 1893 and amended in 1901 (Stats. 1901, 82). This amendment was the law in force when the credits in controversy were forfeited. It empowered the state board of prison directors "to establish rules and regulations" under which the board could allow a prisoner "to go upon parole outside of the buildings and inclosures, but to remain while on parole in the legal custody and under the control of the state board of prison directors, and subject at any time to be taken back within the inclosure of said prison." It also gave said board "full power to make and enforce such rules and regulations and retake and imprison any convict so upon parole."

In November, 1903, the petitioner, by an order of the board, was allowed to go on parole. In October, 1905, he was retaken, brought before the board, and charged with a "violation of the terms of his parole." To this charge he pleaded guilty, and thereupon the board adjudged that all credits earned and to be earned by him were forfeited, and he was retained in the prison. In December, 1910, the warden made a report regarding him, recommending that he be again paroled, in pursuance of which he was allowed to go on parole again on July 1, 1911. Thereafter, on October 22, 1912, he was again charged with a violation of his parole, whereupon, after due hearing, he pleaded guilty, his parole was revoked, and his credits, earned and to be earned, were declared forfeited. The charge against him in this instance was "drinking intoxicating liquors and entering a saloon."

The rules and regulations of the board regarding the parole of prisoners provided that any paroled prisoner should be liable to be "retaken and again confined within the prison for any violation of the conditions of his parole," and that for any such violation, or for any violation of these rules, he should forfeit all or any part of his credits at the sole discretion of the board. One of the conditions of the parole in his case was that he should "under no circumstances enter into a drinking saloon where liquor is either sold or given away."

[1, 2] It must be conceded, of course, that the proceedings and orders of the board of prison directors were very informal, and perhaps not such as would be required in the case of court proceedings. But it is settled that the board is not required to proceed with the formality required of the courts. Its functions are primarily administrative. The essential thing is the existence of the jurisdictional facts; not the recital of their existence in the records of the board. The courts will not, on habeas corpus, consider the sufficiency of the evidence on which the board acted or hold their proceedings invalid, if the offense charged is one which can fairly be considered as embraced within the provisions of the statute applying to the forfeiture of credits. Ex parte Knowlton, 136 Cal. 107, 68 Pac. 480. We think the records above referred to are sufficient to show clearly the nature of the charge made against the petitioner and the action of the board thereon, and are sufficient to justify his detention if the offense charged was of a character which was embraced within the statutory provisions.
